Darwin's theory of evolution is not a theory of random chance, it is a theory of random mutation plus non-random cumulative natural selection. Why can't creationists take comfort in the probability that the Creator works by influencing the non-random natural selection? They can't sensibly deny that living things change over long periods of time covering many generations. For example, medieval suits of armor prove that warriors were much smaller then. Whether the change is attributable to diet improvement, reduction of childhood diseases that inhibit growth, racial admixture, or genetic mutations, is arguable. But that change occurred is not open to question.

Somewhere the Bible suggests that a thousand years is but an instant to the Creator. If so, then He or She would not view evolutionary development as glacially slow, even if we mortals do.

Abutter backs ConCom decision

To the Editor:

I recently read an article written in the Cohasset Mariner and published Sept. 2, pertaining to the Nader family's plight of losing their dream home! As an abutting neighbor, I am very familiar with the scenario being played out. I, along with several neighbors, have also attended the meetings held between the Naders and the Conservation Commission.

Although I feel very badly for the Naders that they have not been able to make headway on the building of their dream home, I wish to have it known to residents of the town of Cohasset, that they have not been in attendance at these meetings, that several of the statements made by Mr. Nader against the town have been out of line; for example "Conservation Commission has been unwilling to work with them to find a reasonable compromise."

The Commission denied the project based on the Cohasset Wetlands Protection Bylaw, pure and simple. Mr. Nader decided to take the law into his own hands, and although the project had been suspended, called his contractors in to continue building while a "work stop order" had been issued. Mr. Nader forced the hand(s) that could have helped him resolve some of his issues.

He continually pleaded "ignorance" to what he had been led to believe by "professional advisers" as being good information. He may have been led astray, but it certainly hasn't been by the Conservation Commission. They

Join League of Women Voters

The Hingham League of Women Voters is inviting Cohasset residents interested in regional issues which affect both towns to join its local chapter. This membership drive is open to Cohasset residents of voting age, who are U.S. citizens. The League welcomes both men and women and offers family memberships.

The League encourages political participation through voter registration drives and studies on the local, state and national level. Past studies have focused on environmental policy, transportation, special education, recycling and trash disposal issues.

The League sponsors local and regional candidates nights, always popular and informative events. These nights afford political candidates a forum to give their views on issues in a non-partisan setting.

For more information about joining, or rejoining the Hingham League, call Helga Jorgensen at 749-4826.

have been up front and honest with him, and have indeed tried to resolve issues to make this work for everyone.

I personally take exception to Mr. Nader's comment that, "when I win in the end, it's the taxpayers of this town who are going to pay." Thank heavens, we have a board of commissioners, may they be Conservation, Health, Building, etc., who have the entire town's integrity and best interest in mind, and not fall prey to people who feel they are the exception to the rules.

In the article, Mrs. Nader's comment that, "I can't believe all this has happened over issues that really aren't all that important," obviously just doesn't get it! Cohasset is a nice town, because there are rules and bylaws that make and keep it so!

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on two roll calls from Seante sessions during consideration of the fiscal 2000 state budget. The House and Senate have yet to agree on a compromise version of the spending plan. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.
COUNTY GOVERNMENT(S 1818) Senate 39-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill making several changes in the recent legislative action abolishing Middlesex, Worcester, Hampden, Berkshire, Essex and Hampshire counties. Provisions include transferring county employees and retirees, including their unfunded pension liability, to the state retirement system; authorizing cities and towns in abolished counties to form regional councils of government in order to deliver regional services to those communities; and mandating protection of employees following county government abolition. Supporters said the bill will help facilitate the abolition of county government and still allow communities to band together to purchase regional services at a lower cost. They noted the bill also protects employees and retirees by ensuring they do not lose any benefits or rights. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y
CAPITAL BUDGET(S 1820) Senate 38-0, approved a $457.8 million capital supplemental spending package. Provisions include $274 million for state road and bridge projects; $50 million for local road and bridge projects; $12.5 million for matching grants to local communities and nonprofit organizations for the preservation of historical properties; and $30 million for local library projects. The package also allows the state to refinance some of its current debt by authorizing the state treasurer to pay off older higher interest state bonds and issue new ones at lower rates. Supporters said this fiscally responsible package will use part of the state's surplus to fund necessary road, bridge and other one-time projects across the state without borrowing money and incurring interest costs. They also noted that refinancing some of the state's debt will save millions of dollars. The House and Senate later agreed on a compromise version of this bill and Governor Cellucci, after vetoing several sections, signed it into law. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y

Midnight in Tommy Menino's Boston

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

About 50 or 60 years ago, a president named Franklin Delano Roosevelt changed Thanksgiving Day from the fourth Thursday in November to the third.

"It's for the war effort," FDR used to say, which was official Washington's version of what the waitress at Howard Johnson's told you if you asked for another pat of butter - "Don't you know there's a war on?"

The new Thanksgiving date went over like a lead balloon with the public and we soon went back to eating turkey and cranberry sauce and playing football on the day that was ordained by a higher authority.

Now, I see by the papers that Boston's Mayor Tommy Menino is planning to tamper with the millennium.

Tommy has decreed that the year 2000 will begin officially in Boston at 7 p.m., Dec. 31, 1999, which coincides precisely with the midnight start of the millennium in Greenwich, England, where it all starts.

What it all means is that celebrants of the new millennium in Boston can toot their last horn, down their last martini (straight up with an olive) and be safely home in bed by the time the ball starts to fall in Times Square in New York.

"We'll be marking the millennium when it's midnight in Greenwich, according to Greenwich Mean Time, which is the universally accepted standard of time for the world." said His Honor.

Greenwich was chosen to be the earth's official timesetter more than 100 years ago when the world was first divided into time zones, mostly to explain why those new fangled railroad trains were always late.

As any jet setter knows, there's a five hour difference between time in Greenwich and Boston, which can cause unsuspected problems. Will the bars close five hours early on Dec, 31 in Boston? And what if they do?

Your serious Boston reveler will still have an opportunity to catch the 9 o'clock shuttle to the Big Apple and resume his reveling in Times Square, scarcely missing a toot on his horn or an olive in his martini.

At least Tommy's announcement the other day that he was changing the millennium from midnight to 7 o'clock has taken some of the heat off what promised to be an exciting feud between the Maine towns of Lubec and Bar Harbor.

For years, Lubec, a town of 1,800 working stiffs, has billed itself as the "easternmost town in America" and therefore the first in the United States to see the dawn of a new day from the peak of 210-foot Porcupine Mountain.

Then, the U. S. Naval Observatory ruled that the first spot to see the sunrise in these parts is the top of 1,530-foot Cadillac Mountain 60 miles west in Bar Harbor, playtime home of the rich and famous,

Lubec asked for a recount and, lo and behold, it came out a dead tie. The sunrise will hit Cadillac Mountain and Porcupine Mountain at exactly the same time - 7:04 a.m. EST, on Jan. 1, 2000.

Of course by that time the millennium will be 11 hours and 56 minutes old in Tommy Menino's Boston.

Coffee with the authors at Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books & Toys presents its fall "Coffee with the Authors" Tuesday, Oct. 19, from 10 to 11:30 a.m. at Atlantica in Cohasset, featuring authors Elinor Lipman (The Ladies' Man), Lauren Wolk (Those Who Favor Fire), and Linda Greenlaw (The Hungry Ocean).

Lipman (Inn at Lake Devine, Isabel's Bed) delights again with the wryly comedic "The Ladies' Man," the story of three middle-aged sisters who, after 30 years, find themselves confronted by the charming and still roving bachelor who had jilted one of them to find his fortune in California. Wolk turned a small news item about coal fires burning underground into her debut novel, "Those Who Favor Fire." As a mine fire burns below the surface, Belle Haven above struggles to hold onto the life she has known, the community bound to its homes like protagonist Rachel Hearn. The demanding life of commercial fishing is brought to life in Greenlaw's book, "The Hungry Ocean." Captain of the swordfishing boat, Hannah Boden, sister ship to the ill-fated Andrea Gail, she outlines the heavy responsibility of the captain to deal with weather, equipment failure, exhaustion and sullen crew members, to satisfy the ship's owner with a large catch.

Coffee: 9:30 a.m.; Program: 10 a.m. Reservations are required. Call Buttonwood at (781) 383-2665 to reserve tickets at $12 per person.

Early detection guidelines for breast cancer

One day there may be a single method for early detection of breast cancer. Until then, using a combination of methods will increase your chances of detecting cancer in an early stage. Here is your personal checklist for breast cancer detection.

- Mammography for all women who are age 40 or older.
- A regular breast exam by a health professional.
- Monthly breast self-examination.
- Personal alertness for changes in the breasts.
- Readiness to discuss quickly any such changes with a doctor.

The above guidelines are recommended by the National Cancer Institute. Women must take responsibility for their own health. A family history of breast cancer makes it even more important to discuss prevention with your doctor. A doctor's order is not necessary to have a mammogram but ask your doctor what he/she would recommend in your case and cooperate with the doctor in planning your health care. Women must inform themselves with the facts and be ready to take charge of their health maintenance and prevention programs.

The Mobile Diagnostics Inc. Mammography Van will be at the Cohasset Town Hall parking lot Saturday, Oct. 9, from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. For an appointment call the Social Service League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

Flu clinics slated

The Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health have scheduled the following annual flu clinics in October.

Senior flu clinics are Tuesday, Oct. 12 from 10 a.m. to noon at the Second Congregational Church and Friday, Oct. 15 from 10 a.m. to noon at Harborview Housing.

Town flu clinics for residents of Cohasset are Saturday, Oct. 16 from 10 a.m. to noon at the Cohasset Town Hall; Saturday, Oct. 23, from 10 a.m. to noon at the Cohasset Town Hall; and Tuesday, Oct. 26 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the Cohasset Town Hall.

Architects to provide school cost projections

vanced age of the school buildings.

"The buildings have outlived their useful lives," Raymond said.

In addition to providing cost estimates for the school renovation options, Walters and Raymond will also provide their opinions on the chances for state reimbursement for each option at the Oct. 7 school committee meeting.

The state may fund 60 percent of the renovations, but only if the school district can demonstrate that those renovations fulfill one of two criteria. The renovations must fulfill specified program goals or must be done in order to meet the additional demand caused by increased enrollment.

In other words, simply performing renovations to the infrastructure of both schools will almost certainly disqualify the project from receiving state reimbursement. To satisfy the demands of increased enrollment and to allow the district to enhance its educational program, an addition will to one or both schools seems to be a necessity.

According to enrollment projections, the number of students in grades 7 and 8 will increase from 180 in school year 1999-2000 to 251 in school year 2007-2008. Cohasset Middle High School principal Curtis Collins wondered aloud how his building could handle that increased enrollment.

"Where are we going to put the kids?" he asked rhetorically. "This town has always been extremely concerned with class size and that will be an issue when we have 220 [students in grades 7 and 8], 225, 230... We'll have to deal with that question and these are issues that aren't just seven years away. They're much closer than that."

If only infrastructure renovations were to take place at the middle high school, Collins said music would have to be eliminated as part of the daily program by 2007 because both music rooms would need to become classrooms to handle the added enrollment.

Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan lamented that the lack of space at Deer Hill will become increasingly problematic over the next few years, and said, problems are already occurring.

"When we had MCAS makeups, five kids had to use my office because we had nowhere else to put them," he said. "The building is getting tighter and tighter and it will reach a point where we can't take care of it. Somehow, somewhere, we're going to have to increase the size of at least one school building."

Callahan added that it would be impossible for his school to meet the standards set by the Cohasset technology plan without an addition.

"The current technology lab is 635 square feet, which is not large enough for increased enrollment and expanded class size," he said. "We would not be able to fit the appropriate number of computers in the lab and students would have to share a computer, seriously impacting the computer curriculum."

Members of the community will be able to see for themselves the need for such renovations in the weeks between the Oct. 7 school committee meeting and the Dec. 6 special town meeting.

"We're planning to have a number of public hearings and a number of tours of these schools," said Rob Spofford, chairman of the school facilities committee. "We only have 60 days after the Oct. 7 meeting and we welcome any ideas about where we should go. When we were talking about Osgood, we had a senior tour. We welcome any type of coffees or informal meetings as well. We have only a short period of time."

School committee member Stephanie Noble wanted to make it clear that greater attention to renovations over the life span of the buildings would not have changed the current situation.

"All the maintenance in the world wouldn't have changed where we are today," she said. "The materials used in those buildings are 50 years old."

School committee member Betsy Connolly remarked that the school committee had suggested renovations to Deer Hill when the new Osgood School was in its planning stages.

"The need for these renovations is not anything that's new to the public or should come as a surprise," she said.

Spofford said that renovating Deer Hill five years ago would have saved the town a significant amount of money.

"We'll be prepared to show the public what it cost the town to wait five years," he said.

DeGiacomo hoped that discussions involving the renovations will focus upon what form those renovations should take rather than their necessity.

"One would certainly hope that, in the upcoming debate, people will realize that these buildings need some very serious work," he said. "Going forward on to other issues about the project would be healthy."

The four school renovation options

•Use the existing grade configurations and do the necessary physical plant renovations, without constructing additions. This option worries architects and school committee members because the state may not reimburse the renovations at 60 percent.

•Use the existing grade configurations while adding additions that would satisfy goals for program improvements and added enrollment. This option would not satisfy the goal of school administrators to create a middle school of grades 6-8, but would be reimbursable by the state.

•Move the sixth grade from Deer Hill to the middle school to create the 6-8 middle school that school administrators prefer. A new gy[illegible] nasium, locker room, and cafet[illegible] would have to be added to make the middle school a more separate entity. The third grade would be moved from Osgood to Deer Hill, which would create room at Osgood for full-day kindergarten

•Move the sixth grade from Deer Hill to the middle school, but leave the third grade at Osgood. This would leave only the fourth and fifth grades at Deer Hill and would preclude the need for an addition at that school.

Mass. Highway floats widening of Route 3

Backers, detractors debate project

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

The population of communities South of Boston has grown dramatically over the past few decades, and that's the primary reason the state is taking a look at the possibility of widening Route 3.

"We're already doing whatever we can (transportation-wise to alleviate the resulting traffic congestion), but there remains a need for additional capacity on Route 3," said Robert Joseph of Edward and Kelcey of Boston, consultant for Massachusetts Highway Department, which is conducting a needs analysis for the proposal.

The fact that vehicle registrations have "gone off the chart," with individuals buying cars at a "phenomenal rate" also contributes to traffic delays, he said.

"There used to be an average of one vehicle per household, but now it's one vehicle per adult," Joseph said.

Current alternative transportation modes which take cars off Route 3 include commuter rail, express buses, park and ride lots and car pools.

"The South Shore, long considered a transportation disadvantaged area, is no longer the poor stepchild," he said.

But William Stanton, executive director of the North and South Rivers Watershed Association (NSRWA) in Norwell, who attended the meeting about the proposal to widen Route 3 at Hingham Town Hall last week, disagrees with Joseph's viewpoint.

"Adding another lane won't do it because it will make development more prevalent. There's very little land left to develop in Weymouth and Hingham, unlike towns further south," he said. "We need a holistic approach. Regional transportation organizations should work together to solve the problem."

Stanton noted that a number of major new subdivisions are planned for Plymouth and other communities, which would likely result in many more cars using Route 3.

For example, the Pine Hills development plan in Plymouth alone calls for 1,897 limited occupancy homes; 920 houses in the retirement community portion of the plan; a 72-hole golf course; 150-room assisted living facility; 400 conference rooms; a 220,000-square-foot retail center; and 400,000-square-foot office/research center.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce, on the other hand, supports the proposal.

"We're very much in favor of the project, which we worked on during the 1980s and '90s," said William Kopolovsky, representing the chamber. "The reasons for widening Route 3 are even more clear today. Relying on the breakdown lane presents a potential safety problem. This is not a new issue or a new need, but one not yet solved."

Furthermore, a proposal to redevelop the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station into a mega-mall which would attract thousands of shoppers daily and add a significant amount of traffic to Route 3 (the redevelopment plan is expected to generate about 52,000 trips per day), further spells out the need to widen Route 3, the chamber maintains.

Kopolovsky spoke of a recent New York Times article which mentioned major traffic problems which occurred on highways when residents of North Carolina attempted to evacuate the area during Hurricane Floyd.

"They traveled only nine miles in two hours," he said. "It's a matter of how many cars a roadway can handle. In addition, in order for the economic engine to work properly, products need to move or else there will be a choke hold."

The chamber is supporting the widening as part of a multi-modal transportation system for the South Shore.

The Town of Hingham would like to alleviate its share of congestion as well. The board of selectmen there feels the widening of Route 3 is long overdue, particularly if a proposal to build a connector road to the mega-mall comes to fruition.

Joseph, the Mass. Highway consultant, noted that Route 3 was designed in the 1950s and constructed in the 1960s.

"Traffic congestion has been noticed in this area for many years, even with authorized use of the breakdown lane (during peak morning and evening hours)," he said.

An environmental impact report is also part of the process. Before the project could move forward — if in fact it receives the final "okay" down the road — state agencies involved in the proposal must minimize environmental damage as much as possible.

According to Arthur Pugsley of the state executive office of environmental affairs, who conducted the meeting, the project was last scoped in 1988.

"That one is a little bit stale, and we need to include current environmental thinking when we rescope it," he said.

Christine Mizioch, project manager for the Route 3 South transportation improvement program, said the original plan called for improvements on Route 3 along the 36-mile corridor between Weymouth and the Sagamore Bridge.

Since then, the proposal has been scaled back to include widening of the highway from Weymouth to Exit 11 in Duxbury (including the Rt. 18, Derby Street and Routes 228, 53, 139 and 14 exits).

By the year 2020, serious traffic tie-ups are projected to extend further south down Route 3 South to Exit 11 in Duxbury.

The Route 3 South corridor includes the towns of Weymouth, Rockland, Hingham, Hanover, Norwell, Pembroke, Marshfield and Duxbury as well as communities further south which are not included in the current proposal.

In the project corridor, traffic volumes currently peak at the northern end between Rockland and Weymouth. Northbound volumes amount to more than 60,000 vehicles per day between exits 14-16, while southbound volumes are just under 60,000 vehicles per day between exits 16 and 15 and more than 60,000 from exits 15-14.

According to a Massachusetts Highway Department study, the corridor communities evolved for the most part from small villages which grew slowly as their economies changed from fishing and farming to commerce and industry. The most physical change occurred when these towns developed into suburban communities.

Route 3 has a number of purposes, including serving large developments such as Hanover Mall; accommodating trucks related to the movement of goods; and connecting Boston to Cape Cod for major recreational purposes.

"It's unusual to have one highway serve so many needs," Joseph said.

A number of alternatives are on the table for transportation improvements related to Route 3, subject to the analysis and environmental review. Those include:

- not widening Route 3 at all;
- addition of two High Occupancy Vehicle lanes in the median between Exit 16 and Exit 11; and
- addition of two general travel lanes in the median between Exit 16 in Weymouth and Exit 11 in Duxbury.

On Oct. 8, state secretary of environmental affairs Robert Durand will issue a certificate regarding the new scope of the project in preparation for the new environmental impact report.

Serving Cohasset's business community

Chamber of Commerce helps entrepreneurs succeed

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Running a small business is an extremely difficult task, involving long hours and tireless attention to every dollar spent on expenditures. To succeed, owners have to know the ins and outs of their businesses. Keeping an eye on all the government decisions that might affect the town's business community is nearly impossible.

Because of the attention that small business owners must pay to their entrepreneurial endeavors, membership in the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce ensures that their interests are protected.

"The chamber acts as an advocate for the business community in local issues," said Dean Rizzo, owner of Aquarius Sunrooms and a member of the chamber's board of directors. "People who own small businesses are very busy. They just don't have the time to keep abreast of everything that is going on."

The town has two very distinct business communities in Cohasset Village and Route 3A, which have different needs and serve the community in different ways. Incoming chamber president David Drinkwater, who currently sits on the group's board of directors, said the health of both business communities are vital to the residents of Cohasset.

"The village is important for residents to be able to get services, as well as being a tourist attraction," said Drinkwater, partner of Coastal Countryside Properties. "Cohasset can't survive on the village alone, however. The larger businesses on 3A are a vital lifeline to the town. You just couldn't locate supermarkets like Shaw's and Stop & Shop in the village."

Rizzo said that while the two communities are distinct, business owners in the village and 3A share a similar goal.

"Both want to increase consumer traffic," he said. "The village may be a little more off the beaten path, but if we can pull more people to the village, it's going to naturally attract more people to 3A."

The organization began as a group of village merchants, but did not officially become the Chamber of Commerce until 1983, when it expanded to include businesses on 3A. Its 120 members pay $95 a year for membership and are afforded a number of networking opportunities for that fee.

"We try to showcase a lot of our businesses at social events," Drinkwater said. "We just had a wine tasting at Bernard's restaurant on Ripley Rd., which allowed everyone to taste the food there and meet with other members of the business community."

Drinkwater said the networking benefits that come with membership in the chamber are vital to small-town business owners.

"A lot of our members are doing business with each other," he said. "A lot of business people don't realize how fundamentally important networking is."

Along with Milton, Cohasset is one of only two chambers of commerce to be affiliated with the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. That affiliation allows Cohasset members to attend programs and events of a larger scope.

"They have educational programs and forums for business owners," Drinkwater said. "The affiliation allows our members extended networking opportunities, which is a nice added benefit."

The Cohasset chamber runs its own educational programs as well, to help keep its membership up to date with the latest goings on in the business community.

"We do forums about topics such as future development plans on the South Shore, tips from successful entrepreneurs, and how to obtain venture capital," Drinkwater said. "We'll look at anything that might be of interest to the business community."

Still rockin' after all these years

Grateful Dads' passion for music as strong as ever

By Brian Brennan

The Grateful Dads perform at the '"Evening on the Harbor," an auction to benefit the South Shore Art Center at Atlantica on Saturday. From left are, Cohasset's Victor Zanzilotti, Jim Limbey and Rick Shea of Cohasset. Not shown are drummer John Leet and guitarist Lenny Rubenstein.

Many Baby Boomers can relate to the stories of the Grateful Dads, a rock band made up primarily of Cohasset and Scituate residents. Growing up during the British Revolution in popular music and avid fans of the Beatles and the Rolling Stones, they played in garage rock bands as teenagers and imagined themselves on stage. Unlike many others whose musical careers began and ended in those garages, however, the six members of the Grateful Dads never lost their passion for playing the music they loved.

"We've all been playing music since we were teenagers," said bassist and Cohasset resident Rick Shea. "The key is that we all still enjoy music and still love to play."

The band, which includes Cohasset residents Shea, lead guitarist Victor Zanzilotti, and singer and guitarist Peter Dupre, drummer John Leet and guitarist Lenny Rubenstein of Scituate, and singer and guitarist Jim Limbey of Boston, has evolved from its humble beginning in 1991 when Shea and Zanzilotti met at a party and discovered they had a common interest in music.

"Rick had a party and my wife and I had been invited," Zanzilotti recalled. "He was deciding what CDs to play and we started talking about music. I ended up working the CD player with him and we realized we were fellow musicians. Later on, we jammed over a case of beer and that's pretty much how the band got started."

Shea and Zanzilotti played publicly for the first time at the South Shore Community Center later that year and the rest of the band has been added gradually over the years as members met each other socially.

"I met Peter [Dupre] at a cocktail party when he had just moved into town," Shea said. "I met Jim Limbey in high school at Xaverian. Lenny's just joined us recently and lives in Minot with John Leet. It's great how it's all worked out."

As with any band, choosing a name was a difficult proposition. Zanzilotti said the Grateful Dads was chosen after a lengthy debate.

"One of the toughest parts about being in a band is agreeing on a name," he said. "Everything gets shot down. With the exception of Jim Limbey, who doesn't have any kids, we're all dads and so we settled upon the Grateful Dads. Obviously, it's a play on the Grateful Dead as well. To this day, not everyone in the band likes the name, but it's better than Lube Job, which was our other choice."

The Dads, as they are popularly known around town, play between six and eight events a year in the South Shore and Boston With families and careers demanding the majority of their time, Zanzilotti said it would be difficult for the band to find the rehearsal time necessary to play more often.

"The biggest obstacle we face is just how busy everyone is," he said. "By playing only a few times a year, the band remains a nice release and a complement to our lives rather than feeling like work."

For their six to eight shows a year, the Dads typically alternate between charity appearances and paying gigs. Last Saturday night, they brought down the house at the South Shore Art Center's gala auction to benefit art education programs. Zanzilotti said the crowd at the Atlantica restaurant was ready to party once the auction had concluded.

"People were primed and ready to dance," he said. "We started with 'Just When I Need It' by the Cars and it seemed to really get everybody going. We played a Beatles medley after that. For that venue [Atlantica], we pull out a lot of our older stuff."

Although they stayed with classics that the auction crowd would know on Saturday night, Zanzilotti said the Dads have a more varied repertoire.

"It was kind of an older crowd [at the auction] but at other shows we like to do a lot of newer songs as well. We don't want to be earmarked as just an oldies band. We can play everything from Chuck Berry and Buddy Holly to Sugar Ray and Pearl Jam. We like to keep people fairly surprised."

Shea said many of the Dads commute to Boston, allowing them to listen to newer music and get an idea for which songs might be a good fit for the band.

"Some of us have an hour each day to listen to the new music that's out there," he said. "There's a lot of good, new music. A lot of the 90's music is similar to what we used to listen to in the 60's."

The band recently learned Sugar Ray's latest song, 'Someday' as well as an Eric Clapton song from the 1970's, 'Lay Down Sally.' While it can be difficult to get all six members to agree on the band's song choices, Shea said their diverse tastes allow them to cover a wide musical spectrum.

"There's differences of opinion about which songs to play, as with any band," he said. "We're lucky because everybody likes all kinds of music. We can do the harmony-type songs, such as the Gin Blossoms or the Beatles, but we can also do the harder guitar stuff like [Jimi] Hendrix or the Rolling Stones."

While the songs they play are well-known, Shea said the band tries to stay away from playing the same old songs that people hear at virtually every function.

"We don't do the typical songs like you'd hear at a wedding," he said. "We do songs that are danceable but that we like as well."

In addition to performing at Saturday's auction, the Dads have played at numerous events in Cohasset such as the 1993 and 1994 First Night celebrations. They also play at events such as corporate Christmas parties in Boston and have even appeared at the famous Black Rose.

"U2 played at the Black Rose the year before, so we like to joke that they opened for us," Zanzilotti laughed.

Trowers too tough for Cape Cod Tech

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Dan Trowers did to the Cape Cod Tech defense what Mashpee High did to the Cohasset High football team in the season opener: Left them shaking their heads in disbelief.

Trowers, the lightning-fast sprinter in the spring who has the ability to put opposing defenses in tailspins in the fall, bullied Cape Cod Tech in Cohasset's 26-6 win on Saturday. The victory evened the Skippers' record at 1-1 heading into Saturday's South Shore League opener against a potent Carver High team.

Trowers had a career game, rushing for 250 yards and scoring three touchdowns on high-octane runs of 55, 25 and 35 yards. He also made it into the end zone for two more points on a conversion play. Quarterback Jason Brown hooked up with Nick Bolster on a 13-yard pass for Cohasset's other touchdown.

"All he needs is a seam," said Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe. "He had some really big runs for us."

The victory was a huge lift for the Skippers and proof they were able to put the Mashpee loss behind them and get on with the task at hand, in this case, Cape Cod Tech.

"Like I told them, there's nothing you can do about the first game," Rolfe said.

Led by the play of guard Jeff Scribner, Cohasset was able to dominate the line of scrimmage. Defensively, they were just as dominant, putting constant pressure on Tech's offensive backfield. The holes were there early and often for Trowers and he never hesitated, hitting them hard, breaking tackles and picking up added yardage with each run.

"Our offensive line did a much better job," Rolfe said.

The Skippers now must contend with Carver High, one of the preseason favorites to capture the South Shore League. There's little doubt the Crusaders will rely heavily on the arm of quarterback Ray Tolliver. Cohasset's pass rush must be solid and consistent throughout, without foregoing its run blocking.

Cohasset's offense will face a solid offensive line and an overall team that makes few mistakes on both sides of the ball. The Crusaders will have to contend with Brown's ability to scramble and throw the ball.

Tech had its problems when he completed his first five passes of the game. Throw in the constant threat of Trowers breaking one for a big gain and it should be tough for Carver to commit heavily to either the run or pass.

"We have to throw the ball and keep their defense on the field," Rolfe said. "We're glad to get in the league and get started."

Field hockey has tournament hopes

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The varsity field hockey team at Cohasset High School could be going to Nantucket in the near future, but not for the relaxing vacation one would think of when picturing this small Massachusetts island.

This team has been outstanding, and for their efforts, they may end up at the annual field hockey tournament in Nantucket. They have been practicing since August.

They either have a game or a two- hour practice every day in which the team does drill after drill. In a mere three weeks, the Lady Skippers have had seven tough, hard fought games. But, one might ask, is it really worth all the effort?

"Definitely," says junior halfback/forward Karen McMorris. "I'm just happy we're off to a good start."

And they sure are. Every one of the 15 players on the squad has contributed to their record of two wins, two losses, and three ties. Should the Skippers continue to play well, finishing the year with at least as many wins as losses, they would qualify for the end of year field hockey tournament in Nantucket. One year after missing the tournament by one point, this team fully intends on making it this year.

The Skippers are going to need strong play from veteran senior captains Jen Meehan at the sweeper position and Melissa Pyfrom taking on the responsibilities of right wing.

"They really keep the team motivated," said junior fullback Sarah Kidder.

But it will take more than one or two superstars to carry the team to the tournament come the end of the season. It will take the hard work of all 15 members of the squad to play well.

"We work as a force," Kidder adds.

Another necessary ingredient to the field hockey recipe for success is strong coaching by Debbie Bostwick. "Coach B" to the players, Bostwick holds practices everyday which feature dribbling drills, conditioning, and scrimmaging. She, like her players, has a tremendous desire to reach the tournament in Nantucket again.

The 12th year coach is confident that this "underdog team can wail anyone, I believe this team can do it." Bostwick has reached the tournament three times in 12 years of coaching, including the team of 1989 which tied for second in the league.

Bostwick has the experience and knowledge to bring this team to new heights in Nantucket.

"I got a taste for it, and I want to go back," said Bostwick

Bostwick not only coaches the varsity squad, but spreads her expertise to the junior varsity as well. However, Bostwick feels she might be spreading herself a bit too thin these days.

She made a request that if there is anyone who would be interested in being "another pair of eyes" for Bostwick, please contact the Cohasset High School.

With another coach on board, Cohasset would improve its chances dramatically of being able to have two trained, disciplined squads with the potential of a tremendous year.

The junior varsity squad is shaping up to have as sharp a team as

Cohasset Police take on pro stars

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

William Quigley was nervous when he woke up on Saturday morning.

"I was afraid it was going to rain all day," said Quigley, who is the president of the Cohasset Police Association. "I had food for about 50 people."

Fortunately for Quigley, and the would-be eaters of the food, the clouds cleared and the sun came out for the softball game between the Cohasset Police all-stars and the All-Pro Celebrity Softball team. Of course, after about the first inning, Quigley may have been wishing the rain never stopped as the celebrities smacked the ball all over Beechwood Field.

"These guys (the celebrities) do this a few times a week," said Quigley. "We have a tough time just getting everyone together for practice."

The hot dogs weren't just limited to the concession area, as former New England Patriots safety Jim Bowman cooly positioned himself under a deep fly ball to left field, and caught it behind his back. Fans best remember Bowman for his bone crushing hits he used put on wide receivers coming over the middle on pass routes, and for his big play ability he had on special teams. In fact, his biggest moment probably was when he was able to recover a fumbled kickoff in the end zone against the Raiders in a 1985 divisional playoff. The Pats went on to win, 27-20 en route to making the Super Bowl.

"Ya, I had my fair share of concussions from all those hits," said Bowman. "I had about three, at least that I can remember. I probably had my best game when I got a concussion in the first half, came back in the second half and had a couple of interceptions and a fumble recovery."

On Saturday though, he was just happy to help raise money for the Cohasset Police Association.

"Some of the kids don't remember me," said Bowman. "OK, none of them do," he added with a laugh, "but it's nice to be able to come out here and help out."

Other athletes were a little more famous, such as National Hockey League Hall of Famer Brad Park, and other Bruins legends like Rick Middleton and Ken Linseman.

"We play in about 40-50 of theses games a year, and I play in about another 10 in the winter on ice," said Middleton as his celebrity teammates cruised to a double-digit lead. "Some of the teams we face play in a league, and then the score is just as bad the other way."

For Middleton, it's a relatively easy way to help people out.

"It's nice to get together and have some fun with these guys," said Middleton, who has a wholesale catalog in salons and barbershops thoughout the country. "Plus, we get to raise some money for charity."

Not that Middleton understands what the attraction is.

"It boggles my mind that people want to see old hockey players playing softball," said Middleton. "But I used to do it too. People seem to like it Some games are really crowded."

The crowd that packed Beechwood Field was also treated to Pinky, the face-painting clown and pony rides.

"This was a pretty good showing," said Rick Novio, who was on the Cohasset Police All-Stars team. "It's a good thing these guys aren't taking the game seriously."

Indeed, the celebrities took it easy on the police, often jogging around the bases instead of running, and taking their time with throws to each base to allow the Cohasset baserunners to reach safely.

At one point, with the celebrities holding a 15-run lead, Park, who was pitching, gave back 10 runs. Any time he touched an umpire, it would cost his team a run, so, as he "argued" with the umpire, he poked him 10 times, much to the delight of the crowd.

"These are people we grew up watching," said Quigley. "I think we're a little overwhelmed."

Chief Brian Noonan had played in these games before.

"The kids love it," said Noonan of the autograph seekers that swarmed the bench area in between innings. "The guys enjoy meeting the athletes. It's a good time for a good fundraiser. It's mostly just for fun. Now if we played football, that could be a little more intimidating."

There's an idea for next year.

the varsity. Freshman Sarah Dennis leads the midfield charge with bullet-like penalty shots, and freshman goalie Sera Genovese, is new to the position, but has played extremely well, especially in tight situations. Sophomores Suzanne Lynner and Allison Scott have been exceptional in the forward positions.

Freshman center forward Heather Peraino is the leading scorer of the team, and even saw some minutes in Cohasset's match-up with Carver on Monday, where the Skippers rallied from deficits of 1-0 and 2-1 to come out with a tie 2-2.

According to Bostwick there are three components the team must have in order to be successful. First, everyone must stay in shape, and the conditioning drills in practice fully intend on keeping that up.

Second, the team must come out stronger, striking quickly in the opening minutes of all games, capitalizing on mistakes, and on corner shot opportunities. And finally, the team needs a form of consistency, playing quality field hockey every minute of every game. If these three things can be done, and done well, the Skippers should find themselves right where they want to be - a little island called Nantucket.

But this coach does not have the win at all costs attitude, feeling that if you win without enjoying it, then something is definitely wrong. She says she has a great bunch of girls who want to win, but also have a good time.

It is this winning personality and strong sense of the game that keeps up Bostwick's hope of one day coaching the all-star game, the honor given to the coach of the first place team every year.

This year, Skipper fans can watch for the hot hand of fiery junior center forward Andi Shaughnessy, who in seven games has three goals and six assists.

Another sharp forward is junior left wing Maggie O'Connor, whose explosive play is more than welcome on this team. In a 5-2 win over a strong Scituate team, O'Connor recorded three assists.

The defensive side this team is anchored by superstitious senior goalie Melissa Rosano, junior goalie Krysten Considine, and durable center fullback Kelly Lordan, who is also doing tremendous work at feeding corner shots to the offensive players.

But it is not just the players who have been a big part of the team, but a fun supporting crew of Skipper faithfuls including managers Emma Gardner and Jackie Goines.

Though one of the smallest schools in the district, this squad of determined girls are not intimidated by the much larger schools like Hanover or Hull. With a bright future, and an even brighter now, the Cohasset field hockey fans have a lot to cheer about.

European whine made with sour grapes

BRIAN BRENNAN

Enough of these European Ryder Cup golfers whining and complaining about the behavior of the American team after Justin Leonard's sensational putt on the 17th green at the Brookline Country Club. While Leonard did look a little silly galavanting around the green (let's face it, golfers are not the most graceful of athletes when they attempt to run), it was a display of genuine emotion.

Leonard had been chastised throughout the Ryder Cup for failing miserably in the clutch, and rightly so. His performance on Saturday had been extremely poor, and even the most simple of putts seemed to be giving him trouble. He seemed shaky and nervous, obviously frazzled by the magnitude of the event.

But on the back nine, in perhaps the most important golf tournament of his life, Leonard did what every person who has ever played a sport would want to do. With the world watching, he delivered.

With all of the uproar concerning what happened after he made his putt on 17, his remarkable play leading up to that hole has been overshadowed. He made three sensational birdies prior to that hole, and his confidence soared.

To understand why the "ugly" Americans reacted as they did after Leonard's Cup-winning putt (If you think Europe's Jose Maria Olazabal would have made his putt had the Americans not run onto the course, I've got some swampland in Florida to sell you), let's look back at the circumstances the Americans faced when play began that day.

Pronounced by many to be the best American Ryder Cup team ever, they were losing 10-6 on their home soil. If they lost, they would be forever labeled as choke artists and selfish players who simply could not function in the team concept.

The entire American team seemed shell shocked by the sizable European lead entering Sunday's match play. The Americans were heavy favorites, expected to dominate what the golf media had termed a vastly inferior European squad.

Perhaps the American team bought into the hype and was overconfident.

"On paper, they shouldn't even be caddying for us," Stewart said of the European team prior to the Cup.

The Europeans, however, put on a show on the first day of the tournament, dominating an American team that at times seemed listless. Surely, the Americans would come back on Saturday after finding themselves down 6-2 after Friday's play, thought golf insiders.

The Americans were simply too talented to lose to the Europeans. They would definitely make a comeback.

Someone forgot to tell the Europeans, who played brilliantly for the second straight day to take what looked like an insurmountable 10-6 lead heading into Sunday's final day of Cup play. The only member of the American team who seemed at all confident was team captain Ben Crenshaw. Pronouncing himself a big believer in fate, Crenshaw said he thought Sunday would be a good day for his team.

To win, however, they would have to win 8 1/2 of the day's 12 matches. Given their performance on Friday and Saturday, the Americans' chances seemed highly improbable, if not impossible.

But then something happened, that most serene of moments that every athlete hopes for. The Americans found themselves 'in the zone,' making incredible shots on one of the biggest stages in their sport. The first six Americans to tee off absolutely smoked their European counterparts.

As great as those six played, however, the Americans still needed two more wins and a tie to secure the comeback victory. Two overlooked Americans in the Tiger Woods/David Duval hype, Jim Furyk and Steve Pate, put the Americans on the brink of the Cup with their stunning victories.

Furyk's win over 19 year-old Spanish sensation Sergio Garcia was particularly noteworthy, given Garcia's domination of the Americans in previous Cup play.

Suddenly the U.S. needed only to tie one other match to complete the comeback. Those Americans that had already completed their matches were now part of the gallery, spurring on their teammates.

Criticized for their selfishness, the members of the American team had come together to complete a daunting task. When Leonard's putt dropped, the bottled-up frustration of the previous two days had suddenly become an uncontrollable joy.

Let the Europeans whine if they must, but I distinctly remember Garcia and fellow European team member Jesper Parnevik jumping in each other's arms on Saturday after Parnevik made a sensational chip-shot from off the green.

"But Olazabal had yet to putt," the whiners will say. "It was unsportsmanlike, unfair."

The fact remains that after the spontaneous (key word, there) celebration, the Americans backed off of the green. Olazabal was left on his own to sink a putt that could have tied him with Leonard and preserved Europe's chances to retain the Cup.

It was just him and the hole. Under tremendous pressure, he missed. No faulting him there, as his put was nearly impossible to begin with.

Leonard, however, made his putt. As was the case for pretty much the entire round on Sunday, the Americans performed better under pressure, and they won.

I somehow think that might gall the Europeans a bit more than the American team's premature celebration.

Teachers in year-long improvement effort

A team of three teachers from Cohasset Middle Senior High School has been awarded a $3,000 grant to participate in the Massachusetts Academy for Teachers for the 1999-2000 academic year. The academy, sponsored by the Massachusetts Field Center for Teaching and Learning at the University of Massachusetts Boston, is a 12-month statewide professional development program for K-12 educators which supports the research and implementation of an improvement effort specific to each team's school.

Teachers Jack Buckley, Patricia McGrail and David Magnussen will be conducting research on developing and establishing summer courses in Maritime Studies. They will participate in a series of nine day-long symposia as they gather their data, and will present the results of their research at a two-day Academy Institute in the summer of 2000. Seven of the nine symposia will be presented on non-school days (Saturdays and after-school is out next summer.)

"We are delighted that this team was accepted into the Academy," said Principal Curtis Collins. "The teachers are giving up a substantial amount of their own time to participate in this program, which is indicative of both their personal commitment to improving practice and the quality of the training they will receive."

Historical Society events

This fall will see a continuation of the Society's popular series of informal Thursday evening programs devoted to various facets of Cohasset's history. Oct. 7 will feature Scituate Historical Society President David Ball talking about the Great Gale of 1898, often called the "Portland Gale" for the steamer Portland that sank with all persons in that fierce storm.

On Oct. 14 Curator Dave Wadsworth will present a program the subject to be announced soon. And on Oct. 28 Rebecca Bates-McArthur and others will present a second talk on the fascinating history of Beechwood. These programs will be held at the Lighthouse Keepers' house, Government Island, and will meet at 7:30 p.m. with the talk starting at 7:45 p.m. There will be light refreshments.

The Society's annual meeting will be held at Kimball's-by-the-Sea on Sunday, Oct. 24. There will be a social hour from 5 to 6 p.m. and then dinner, followed by an illustrated talk by Curator Dave Wadsworth, the title called "The Road to Jerusalem Revisited." The original presentation of the history of Jerusalem Road was given in the 1980's at a Society meeting, and this will be a revised version of that fascinating subject. Jerusalem Road is one of the most ancient of highways in Cohasset, with a particularly varied history. More will be announced soon about the 1999 annual meeting and dinner with program, but be sure to reserve that date.

The cost is $30 for members and $35 for non-members. For reservations contact the Society at 14 Summer St. or call 383-1434.

Cohasset man charged with arson of a dwelling

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Police said a 31-year-old Cohasset man could face up to 20 years in prison if found guilty of setting a house fire last month that sent two young adults running for their lives.

"Setting a fire in a dwelling is a major felony," said Det. Rick Grassie.

After a 3-1/2 week investigation, police arrested David A. Stover, Jr., 533 Beechwood St., Sept. 21 on charges of burning a dwelling and entering a dwelling in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony.

Grassie said Kyra L. Cogill, 18, and a friend had to run through flames in the stairwell on the first floor after being awakened by a smoke alarm at about 2:15 a.m., Aug. 28. They ran to a neighbor's house and dialed 9-1-1.

"The officer in the cruiser that arrived could see flames coming out the window," Grassie said.

Grassie along with the State Fire Marshall's office was called in at 6:30 a.m. to investigate. Grassie said they quickly determined the fire was of suspicious origin.

"Certain evidence at the scene revealed that an accelerant was used," he said.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said Cohasset sent two engine companies, the aerial ladder truck and ambulance to the scene. Scituate also responded and Hull covered the Cohasset fire headquarters with an engine.

"It is my understanding that it was the very quick action by responding firefighters that brought the fire under control," Lincoln said. He explained the fire was well involved in the rear section of the house.

Grassie said that both evidence gathered at the scene and information from interviews with family and friends led to the issuing of a warrant for the suspect's arrest.

Stover was arraigned on the charges Wednesday, Sept. 22 in Quincy District Court and was released on personal recognizance. A not-guilty plea was entered by the Commonwealth on Stover's behalf. Grassie said due to the severity of the arson charge, the case was "kicked up" to Dedham Superior Court.

Grassie estimated damage to the house, which is owned by Cogill's mother Lisaanne Laugelle, at about $100,000. The occupants are living in a house trailer on the property while repairs are made, he said.

Grassie, who would not speculate on a motive, said the suspect lives right behind the Laugelle home.

"I feel bad," he said. "It's just not the Laugelles who are victims but the suspect's family as well."

Mendel Rd. sewer problem debated

Neighbors to take issue to special town meeting

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The sewer commission came before selectmen on Tuesday night, beginning by appraising the board of the progress of sewer projects in North Cohasset. Quickly, however, the discussion switched to Mendel Road, whose residents have pleaded to be included in the expanded Cohasset Central Sewer District, but have thus far been turned down by the sewer commission.

The five homes on Mendel Road that make up the Olde Farms Hills Estates condominiums share a joint septic system. That septic system failed a Title 5 inspection in February 1998. Title 5 is the state environmental code regulating septic systems.

According to the environmental consultant who failed the Mendel Road system in February 1998, the chances are not good for constructing a new system that would meet Title 5 regulations.

"When I did the inspection, it was obvious the system had been failing for a long time and it was only two

In Cohasset there's no doubt that dogs are popular pets. There are more than 740 registered canines in town, according to the town clerk's office. That's about one dog for every ten citizens.

So while a dog is "man's best friend" most of the time, when it does what comes naturally – the results can cause neighborhood squabbles and a public health nuisance.

"It's common courtesy to pick up after your dog," said health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. "If your dog defecates in a public place or in someone else's yard, you should scoop it up and put it in a container and dispose of it properly."

But some dog owners in town aren't doing that. There has been an ongoing problem on Mill Lane with a dog that is left on a lead,

To our readers

Today you hold in your hands the result of months of planning for a change in the size and shape of your hometown newspaper, along with some additional new features. We hope you are as pleased with the results as we are here at Community Newspaper Company.

Our goal of providing quality local coverage continues to be the same even though the format may be different. Today's edition features some changes combined with all the local newsstand features you've come to expect from the Mariner. We believe these changes will now provide more opportunities for front page news, enhanced sports coverage and a better showcase for our award-winning photography.

You'll notice today's issue also features multiple sections in addition to the larger format. Our award-winning news, features and sports coverage about your community continues to lead the paper in the first section followed by our entertaining South Look as section two.

The new Mariner also features an expanded classified advertising section called CommunityClassifieds.com, an in-print and on-line marketplace connecting local buyers and sellers. Beginning today, this section will include a greatly expanded selection of automotive, real estate, job and other classified advertising listings in the Mariner than ever before. It is also one of the first classified sections in the country to use its title to tie print classifieds with an expanded classified product available online at www.townonline.com.

As the weeks unfold and you become familiar with the expanded format we'd welcome your feedback on the changes. We encourage your questions and concerns and ask that you call me directly at (781) 837-4574 or e-mail me at mskala@cnc.com.

Deer Hill sixth-grader Katie DeWaal gets a little help from her friends in the wall climb at Camp Bourndale.

Sixth-graders have a blast at Bournedale

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

As every student knows, classroom learning is the foundation of education. Being with a teacher and other students in a controlled environment is a necessity for students to gain the knowledge they need. Teachers are easily able to help them with problems and explain concepts that are troubling them. Sometimes, however, even the best classrooms in the world can be inadequate, because children also need learning experiences that occur outside that environment.

With that in mind, 111 Cohasset sixth-graders went to Camp Bournedale in Plymouth last Wednesday through Friday. Situated on Great Herring Pond, the environment gave students the chance to gain hands-on experience in marine biology and pond study, while also studying rocketry and taking part in adventure courses.

"The camp provides learning experiences that we just can't provide here," said Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan. "The students can go out in lobster boats and actually hold lobsters in their hands. The instructors have expertise in marine life that our teachers don't have. It's a great educational opportunity."

Departing from Deer Hill last Wednesday morning, students and teachers stayed at Camp Bournedale on Wednesday and Thursday nights before returning on Friday afternoon. Though having to stay overnight may seem like a burden for the educators, sixth-grade teacher Joann Magoun insisted that the teachers enjoy the experience as much as the students.

> SIXTH GRADE TEACHER JOANN MAGOUN

"They're the best three days of the whole year," Magoun said in referring to the camp experience. "The kids really get the freedom to explore. It's great to see the looks on their faces. One of them ran up to me and said 'I didn't think they'd actually let us hold the lobsters.' We don't get into a lot of animal life in the classroom, so this is wonderful for them."

The students unanimously praised the marine biology and pond study courses.

"We found five shark babies," said student Isabelle Bertolami. "It was really interesting."

In addition to finding the baby sharks during pond study, students also dissected sand sharks.

"They were really smooth and squishy," said student Trevor Brady. "I liked the liver the best."

Fellow student Will Pinkus made an unexpected discovery as he studied the shark.

"If you squeeze on parts of their insides," Will said, "this black liquid stuff comes out."

While they enjoyed learning about sharks, many students said that one of their most enjoyable moments on the trip was going out in the lobster boats.

"They let us hold us these spider crabs and lobsters that were like this big," said Jenny Roche, holding her hands about two feet apart.

For the rocketry class, students were provided with kits from which they built and launched their own missiles.

"We made the rockets, and they went 200 feet in the air," explained student Christy Muir. "Sometimes, they even came right back down to us."

Many of the students said they most enjoyed the adventure class, in which they had to work in teams to help each other over a 10-foot wall and through the intricate "spider web."

"In the spider web, there were all of these holes that were barely big enough for us to fit through," explained student Brandon Smith. "Some of them were really high and people had to be picked up to go through them. We had to work together to figure out who should go through which holes."

Students faced similar challenges in helping their teammates over the imposing 10-foot wall, though sometimes their best efforts were not enough to get everybody over to the other side.

One student, Krystal Hudson, had a minor difficulty with the wall. "I made it to the top, but then I jumped off the wrong way," she laughed.

Magoun said the team building exercises helped the students to build relationships that can grow throughout the year.

"The kids really build a camaraderie and a confidence in one another when the do things like

WHOSE RIGHT TO KNOW?

Public officials often treat public records as private papers, despite state law that says they belong to you

By Christopher A. Szechenyi
Projects Editor

First of two parts

Armed with the state's public records law, Joseph R. Green has pried open government contracts and payroll records to recover more than $250,000 for workers throughout eastern Massachusetts.

But he has encountered resistance every step of the way in towns such as Abington, Chelmsford, Framingham and Hudson. They have refused to disclose construction bids, contracts or other public documents, so the business agent for Plumbers & Gasfitters Local 12 has appealed to the Secretary of State.

In response, the state's supervisor of public records prompted officials in those towns and in Boston, Canton, Ipswich, Lexington, Needham, Marshfield, Marblehead, Somerville and Winchester to give Green the records.

"The records are the key," said Green, who has discovered that the towns' private contractors have exploited workers and then forced them to pay people prevailing wages and back pay.

A mixed reaction to South Shore requests

When a reporter went to the Scituate police department seeking a copy of the previous day's log, he was surprised to find resistance to his request.

He was quizzed as to his identity, why he wanted the information and was asked for identification — all inappropriate questions when one is seeking public information under the state Open Records law. Since the reporter had been on the job less than two weeks and did not have a

Citizens petition to hire Teen Center coordinator

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced Tuesday night that he had received a citizen's petition article to appropriate funds to hire a coordinator for the Teen Center.

An amount of $8,750 was requested to fund the position for the remainder of the fiscal year. The article will be voted upon at the Special Town meeting on Dec. 6.

Town History Committee looking for pictures

Selectman Diane Sullivan urged anyone with pictures from the 1950's on to forward them to the Town History Committee.

"We're looking for pictures from the 1950's on, and especially from the 1960's on," she said at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting. "Anyone with photographs can deliver them to the selectmen's office and I'll see that they get to the Town History Committee."

James Brook project moving forward

Dominic Tutela, the engineer overseeing the James Brook flood abatement project for the town, said the project is moving forward despite some unforeseen delays.

"We're shooting to have the Cove finished by the end of October," he said. "The contractor may not have been working as quickly as they should have been, but that phase of the project should be done soon."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the part of the project near the center of town was slated to begin yesterday.

"The downtown project will hopefully begin tomorrow," he said at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

Tutela said the flood abatement project won't completely solve the town's flooding problem, but said incidences of flooding will be much less severe.

"We're trying to make a bad situation a lot less bad," he said. "Floods will be shorter and will happen a lot less often."

Latex paint is not a hazardous waste. Quantities are limited to 15 gallons or 30 lbs. of material per car. Commercial "Very Small Quantity Generators" may call ahead and dispose of materials for a fee at some events.

Street light complaints

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen on Tuesday night that he has been receiving numerous complaints in the last couple of weeks from residents upset about the lack of street lights in their neighborhoods.

Fifty-two streetlights were turned out on July 1, at a savings to the town of $7,000. Initially, Haddad received few complaints, but as it has started to get darker earlier in recent weeks, he has received a flood of calls.

"It's getting dark earlier and I've been getting inundated with phone calls about the lights," he said. "We had to make some tough decisions, and some people aren't happy. The lights are not going to be turned back on because if we turn on one , then people will want us to turn them all back on. We're not going to do that."

From one horror to another

Irish shipwreck victims were starved in their homeland

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

This weekend, the town and others will remember the 99 Irish emigrants who drowned 150 years ago when the Brig St. John shipwrecked off the Cohasset coast. It is all too easy to gloss over the importance of losing those 99 souls on that fateful October day in 1849. The sheer number of deaths almost force one to distance himself or herself from the emotions of those involved, for it is more comforting to think of the shipwreck as a single event, rather than the end of 99 individual hopes and dreams.

The tragedy was unspeakable, as each and every person who perished was leaving their homeland behind in search of a better life in an unknown land on which they would never step foot. Many of them spent the entirety of their meager savings to gain passage aboard the St. John, one of the many 'coffin ships' that sailed from Ireland between 1846 and 1851, so named because many of the passengers were not able to sustain the demands of the long and difficult voyage. To fully understand the St. John tragedy, however, it is necessary to understand why the Irish were leaving.

Beginning in 1695, the Irish were the subject of British laws designed to make them second-class citizens in their own homeland. Forbidden to receive an education, hold public office, vote, or exercise their Catholic religion, the Irish were made social and political outcasts, unable to participate in the system which subjugated them. Economically, they were not allowed to own or lease land, and were forbidden to rent any land worth more than 30 shillings a year. They were thus subjected to lives as peasant farmers, living in tiny, ramshackle huts.

Those laws, called the Penal Laws, were repealed in 1829 following Catholic emancipation. Despite that repeal, 130 years of living on the lowest rung of the social and economic ladder had made most Irish essentially destitute. Writing in 1845, the great American orator and abolitionist Frederick Douglass said he had seen little that could compare with their dire situation.

"Of all places to witness human misery, degradation, filth, and squalor," he wrote, "an Irish hut is preeminent."

The worst for the Irish, however, was yet to come. When Douglass wrote in 1845, he could scarcely have realized what would be the effect of the potato blight which struck that same year. The blight caused the buds of potatoes to rot and turn black, almost entirely wiping out the major food source for the nation's peasant farmers.

An illustration of Bridget O' Donnell and her children from the Illustrated London News, 1849

While many Irish farmers raised crops of corn, wheat, barley, beef, and pork for rent to their landlords, these crops were unavailable to them as a food source. Starvation became rampant once the potato was unavailable. Acting on the calamity he saw unfolding, British Prime Minister Sir Robert Peel pushed a bill through the British legislature that would allow corn to be imported into Ireland. Peel's action was an anomaly in that British policy at the time allowed exports of food from Ireland but outlawed imports. While some Irish still starved, the corn allowed many to survive what could have been an unrelenting winter.

In 1846, however, the corn laws, as they were called, were repealed and Peel was removed from the office of Prime Minister. His replacement, Lord John Russell, was adamant that, despite the rampant starvation, imports of food to Ireland were not to be tolerated because such a practice would interfere with the government's laissez-faire business principles.

In an impassioned plea to Parliament, Peel urged legislators to consider the devastating effect that the loss of corn would have on those starving in Ireland.

"Good God," he asked, "are you to sit in cabinet and consider and calculate how much diarrhea, and bloody flux, and diarrhea a people can bear before it becomes necessary to provide them with food?"

Without access to food of any kind, the coming years for the Irish were some of the most brutal faced by any group in the course of human civilization. Stories of starvation deaths appeared in newspapers every day, in such great numbers that people were scarcely moved by the deaths of friends or loved ones.

Correspondent Jeremiah O'Callaghan recounted the misery he saw in his report to the Cork Examiner on January 18, 1847.

"Since my last report, deaths are fearfully on the increase in this locality," he wrote. "Death has taken forcible possession of every cabin. I have just learned that in the neighborhood of Crookhaven they are buried within the walls of their huts.

They have in most cases forgotten the usual ceremony of internment. The living are so consumed with famine that they are unable to remove the dead. The Examiner could scarcely contain the names of all who have perished last month."

Newspapers contained reports not just of death but of desperation as well. People resorted to often unthinkable means of acquiring any morsels of food that could sustain their families and themselves. Such tactics were evident in the report of an arrest in the Cork Reporter on May 10, 1847.

"A man named Galway was arrested by the Police for stealing a horse and killing him," the report began. "He and his wretched family were actually partaking of soup made of the carcass when he was taken. He says that he was without food for three days and that he was looking for a sheep, a pig, or a cow, but was disappointed to find that those animals are all secured by night and watched by day. So he had no recourse but horse flesh to satisfy the cravings of his appetite and the hunger of his starving children."

Similar events were reported throughout Ireland, as people resorted to desperate measures in the hope of acquiring food. The year 1847 was known as Black '47, as two years of failing potato crops had turned many of Irelands lush green fields into graveyards.

At the same time, armed British regiments were assisting British landlords in the export of numerous types of food. In the Spring 1998 issue of History Ireland, Dr. Christine Kinealy of the University of Liverpool wrote that 4,000 vessels carried food to the British ports of Bristol, Glasgow, Liverpool, and London in 1847, including one million gallons of butter alone. During that same year, 400,000 Irish died of

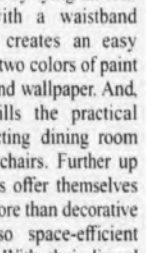
THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID



RIDING THE RAILS

A chair rail is a decorative element that helps bring a sense of intimacy to a room by tying all four walls together with a waistband molding. It also creates an easy transition between two colors of paint or between paint and wallpaper. And, a chair rail fulfills the practical function of protecting dining room walls from errant chairs. Further up the wall, plate rails offer themselves up as something more than decorative trims. They are also space-efficient storage solutions. With their lipped rails, they have provided storage for decorative dinnerware out of the reach of curious children since Colonial times. Today, their design is appropriate for the display of picture frames and other decorative flat objects, as well.

Chair and plate rails serve both functional and decorative purposes. Entertain guests in newly remodeled rooms that are distinct and comfortable. THE DESIGNING WOMAN can create a detailed design plan that considers your personal tastes, the function of the space in question and budget. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient appointment today.

HINT: As a rule, plate rails should be positioned one-fourth to one-third the way down a wall from the ceiling.

We'll make you smile.

starvation and related diseases.

Many in Ireland recognized that, by its policies, the British government was ensuring their starvation. An editorial in the April 1847 issue of the Dublin University Magazine criticized the British for allowing so many Irish to suffer needless deaths.

"Tell us not that it was beyond the power of the combinations, which the strength of the British empire could have wielded, to have brought to the ports of Ireland subsistence for all her people," the editor wrote. "Britain is now branded as the only civilized nation which would permit her subjects to perish of famine, without making a national effort to supply them with food.."

While British regiments guarded the transport of food from Ireland, they also began to forcefully evict those who could no longer pay rent to their landlords. Because the potato was not only a food source but a rent crop for many peasants, the potato blight left them hungry and penniless. Already in search of food, many families soon found themselves devoid of shelter as well.

Unable to find food or shelter, many of those who were able to survive the deplorable conditions in Ireland began to emigrate. Between 1845 and 1855, over two million Irish emigrated to America and Australia, while another 750,000 emigrated to Britain. That exodus from Ireland's shores represented the largest population movement of the 19th century.

In an 1847 editorial in The London Times, the removal of those Irish from their native soil was celebrated as progress.

"They are going," wrote the editor. "They are going with a vengeance. Soon a Celt will be as rare in Ireland as a Red Indian on the streets of Manhattan...Law has ridden through, it has been taught with bayonets, and interpreted with ruin. Townships leveled to the ground, struggling columns of exiles, workhouses multiplied and still crowded, express the determination of the legislature to rescue Ireland from its slovenly old barbarism and to plant there the institutions of this more civilized land."

Surrounded by the constant sights of death and misery, millions gathered what little money they could in order to secure passage to America, Australia, and Canada. Due to the desire of ship owners to make as much money as they could, the ships were often overcrowded, with many people making payments in secret once occupancies had reached their legal limit.

An Irish family evicted by their landlords.

The passage was not a joyous one, as food was scarcely more available on those 'coffin ships' than it had been in Ireland. Hundreds of thousands of emigrants who had somehow survived years of hunger since the potato blight died on ships very much like the St. John. In the Aug. 4, 1847 edition of The Toronto Globe, an article detailed an account of a 'coffin ship' coming ashore.

"The ship Virginius, from Liverpool, with 446 passengers, had lost 158 by death and had 180 sick," the article stated. "A medical officer at the quarantine station reported that the few who were able to come on deck were ghastly, yellow-looking spectres, unshaven and hollow-cheeked."

"They are going with a vengeance. Soon a Celt will be as rare in Ireland as a Red Indian on the streets of Manhattan...Law has ridden through, it has been taught with bayonets, and interpreted with ruin.

1847 LONDON TIMES EDITORIAL DESCRIBING THE EXODUS OF IRISH EMIGRANTS

Those who drowned off the coast of Cohasset following the shipwreck of the St. John had survived both that debilitating journey as well as nearly four full years in Ireland since the beginning of the potato blight. The shipwreck would be the last in a line of unconscionable miseries they would have to endure.

It is not surprising, then, that all 11 survivors listed in the October 12, 1849 edition of The Boston Post were between the ages of 20 and 28. The passengers had suffered so much physically that only those blessed with the vigor of youth had the strength to survive the treacherous waters.

Those who managed to make it to America still faced tremendous obstacles. Strangers in a strange land, and the first major wave of immigrants to America, save for the forced immigration of African slaves, the Irish had to cope with a tremendous amount of persecution.

"The Irish were clannish, took low-paying jobs, had a whole different faith, and most of them spoke the Irish language," said John Sullivan, one of the organizers of the Brig St. John commemoration, in explaining why Irish immigrants were so universally disliked by Americans upon their arrival. "Their story is the story of countless types of immigrants, but the Irish were the first."

The five year period from 1846-1851 which led to the immigration has commonly been called a 'potato famine', but is now being taught in many American schools as 'The Great Hunger,' with more emphasis being placed on the role of the British in both denying food to the Irish and removing large quantities of food from the country.

Jack Meehan, an organizer of the St. John commemoration, spoke before the Massachusetts state legislature in 1997 to explain why the state's schoolchildren need to know about the Great Hunger period.

"I speak very strongly in support of this [the Great Hunger] as a human rights issue, a very significant segment of American as well as Irish history, and a recognition of the impact of 19th century immigration from Ireland on the growth and development of the United States of America into the greatest nation on earth," he said.

The Great Hunger is now being taught in Massachusetts schools, as well as in schools in California and New Jersey.

Those in Cohasset will have an extra opportunity to remember those who suffered through that dire period in Irish history at this Sunday's ceremonies to remember the victims of the St. John shipwreck. They will be joined by 70 people making the trip from Ireland as well as Irish-Americans from throughout the South Shore.

A memorial mass at St. Anthony's Church will be celebrated by Cardinal Bernard Law at 3 p.m., followed by a procession to Cohasset Central Cemetery and a wreath-laying ceremony at the Celtic Cross, where 45 of the shipwreck's victims are buried.

Following the wreath-laying ceremony, a reception will be held at St. Anthony's Parish House, which Sullivan was excited about.

"The Parish House is a beautiful facility," he said. "It will be a great place to have the reception. We'll have a guest speaker, John Connolly, who is from Lettermullen, Ireland, and is a fluent Irish speaker. Also, Katie Roche, a Cohasset high school student, will read from the diary of Elizabeth Lothrup dressed in period clothes."

As part of the Brig St. John commemoration festivities, Sullivan said live music and dancing will take place at the Boston Teachers Union in Dorchester on Saturday from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. Many of those coming from Ireland will be present. A donation of $10 is requested. For more information, contact Sullivan at (781) 545-1144 or Meehan at (617) 254-8528.

The Cohasset Central Cemetery is privately owned and maintained by a non-profit organization of lot owners. Funds for the cemetery are derived from gifts, the sale of plots and columbaria for cremation urns, and a small endowment.

Homeless cats are on the prowl on James Lane

Some residents calling for euthanasia

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

At the end of each episode of the long-running television game show "The Price is Right," host Bob Barker advises viewers to have their pets spayed and neutered. The rationale behind that advice is that an overabundance of pets would lead many to animal shelters and still others to escape into the wild. Once in the wild, the lives of such animals is often filled with hardship and hunger.

Such a problem currently exists at James Lane, where a colony of feral, or homeless, cats make their home. Feral cat colonies are created when domesticated cats escape and are joined by other wild cats. Once they find a food source, the cats establish the surrounding areas as their base of operations.

An Oct. 12 hearing will be held at the Board of Health at 7:30 p.m. to decide what to do about the feral cats on James Lane. A group of residents has petitioned the Board of Health to assist them with the problem.

"We reviewed the letter from the residents and wanted to have a public hearing to decide what action should be taken," said Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. "We had the same problem three or four years ago in this area. Someone in that area is feeding them and that's why they've returned."

Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy said it can be a long time before efforts made to contain the problem can bring results.

"We've been working with the Board of Health to catch, spay, and re-release these cats, but it's a very long process," he said. "There have always been more than 20 cats in that area. There's a very dedicated group of residents who help us to catch them and re-release them, but eventually new cats show up and they breed."

Murphy said there are definite differences of opinion among residents about the solution to the feral cat problem.

"There are two factions, and both have well-founded beliefs," he said. "There are those residents of James Lane who want the cats euthanised and there is a group of individuals who are trying to save the cats."

Margaret Taylor, 21 James Ln., is one resident who would like to see the cats put to sleep.

"We've been seeing them for months and months," she said. "They live in a great big field across from my house and they urinate in my garden. The woman who tends to my garden finds feces all the time when she digs. I have to close my windows because of the smell. I understand that there are some coyotes in the area that feed on these poor cats. Having them put to sleep is far more humane."

"They have no shelter, and they're extremely susceptible to parasites and disease. In addition, there are foxes and coyotes in the area that pray on these cats. It's not a pleasant existence."
ANIMAL CONTROL OFFICER PAUL MURPHY

Despite the availability of a food source, Murphy said the lives of the feral cats on James Lane are far from carefree.

"They have no shelter, and they're extremely susceptible to parasites and disease," he said. "In addition, there are foxes and coyotes in the area that pray on these cats. It's not a pleasant existence."

Pat Downing of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (MSPCA), said those who feed the feral cats may actually be doing them a disservice.

"Feeding the cats is the easy way out," she said. "These cats need housing, sterilization, and vaccination as well. If they're able to locate a food source and reproduce, the problem will keep reappearing."

In its policy on feral cats, the MSPCA says that both euthanasia and feeding of feral cats can be appropriate responses, depending on the situation.

"Traditionally, the response has been to remove the animals with humane traps, to euthanise the feral cats, and to attempt to place the cats that are socialized," begins the MSPCA's policy. "The MSPCA believes that this is often the most appropriate and humane course of action. However, the Society recognizes that there are neighborhoods in which dedicated resident caretakers provide monitoring, regular nutritional food, veterinary care- including sterilization- and shelter for feral cats."

Chrissy Howard of the Quincy Animal Shelter said cats may be able to be moved to an area less obtrusive to residents.

"If they know there's a source of food, it's not that hard to relocate them. By moving the source of food, you can move the cats to a more acceptable location for everyone involved."

Downing said it will be important for residents in the area to come to an acceptable solution.

"They're in a difficult position if they can't come to a consensus," she said of the area's residents. "It's not necessarily the best thing for the cats to be in an area where they're not wanted."

Murphy said the Board of Health will try to make a decision that will be in the best interests of everyone involved, including the feral cats.

"Hopefully, the Board of Health can come up with a sensible solution, after hearing both sides," he said. We'll try to do what's best for the residents and the animals as well."

Applications for local cultural grants due

The Cohasset Cultural Council is seeking applications until Oct. 15 to support community cultural programs and PASS, a ticket subsidy program for school-age children, as a result of a $3,300 grant from the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

The Massachusetts Cultural Council is a state agency that supports public programs in the arts, sciences and humanities. This year, it will distribute $3.9 million to 335 local cultural councils statewide which will accept applications through Oct. 15 for eligible projects taking place in 2000.

Individuals and organizations may apply for general support—projects such as workshops, lectures, exhibitions, festivals, and educational and artistic projects—or for PASS funding to enable schools and youth groups to take students from pre-K through 12 to attend cultural performances outside of school. Grants are awarded after considering the benefit to the community, the qualifications of the individuals and organizations involved, the planning process, community interest and involvement, and the population segments served.

Activities must take place in physically accessible facilities. For more information, call 781-383-9883.

Each community's allocation from the MCC is determined using Local Aid Formula. The local councils are run by municipally-appointed community volunteers who evaluate applications once a year based upon local needs and interests.

Special weekend hours for Maritime Museum

Due to the influx of visitors for this weekend's Brig St. John ceremonies, the Cohasset Maritime Museum will be open for special weekend hours.

The museum will be open from noon to 5 p.m. on Saturday and from noon to 3 p.m. on Sunday.

Special town meeting date set

Selectmen voted on Tuesday to officially call for a Special Town Meeting to be held on Monday, Dec. 6, at 7:p.m. at the Cohasset High School Sullivan Gymnasium.

"With the issue of school buildings coming up, I don't think the auditorium will be large enough to accommodate all of the people that will be there," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Citizen petition articles for the December town meeting must be submitted by Tuesday, Oct. 5, at 4:30 p.m. and must have 100 signatures.

Town Hall hours changed

Selectmen voted on Tuesday to keep Town Hall open until 7 p.m. on Tuesdays instead of Thursdays, effective Nov. 8.

The decision to make Tuesdays the "long days" at Town Hall was the result of two major factors.

"Most holidays are on Mondays, which means that Tuesdays are very busy days around here," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "In addition, we do payroll on Tuesday, so employees will have a little extra time to get that work done.""

Overnight parking ban

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad reminded citizens that an overnight parking ban will go into effect on Nov. 15.

"From Nov. 15 to Apr. 15, you can't park on the street for more than one hour between 2 and 6 a.m.," he said.

Animal control number

Cohasset residents may reach the animal control officer by calling 383-9119.

AROUND TOWN

HAPPY RETIREMENT

Yvette Rattenbury, a familiar face at the Cohasset Police Department where she worked as department secretary for the past 13 years, retired last week to spend more time with her family, hobbies and interests. On her last day, she was presented with balloons and a dozen red roses. Here at the Mariner, we will miss her, as will the Cohasset police. All the best, Yvette!

WALKING FOR KATIE

Last October, Bob and Ginny Egan's 10-year old daughter Katie was diagnosed with Ewing's Sarcoma, a childhood cancer that attacks bone and muscle After intensive in-patient chemotherapy every three weeks and a major operation to remove the tumor on her hip, Katie is nearing the end of her treatment and her prognosis seems encouraging

Through it all, Katie has met her challenges with a quiet trusting courage that has been an inspiration to all.

Bob and Ginny placed Katie's care and faith in the hands of Children's Hospital and the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. They were all provided with compassionate care and support along with exceptional medical treatment

On Sunday, Oct. 17, they will be participating in the Jimmy Fund Walk to raise funds for the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, and they are hoping to count on you to support them as they walk the 26.2 mile route of the Boston Marathon. As the Egans say, "it is never easy to solicit donations, but the money they raise will go directly into cancer research to save lives. Their motivation is to pay back in some small way for the gift they have received and to support Dana-Farber so that the miracles will continue for other children."

Any donation you can make in Katie's honor and in celebration of her spirit will be greatly appreciated Checks can be made payable to "Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk" and sent to them before Oct. 17 if possible.

Mr. Egan is Cohasset's building commissioner; checks can be sent to him at the Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025.

The Egans say they are blessed in the overwhelming support they have received from family, friends and strangers who through love, prayer and kindness have carried them through this year, physically and emotionally; they are forever grateful — let's all support them one more time as they continue to celebrate their miracle and help others to do the same!

RUN FOR OFFICE

Attention Republicans, Polly Logan will work for you and the Republican Party! Polly said, her main concerns will be to encourage men and women to run for office, recruit and train campaign managers and fund-raisers, inspire citizens (especially new voters) and work for candidates. In addition, Polly will continue to work with town committees, to initiate regional meetings for educational and issue workshops to ensure more victories in 2000.

She has been active in Republican politics for many years and has raised money for Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, Sen. Robert Hedlund, Sheriff Peter Forman, state and national candidates, as well as fundraisers for the Republican State Party. She was a member of the Weld-Cellucci transition team and captain of Plymouth/Norfolk for Cellucci-Swift. She served on the Republican National Committee for 12 years and is presently vice chairman of the Republican State Party

Polly is active in civic and community affairs and received a special award "Statesman of the Year" from the South Shore Chamber of Commerce and the Abigail Adams Award from the Massachusetts Women's Political Caucus. She is a former trustee of Old Sturbridge Village, former member of the Board of Overseers for Harvard College and Museum of Fine Arts, Founder and Executive Vice President of the Doric Dames, the Volunteer Guide Service at the State House, and Founder of the Ladies Committee for U.S.S. Constitution Museum.

If Polly can count on your support either as an endorser or voter, let her know — Polly Logan, 121 Nichols Rd., Cohasset, MA or (781) 383-0031 for more information.

He knows our town "like a book" and did an admirable job as our treasurer.

We know we will see you around town, and hopefully everyone will thank you for your tireless work, but we wanted to be among the first — Thank you so much!

Flu clinics slated

The Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Board of Health have scheduled the following annual flu clinics in October.

Senior flu clinics are Tuesday, Oct. 12 from 10 a.m. to noon at the Second Congregational Church and Friday, Oct. 15 from 10 a.m. to noon at Harborview Housing.

Town flu clinics for residents of Cohasset are Saturday, Oct. 16 from 10 a.m. to noon at the Cohasset Town Hall; Saturday, Oct. 23, from 10 a.m. to noon at the Cohasset Town Hall; and Tuesday, Oct. 26 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the Cohasset Town Hall.

Fall mystery night

Buttonwood Books and Toys will hold its fall Mystery Night Wednesday, Oct. 20, from 7-9 p.m. at its Cohasset store, featuring mystery authors Linda Barnes, Rob Kean and Michelle Blake.

Barnes' new mystery, "Flashpoint," is her eighth to feature 6' 1" redheaded, Boston private eye Carlotta Carlyle, in a sharply-honed tale of ruthless entertainment and real estate moguls who stand to benefit from an old woman's death. Kean's debut novel, "The Pledge," a tale of cutting-edge suspense and provocative questions of personal loyalty set in a college fraternity, has already had its movie rights optioned. Blake's "The Tentmaker," has an unusual sleuth in Lily James Connor, a female Episcopal priest with a passion for truth that draws her into other people's lives — and their crimes.

Mystery Night is free, although reservations are requested for seating and refreshments. Call (781) 383-2665.

'The Road to Jerusalem'

The Society's annual meeting will be held at Kimball's-by-the-Sea on Sunday, Oct. 24. There will be a social hour from 5 to 6 p.m. and then dinner, followed by an illustrated talk by Curator Dave Wadsworth, the title called "The Road to Jerusalem Revisited." The original presentation of the history of Jerusalem Road was given in the 1980's at a Society meeting, and this will be a revised version of that fascinating subject. Jerusalem Road is one of the most ancient of highways in Cohasset, with a particularly varied history. More will be announced soon about the 1999 annual meeting and dinner with program, but be sure to reserve that date.

The cost is $30 for members and $35 for non-members. For reservations contact the Society at 14 Summer St. or call 383-1434.

'Achieving Financial Success'

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept reservations for four financial planning seminars to be presented by Carolyn J. Malone and David F. Kegel, financial advisors from the American Express Financial Advisors, Inc.

Seminars are free of charge and will be held at Cohasset High School starting at 7:30 p.m., Thursday evenings, beginning Oct. 21. You must register ahead of time by calling the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109.

The first seminar is: "Achieving Financial Success." Thursday, Oct. 21, at 7:30 to 9 p.m.

It will address the six key areas of financial planning. This seminar will touch on topics that will be expanded upon in later sessions: "Building your Net Worth through Saving and Investment Strategies;" retirement strategies, educational planning strategies, protection planning, tax management and estate planning issues.

Memorial in search of funds

During the next two weeks, granite from India, Canada and Vermont will be arriving in Quincy for engraving as part of the Lightkeepers' Memorial at Government Island. The monument will honor Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, the two young lightkeepers who lost their lives when the original Minot's Ledge Light crashed into the sea, unable to withstand the vicious storm which struck the coast on the night of April 16, 1851.

Foundation work on the memorial, a lifelong dream of 86-year old Cohasset resident Herb Jason, is currently in progress. Although a fund for the memorial has raised $30,000 to date, its bank balance is currently a precarious $1,500. Those involved in building the memorial will need approximately $15,000 to complete the project before another winter causes a delay.

Tax deductible donations to the project may be made payable to the Antoine-Wilson Memorial Fund, % Cohasset Town Treasurer, 41 Highland Ave, Cohasset, MA, 02025.

Classes for families offered

South Shore Community Center will sponsor classes for families and parents in the coming weeks. Val Wooley, LISCW, and Harriet Egan LISCW will host the series of classes.

The topics are "Girls and Self Esteem" to be held on Thursday, Oct. 14 at 7:30 until 9 p.m. This class will focus on the development of girls at pre-adolescence and adolescence.

A class on "Mother and Daughter Relationships," how to maintain and strengthen your relationship with your child from pre-adolescence through adolescence will be offered on Thursday, Oct. 21 from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

The final class in the series is "Mothers and Sons" on Thursday, Oct. 28 from 7:30 to 9 p.m., which will focus on how to raise your sons to be confident and strong while enabling them to stay in touch with their feelings, sensitivity, and sense of compassion. The cost of each class is $20 for members and $22 for non-members. (Membership is not required.) You can sign up for any one or all three of the classes by calling SSCC at 781-383-0088. Or stop by the office at 3 North Main St., Cohasset, Monday through Thursday, 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Fridays from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Doggie etiquette

We had a neighbor once who got so angry about the dog next door "doing what comes naturally" on his lawn — that he went after the dog.

But those who are really to blame for these cases of poor canine manners aren't the dogs but their owners.

Not only are dog feces a nuisance but they can be a health hazard. Anyone who's had to scrape the bottom of a sneaker knows what an unpleasant task that is. And if you're enjoying a carillon concert on the common on a pleasant summer evening, you certainly don't want to sit down on the grass and land in a dog deposit.

Cities have long tried to tackle the problem by requiring dog owners to carry "pooper scoopers" so their sidewalks and precious green space don't become obstacle courses.

Now Cohasset may follow suit. The neighboring towns of Hingham and Scituate already have by-laws requiring dog owners to clean up after their pets, although officials there say enforcement is almost impossible.

But Cohasset is a small town with an animal control officer, who thinks a regulation like this can make a difference.

The board of health will conduct a public hearing on the "pooper scooper" issue at 8 p.m. Tuesday. We don't think enacting a regulation requiring dog owners to act responsibly could do any harm.

And if it helps give the dog officer authority to take steps to eliminate the problem, then we're all for it.

Open to all

The vast majority of records created, compiled and maintained by local and state officials are public records. That means that any person has an absolute right to inspect or obtain copies of public records, for a reasonable fee, according to the state public records law.

The law is clear and simple, and is meant to make the process of obtaining a public record simple and straightforward: You don't have to say who you are, why you want a copy of a document or why you want to examine it. You don't have to pay an exorbitant amount for it, and you don't have to argue your case before any kind of tribunal to gain "official" permission.

The trouble is, some keepers of public records are unclear on the law and others are protective of the people who might be named in the requested public records.

Some town or state officials might see themselves as protectors of privacy, interpreting the law as they see fit. Others might believe that unapproved meetings minutes, for example, or an "unpolished" police incident report, are protected from the public until a final, "approved" copy is created.

As part of a wide-spread project, 100 reporters and editors from this newspaper and its sister publications fanned out across eastern Massachusetts recently to test how well the law is working. Each staff member made the rounds in a town he or she does not normally cover, requesting 10 different public records, including the police log, the latest school committee minutes, a copy of a restaurant inspection report, various salary records. We found the responses in different communities to range from complete openness to tight-fisted secrecy regarding what are, under the law, open and public records.

Our purpose behind the project was not to go to battle with a town treasurer or police chief who believes he or she has a right to keep the books closed. The purpose was to see where the hurdles were erected, and to point out where more awareness and education are needed among town and state officials. In addition, the project was aimed at clarifying for residents that they have an absolute right to a wide range of information handled and processed by their public servants. One common thread in our test was that the reporters and editors who requested the records did not automatically identify themselves as being from a newspaper, but fully disclosed their identities and profession when asked. They went into town hall, or the police station, the health board office or the school superintendent's office the same way Jane or John Q. Public might go in to request public records. The law is clear - and subsequent rulings by the secretary of state's office have maintained - that you should not have to leap tall buildings or correctly answer a barrage of questions before you are permitted access to a public document.

The process, by law, should be simple: You simply ask to see the document, and the document is provided.

This week we are publishing the first of two parts focused on our experiences in our public records project, as well as information about the law and how to use it. We believe this is a good law - certainly good for newspaper reporters who are seeking documents for a story, but even more important for private citizens who would carry no weight at all, without the important leverage of the public records law.

We hope our stories serve as a guidebook for readers, food for thought for public officials and grist for discussion by everyone who believes that an open government process is an important part in the building blocks that make up our democracy.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Handicapped parking

TO THE EDITOR:

Despite the reservations of two of the Cohasset selectmen, the Board voted to increase the fine to $100 for parking in a handicapped space without an official handicapped plate or placard.

Good, but the punishment should have been even more severe for those selfish ignoramuses who usurp these parking spaces. The appropriate punishment can't be fully described in a family newspaper.

Having two family members who are handicapped, and being a frequent driver for other handicapped individuals, I'm well aware of how the marked spaces ease the burden, and of the difficulties created by having to park elsewhere because some able-bodied nincompoop used the reserved space.

When confronted, the culprit usually is arrogant, rude, unapologetic and exhibits no-class behavior no matter how fine the automobile or the raiment.

I'm happy to say that the Cohasset Police respond promptly to a report of an infraction. In some less civilized towns the response is slower and less caring.

Although I have a handicapped placard, I would not think of parking in a handicapped space unless I have a handicapped individual in the car or am picking one up.

If the two selectmen had to deal with handicaps on a daily basis, they might think more clearly about the appropriate fine. Whom did the two reluctant selectmen think they were protecting?

QUESTIONS
THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on 4 roll calls and local senators' votes on 1 roll call from the week of September 27-October 1, 1999.
INTERIM BUDGET(H 4768) House 155-0, Senate 35-0, approved different versions of the fourth in a series of temporary budgets to keep the state operatin through October 31 while a House-Senate conference committee attempts to hammer out a compromise version of a $20.8 billion state budget for fiscal year 2000 which began July 1. These monthly budgets are called "one-twelfth" budgets and basically appropriate one-twlefth of last year's spending level. Supporters said that although they are frustrated with the fact that the state has gone three months without a new budget, this temporary budget is the only alternative to shutting down state government. The House and Senate later agreed on a version and sent it to the governor who quickly signed it. (A "Yea" vote is for the temporary budget).	Y	Y
RULING OF CHAIR/TEMPORARY BUDGET(H 4784) House 118-37, upheld Speaker Finneran's ruling that a motion substituting a new version of a temporary budget in place of the one proposed by the governor, is beyond the scope of the governor's version and should not be allowed on the House floor for consideration. The substitute version still funds most of last year's items at a one-twelfth level but adds all items which received identical funding in both the House and Senate version of this year's budget which is tied up in conference committee. Supporters of the speaker's ruling said the substitute version attempts to increase spending beyond the governor's recommendations which are based on fiscal 1999 spending. They argued the rules clearly prohibit such an increase and noted the substitute version is clearly beyond the scope of the governor's temporary budget proposal. Opponents of the speaker's ruling said it is an outrageous ruling that the House is not allowed to change a proposal recommended by the governor. They noted that items in this year's budget which have been agreed upon by both branches cannot be changed and urged funding of these programs now in order to help people across the state instead of waiting until the conferees agree on a compromise version. (A "Yea" vote is for the speaker's ruling prohibiting consideration of the substitute temporary budget on the House floor. A "Nay" vote is against the speaker's ruling).		Y
$50 MILLION ROADS VETO(S 1945) House 138-15, overrode the governor's veto of an additional $50 million in borrowing to provide state aid to local communities for road and bridge projects. The legislature okayed $150 million for these local projects but Cellucci reduced funding to $100 million. Override supporters said cities and towns are depending on the entire $150 million and noted that without it, deteriorating roads and bridges will become a danger to drivers. Override opponents said they support the $150 million but prefer to borrow only $100 million and fund the additional $50 million through regular operating costs in the state budget. They noted borrowing is more expensive, violates the state's borrowing cap and will hurt the state's credit rating. (A "Yea" vote is for the additional $50 million. A "Nay" vote is against it).		Y
EAST TIMOR House 148-0, approved resolutions urging Congress and President Clinton to freeze all U.S. aid to Indonesia until the people of East Timor are free from militia violence, her refugees have returned and the Indonesia military terminates its support of the pro-Indonesia militias and completely withdraws from East Timor. Supporters said the Massachusetts House has a long history of speaking out on issues of foreign policy. They noted that since the East Timor people voted for independence, pro-Indonesia militias have conducted a campaign of terror, killed thousands of East Timorese and forcefully relocated 400,000 others with the support and complicity of the Indoensian military. (A "Yea" vote is for the resolutions).		Y

Arnold, Warren: from actors to pols?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

What is it with our entertainers? Have they become so bored with life that extremely well-paid careers in acting, dancing, and lifting weights, even wrestling and building casinos, cannot satisfy their urge to seek more mountains to conquer?

I learned the other day that Arnold Schwarzenegger, who parlayed steroid-enhanced pectorals into movie stardom, is considering a run for governor of California in 2002.

"I think about it many times. The possibility is there because I feel it inside. I feel there are a lot of people standing still and not doing enough. There's a vacuum," said Arnold in an interview with Talk magazine.

This is on the heels of actor Warren Beatty, the retired man-about-the-boudoir, now a family man, disclosing that he is flirting with the idea of being a candidate for the White House in 2000.

"My fellow Americans..." he began a talk to the Southern California Americans for Democratic Action.

There have been similar disclosures recently by actress Cybill Shepherd, whom we saw (almost all of her) in "The Last Picture Show," and Donald Trump, the casino builder who has entertained us for years with his marital contretemps.

What, you may ask, are their qualifications for the highest office that a state or the nation can offer?

Arnold comes by politics naturally for he is a "Kennedy kin," as the Boston Herald likes to refer to cousins-in-law as much as five times removed from the beachfront hangout in Hyannisport.

What, you may ask, are their qualifications for the highest office that a state or the nation can offer?

He is married to Maria Shriver, whose father, R. Sargent, once ran unsuccessfully for vice president, and whose mother, Eunice, is a sister of JFK, Bobby, Teddy, and all the gang from the Cape.

But Arnold can aspire to an office no higher than governor of a state the size of California because, unfortunately for his political ambitions, he was born in Austria. Besides, he is a Republican.

Beatty was probably inspired to think about running for the White House by his role in "Bulworth," in which he played a senator who had a nervous breakdown and began to tell people what he really meant.

(Does one necessarily follow the other?)

Besides, didn't Warren's wife, Annette Bening, play the part of President Michael Douglas's lady love in "The American President," assuming that an American president is allowed to have a lady love following l'affaire Monica. That's only a step from First Lady.

Beatty, in his pre-Annette days at least, would be a worthy successor to Presidents Bill Clinton and Jack Kennedy, who, according to reports, cut a wide swath through actresses, groupies, and an occasional intern.

This interest in elective office by entertainers dates back to the time when George Murphy danced his way into senator from California, followed by Congressmen Sonny Bono (of Sonny & Cher) and Fred Grandy (the airheaded purser on TV's "Love Boat.")

The biggest actor-pol of them all, of course, was Ronald Reagan, who went from "Bedtime to Bonzo" to two terms in the White House, with a waystop as governor of California.

Which leads us to Jesse Ventura, the erstwhile professional wrestler who is governor of Minnesota (and a possible presidential candidate someday) with a strong resemblance to Senator Bulworth.

He recently stirred up the public relations hornet's nest that's always buzzing around traditional pols by telling Playboy he didn't think very much of "organized religion."

Why do I have this feeling that he would also say:

"Sure, I inhaled. So what?"

What has 300 legs, 400 pieces of luggage, 22 tons of equipment, a musical repertoire ranging from Swing and Hiphop to Ska and World Beat, but nowhere to sleep? The international educational organization and performing group, Up With People.

Up With People will be coming to the Boston area from Oct. 17-25 and all 150 students need host families during their stay. As part of the group's multi-faceted educational program, the students will spend each day during the week of Oct 18-22 alongside corporate employees from BankBoston, Partners Healthcare Systems, Price Waterhouse Coopers and Thompson Financial conducting interactive cultural and diversity awareness activities at ten Boston elementary and middle schools. On Saturday, Oct. 23, the entire cast will participate in Boston's City Year Serve-A-Thon. The cast will have a free day on Sunday before departing for Vermont on Monday morning.

While most of the cast will be housed with families in the immediate Boston area, about a third of the group will be staying with families in Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate. Host families for more than 20 students have already been found, with 50 the ultimate goal.

This seven-day commitment is a valuable and very meaningful contribution to the Up With People students as they learn about life in New England and as you learn about them.

Volunteer host families provide the students with a place to sleep, some meals and transportation to and from a central Cohasset location. Hosting provides an opportunity to perhaps learn about a place you have always wanted to visit or to expose your children to a different culture. This cast of Up With People is comprised of college-age students from 24 countries and all over North America.

This seven-day commitment is a valuable and very meaningful contribution to the Up With People students as they learn about life in New England and as you learn about them. As a thank-you, each host family will receive two complimentary tickets to the new Up With People show, ROADS on Saturday night, October 16th in Lynn. This two-hour musical performance is great family entertainment.

Up With People was founded in 1965 and incorporated in 1968 as an independent, not-for-profit educational organization. For the past 34 years, the purpose of Up With People has been to develop the potential in people to bring the world together through friendship and understanding.

the wall," she said. "The time at camp also allows the kids to get to know some of their classmates that they may not be close friends with."

Classes were held in the mornings and afternoons, but activities were also scheduled for the children at night. After eating dinner together, the students were treated to entertainment such as a magic show and the ever-popular Karaoke Night.

"We sang 'I Want it that Way,' by the Backstreet Boys," said Matt O'Connell, who was joined on stage by Zach Etkind and Ben Libby. "It was awesome." Classmates' reviews of their performance were mixed, however.

To pay for the trip, which cost $200 per student, students held a car wash in May, while they were in the fifth grade. Holding the car wash in May also gave students time to raise money during the summer by babysitting or mowing lawns.

Callahan is meeting with this year's fifth-grade parents in December, and hopes to expand the camp experience next year.

"Right now, we can only take four courses, one Wednesday afternoon, two on Thursday, and one Friday morning," he said. "If we go more days, the students will be able to take more courses."

Cohasset field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick has been coaching both the varsity and junior varsity squads this season.

Bostwick pulls double duty for field hockey

By Mark Ducharme
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High athletic director Clark Chatterton may have to build a roller skating track in front of the school.

The reason that he may have to build the track is for his field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick. The veteran coach has to coach both her varsity and junior varsity team of 35 players, which means bouncing back and forth between the two practices on the two fields in front of the high school.

"It feels like I'm on roller skates half the time," Bostwick chuckles. "I take my vitamins and drink my coffee."

The reason that Bostwick is coaching both teams is that her assistant coach for the last 10 years, Kate Ridge could not return because of her job commitments.

Bostwick herself also had to reconsider her situation as just before the season she received a long awaited teaching job in Carver.

"I told Clark (Chatterton) that I still wanted to coach this team because of the players," Bostwick says. "I could not let the program go. I'm honest with the kids and they have to be honest with me."

Bostwick has coached her current group of players on the varisty since they were in the seventh and eighth grades.

It is not an easy situation for Bostwick, but she is not complaining. She has a lot of help as far as practices and games go.

"My husband (David who is the Marshfield lacrosse coach) helps out with the goalies and the defense, because my strength is offense and midfield," said Bostwick. "The junior high coach, Jean Marois, helped out the week before the season started for her kids. I also get help from the parents and one of my kids' grandfather, Mr. Meehan, rides the bus to the road games."

"I told Clark (Chatterton) that I still wanted to coach this team because of the players, I could not let the program go. I'm honest with the kids and they have to be honest with me."
FIELD HOCKEY COACH DEBBIE BOSTWICK

The coach puts a lot of responsibility on the kids. She relies on them to have self discipline in working on their game and their conditioning.

A typical practice day will begin at 3:00 p.m. for the varsity and go to 5:15 with the junior varsity arriving at 4:15 and going to 5:30. Bostwick will do station work with the varsity on the top field and go down to the junior varsity field which is the bottom field to work on the basics. She will also use a lot of scrimmaging to break down the game for her team.

Bostwick appointed sophomore Abbie Coakley and freshman Heather Perano as captains of the junior varsity team. They are in charge of getting the kids ready for practice and passing messages from the coach to the team.

"Being a teacher, I rely on the listening and learning method," Bostwick says. "The players learn by doing things over and over. A lot of my coaching style is basics. As the players get older, strategy will come up, but with the j.v.'s I try to keep it smart and simple."

Bostwick feels that her method works well for her team in that they are very smart.

"You give them a concept just one time and they understand it."

The night before a game Bostwick is also very busy. She will prepare for the game the night before. She will make phone calls to her players to make sure that everyone is going to be there on both the varsity and junior varsity levels.

So far everything is going all right, though it is tough on the coaches personal life.

"It is tough on my family because I only see my little ones for a short time each day," Bostick said. "But I really enjoy coaching."

The varsity, which just missed the tournament a year ago is making a strong drive to getting into the postseason.

Gridmen ready to host Wave

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Even fans of the Cohasset High football team truly believed that a win over South Shore League powerhouse Carver High would have been quite a stretch.

However, it was the ease in which Carver put the Skippers away in Saturday's 33-0 victory at Alumni Field was the most alarming aspect of Cohasset's second loss in three games.

"Our offensive line did not have a good day," said head coach Tony Rolfe. "I thought we'd do better offensively."

Rolfe, though, does believe the defense played fairly well, despite a Cohasset statistic that jumps out at you so early in the season. In the Skippers' three games, they have allowed a lofty 79 total points.

Opposing offenses have pretty much had their way with the Skippers to the tune of 26.3 points per outing. That average will have to be reduced dramatically if Cohasset intends to turn things around.

The Crusaders simply physically overwhelmed the Skippers, using their superior size to push the defense off the ball and establishing a tone on offense in the early going.

Carver took a 13-0 lead into halftime on a 4-yard touchdown run from quarterback Ray Tolliver and a 3-yard scamper by Bill McDonald.

While the defense did have its problems with the Crusaders, Rolfe singled out linebacker Don Mulligan and defensive end Pat Carbone for their solid play on the defensive side of the ball.

"They got to where they were supposed to be and made the play the most often," Rolfe said.

Carver added TD scores of 1-yard each to Chris Villaneuva and Ray Tolliver in the third quarter for a 13-0 Crusader lead. Tolliver also went to the air for a 40-yard scoring pass to Dave Moore.

Cohasset, once again, had its problems putting points on the board and that took its toll on the Skippers' defense. With so many three-and-outs, the defensive unit spent far too much time on the field, causing the players to tire while attempting to hold off a big,

Skippers rally to tie

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Homecoming weekend is always the most exciting time for fall sports. It is when all the fans come out to cheer on the Skippers.

It is the time of year when all juniors and seniors throw aside any self consciousness in order to take part in the annual Pep Rally festivities. Emotions are running high in the bodies of the players and coaches. It is a time for fun.

Fun was the key aspect for the varsity field hockey team, as it always is. The ladies in blue kicked off Homecoming weekend, which included a boys and girls varsity soccer game and the much anticipated football game, with a scoreless tie against a much larger Hanover squad last Friday.

For the second straight game, senior goalie Melissa Rosano held the opposing team without a goal. Rosano recorded six enormous saves off extremely close corner shot opportunities from Hanover's speedy forwards.

Earlier in the week, Cohasset downed Norwell 1-0. Senior captain Jen Meehan scored the game's lone goal.

Another big success story in this game was the quick recovery of left wing Maggie O'Connor, who played extremely well the entire game.

A mere two days after being accidentally hit in the eye by a teammate's stick during the win against Norwell, in which she exited the game, O'Connor contributed a whole lot on the offensive side during a defensive-minded game.

With less than ten minutes left, O'Connor made two breakaways, weaving through the Hanover midfield, that narrowly missed being the wining effort of the game..

There were over 100 friends, parents and general supporters out to cheer for both sides, providing for a very enjoyable environment for the field hockey team.

Even some of the Hanover enthusiasts were in the spirit of things, cheering Rosano after some terrific corner shot saves.

However, the Hanover bench was not the least bit concerned during the game. Being from a much larger town, they surely came to Cohasset with the thought of a win.

But the stellar play by the Skippers kept the Hanover team loudly complaining how "the grass was too long", and they were "not used to it."

Hanover also did not have much

Skippers turning the table on opponents

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

This what Cohasset High boys soccer coach Juan Ramos is used to.

After starting the season out 0-2-1, the Skippers have rallied, winning four out of their last five games to improve to 4-3-1 on the season.

"Part of it is we've played some easy teams," said Ramos with a laugh. "But the kids have been working very hard, and we've also beaten some very good teams."

For Ramos, the explanation is simple.

"The boys are getting the idea," said Ramos. "All of the things we've been trying to instill in practice, they've been able to use in games."

It's been a balanced attack for the Skippers.

"The whole team's been playing great," said Ramos. "Everybody's stepped up. We've had different people scoring. The key players have responded."

Captains Ben Peterson and Kevin Devito have delivered, as well as Eric Shea, Doug O'Brien and Matt Bilodeau. Ben Bixby and Peter Maitland have also contributed.

"They're doing very well," said Ramos. "We're beating teams we haven't defeated in a while."

It has been a successful season for the squad so far, but Ramos knows there is still plenty of soccer left to be played.

"I told the kids at practice yesterday," said Ramos. "Everyone's happy at school with how well they're doing, and they're congratulating them and that's good. But we still have some work to do. We have to continue to improve and keep working. We have to have a good effort in practice. The kids have been tremendous. They've been working hard every day."

The Skippers have defeated Mashpee, Hull, Carver and Abington so far, and tied a Randolph team that was undefeated at the time and has only lost once since.

This week, Cohasset plays two of the teams it lost to previously. The Skippers faced Norton yesterday, and is scheduled to play Norwell today.

The Clippers are a perfect 8-0 and are in first place in the South Shore League.

"We've had a lot of rain," said Ramos. "So now we have to start making up games. We have two tough games on consecutive days with teams we've already lost to. It's going to be difficult facing Norwell after having a game the day before."

But Cohasset is hoping to continue to beat the odds this season.

to be pleased with once junior Sarah Kidder rocketed a penalty shot directly into the knee cap of a Hanover defender.

"I'm just glad she got up, and could walk off the field." Kidder says.

This game not only was an adrenaline rushed-contest, and tying a heavily favored squad like Hanover is a tremendous emotional boost. They have been sticking together, all season, and it does not look like that will change any time soon.

The team's record now stands at 3-2-3 with matches at Notre Dame, Hull, and Carver to follow.

It was an exciting weekend, with many people coming out to root on the Blue. The field hockey team's hopes of making it to the end of year tournament in Nantucket are still very much alive. Eight games tucked safely in their belts, and with eight more left to play, only time will tell.

2-5 with a 1-0 victory over Norwell and a scoreless tie with the South Shore League's top team, Hanover.

The only goal in the Norwell game came from tri-captain Jennifer Meehan off a corner from Andi Shaughnessy, and the Skippers defense made the goal stand up.

"We dominated the whole game," the coach commented. "We're just missing on our corners. We have to be more consistent on our corners."

The big play for Cohasset in their scoreless tie with Hanover came from Sarah Kidder. She prevented a Hanover goal from being scored into an empty net.

The Skippers will try to improve upon things against Notre Dame Academy on Tuesday before travelling to Hull on Thursday evening.

aggressive offense.

Defensively, the Crusaders were just as tough and stopped Cohasset in its tracks. "Their defense was very tough," Rolfe said. "We weren't able to react, physically."

The good news is that the Skippers are just one win away from reaching .500 again and match up much better with Abington, Cohasset's next opponent. Rolfe fully expects Jim Kelliher's offense to run the ball early and often, as has been the Green Wave's tendency since Kelliher has been head coach.

Along with the run, Rolfe believes Abington will throw the ball more than it has in the past. The Green Wave has gone to the air more often in its last two games and Rolfe sees no reason why Abington won't try it against the Skippers come Friday night at 7 p.m.

His No. 1 concern is the offense and its inability to carry out sustained drives. That, he said, will be key against Abington.

"We expect him to throw the ball more than usual," Rolfe said. "We have to establish ourselves on offense. If we do that, we'll be in the game."

If the Skippers are in the game, chances are good they will reach the .500 mark and, once again, start building on a winning record.

Mendel Rd. sewer problem debated at board meeting years old," Paul Jenner of Paul G. Jenner Associates told the Mariner last month. "It failed hydraulically not long after it was put in.. To be honest, I'd be very concerned about putting in another system."

Mendel Road residents would like to connect to the sewer, but since they are outside of the Central District, the sewer commission has denied that request.

"We were permitted for 300,000 gallons for the Central Sewer District," sewer commission chairman Gary Vanderweil told selectmen. "We are all out of capacity."

Selectman Thomas Callahan disagreed with Vanderweil's analysis of the situation.

"There's always been extra capacity," Callahan said. "Newtonville [a group of homes off Atlantic Avenue] was allowed to connect. It's a real bad situation at Mendel Road."

Vanderweil said that the sewer commission believes the Mendel Road residents can construct a system that will meet Title 5 regulations.

"It remains to be seen if it really is a bad situation," he told Callahan. "It's an economic situation. They can make a mounded system. It's expensive, but they can do it. We are all out of capacity for the Central District."

"It remains to be seen if it really is a bad situation. It's an economic situation. They can make a mounded system. It's expensive, but they can do it. We are all out of capacity for the Central District."
SEWER COMMISSION CHAIRMAN GARY VANDERWEIL

The commission has, however, allowed for capacity for vacant lots in the district, which may be able to be built upon because of the impending sewer hookups.

"Why are the vacant lots able to connect when there are people in existing buildings with existing septic problems?" Callahan asked.

Vanderweil explained the sewer commission's position in hooking up the vacant lots instead of Mendel Road.

"There are 700 buildings in the sewer district and only 25 lots," he said. "That's a very small proportion of lots. The Central District included the lots and the treatment plant at 100 Pond St. from the get go. The streets in the district were established through a wide-open forum. We got as much capacity as we could and later added Newtonville because there was no other option. It's very difficult to go to lot owners and tell them we're not going to hook them up now and we're going to do Mendel Road instead."

Fellow sewer commissioner Ray Kasperowicz urged selectmen to let them finish the project instead of debating the issue of Mendel Road.

"We don't see Mendel Road as a problem because there's a logic to what is being done," he said. "Let's take care of what's on our plate right now and finish this project. We're spending taxpayer money and these are expensive projects. Once we start getting arbitrary, as we would on Mendel Road, we need to take a step back."

Callahan disagreed with the logic of the sewer commission's thinking on Mendel Road.

"I would strongly urge you to rethink your position on this," he told the sewer commissioners. "We should be connecting existing homes that have septic problems to the sewer before we connect vacant lots."

While he did not take a position on whether Mendel Road should be made part of the Central District, Selectman Merle Brown acknowledged that the problem needs to be looked into.

"We do have these situations in town," he said. "I feel there should be meetings between the Board of Health and the Sewer Commission to see if the problem areas can be worked out somehow. We know where the failures are."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the sewer commission has made a conscious effort to sewer the parts of town that do not have the room to construct septic systems that would be compliant with Title 5.

"When these districts were prepared, they weren't established blindly," she said. "Those houses in the hillside part of town, which are inside the Central District, are very close together. There just isn't the room to put in Title 5 systems."

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced at the meeting that he had received a citizen petition article for the Special Town Meeting in December to include Mendel Road in the Central District.

Vanderweil said such a vote would be of little consequence.

"Even if it passes, there's no capacity for it," he said.

Health board may call for 'pooper scoopers' which is just long enough for the animal to use the street to relieve itself, Godzik said. Some other areas where problems occur are the public walkway between the town parking lot and South Main Street and the town common.

To put an end to the problem, the board of health is considering enacting a "pooper scooper" regulation and will conduct a public hearing on the issue at 8 p.m., Tuesday.

The regulation would include fines for dog owners who either willfully or through failure to exercise control allow their dog to defecate on any public place or any private property other than their own.

Both Scituate and Hingham have "pooper scooper" by-laws passed by town meeting, although officials in both towns say enforcement is difficult to impossible.

"You can't enforce it without taking a picture or producing some DNA evidence," laughed Scituate Town Clerk Bobbie Maffucci.

She recalled that the by-law was not the result of an outcry from residents upset with dog owners but rather part of a package of animal control laws adopted from the county in the late 80s.

"At that time, we accepted our own dog by-laws when we pulled out of the county licensing system," she said.

Under the Scituate by-law, violators face fines of $25 for the first offense in a calendar year, $50 for the second and $75 for the third.

Scituate Animal Control Officer Kim Gilsdorf said policing violators is a problem.

"It's almost an impossible situation," she said. "There are 1,500 licensed dogs in town and that's growing by the minute. And I'm the only one who enforces the regulation."

The regulation would include fines for dog owners who either willfully or through failure to exercise control allow their dog to defecate on any public place or any private property other than their own.

Hingham animal control officer Al Currie said "pooper scooper" regulations are part of the town's animal control by-laws. But he said complaints are rare in Hingham.

The Hingham by-law also carries fines of $25 for the first offense and $50 for the second. But, Currie said, short of his witnessing the dog in action – enforcement action is a tough call.

"The witness would have to fill out a form and 90 percent don't want to get involved," Currie said. "They say, 'I've known my neighbor for 20 years and don't want to get him mad at me.'"

But Godzik thinks the regulation could have the right effect in Cohasset.

The town's animal control officer, Paul Murphy — who drives around town a lot — brought the proposed regulation before the health board.

"This would make people aware and give Paul the ability to have some teeth by imposing a fine if he sees someone in violation," Godzik said.

Murphy said he would welcome the new regulation.

"At least if it's on the books and we see a flagrant violation, we can enforce it," he said. Murphy, who said he's fielded many complaints about the situation, said the tree & park department is his biggest supporter.

"Tree and park is livid about it. It's really gotten out of control," Murphy said.

Godzik pointed out that kids playing ball on the town common or people sitting on the grass there to enjoy a carillon concert should not have to worry about dog feces.

"The goose feces there are bad enough," Godzik said.

A quick survey of area pet supply stores revealed that "pooper scoopers' are readily available. Petco in Weymouth sells two models ranging in price from $7.99 to $20. And Fitts Mill in Scituate sells a scissors-type metal model for $11.99 and disposable baggies for $2.50 for a pack of five.

Violations common

Joseph Green may be on a crusade, but his experience with public officials who refuse to release public records is common in Massachusetts, according to an investigation by the Community Newspaper Co.

Nearly 100 reporters went to 85 cities and towns during the past four months to request records to test officials' compliance with the Public Records Law, which was designed to provide an open door to government for citizens seeking information that could affect their lives as taxpayers and community residents.

The idea behind the law is that citizens can use it to find out how schools spend their money, how much a town spends paving the streets and who's avoiding his tax obligations. Citizens also may get vital reports such as a town's emergency response plan or violations of building and sanitary codes.

For instance, Joanne Ferguson of Walpole asked her local board of health last July for a copy of a comprehensive site assessment for a landfill that she feared might be contaminating her well water. Town officials told her they had given away their only copy of the reports, so she appealed to the state's supervisor of public records. The town eventually produced the report, which alleviated Ferguson's fears.

"Our neighborhood wasn't affected by the landfill," she said. "But I wouldn't have known that if I had not seen the report."

Access to such documents has become ever more important at the local level for citizens to remain active in the process of government decision making, according to Janet Domenitz, executive director of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group.

"A healthy democracy relies on this kind of information being publicly available," she said.

But from police headquarters and town halls to local school districts and health departments, some public officials openly defy the law, the CNC investigation found. Officials often treat public records as private papers, deciding on a whim if and when to provide public access. Consider:

- Police departments in 39 towns refused to provide copies of crime reports.
- School departments in 19 towns declined to release the latest minutes of the school committee.
- Twenty-one towns demanded the identity of those requesting restaurant inspections.
- Ten towns would not provide a list of delinquent taxpayers.
- Ten police departments declined to provide a copy of the daily log.
- Six school departments declined to release their superintendent's expense reports.
- Five towns refused to release a list of teachers' salaries.

"This is really outrageous," Domenitz said when told about the results. "I can't believe they're getting away with it. Maybe some of these towns don't realize the public is entitled to this information."

Mike Widmer, president of the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation, concurred.

"My impression is that the culture of many municipalities is to operate in secret and out of public view," Widmer said. "The fact that this many communities held back information is shocking on one level, but not surprising given the culture of so many communities. There tends to be a small-town mentality in which the town fathers and mothers believe they have the corner on truth, and they're uncomfortable with public scrutiny."

To test whether the average citizen can gain access to public records, newspaper reporters walked into town halls, police departments and other agencies to request an inspection report of a local restaurant, the police log, a crime report, school committee minutes, and the salary of the public works director. They also asked for teacher salaries, school superintendent's expense reports, police overtime, a list of delinquent taxpayers and the e-mails of elected officials concerning government business.

What they found in 20 percent of the requests is that public officials often quiz people about their identity and why they want the documents. Under the state law adopted in the wake of Watergate, which caused a new focus on open government, officials are not supposed to interrogate people seeking public records.

The law says that if a record is public for one person, it's public for anyone. A person need not give his or her name or specify a reason for seeking public information.

The new law put the burden on the government to disclose public records or prove that they are exempt for valid reasons.

On the surface, Massachusetts appears to give official support to the open records law: It is one of just four states that created an agency to help citizens get access to government documents.

However, the number of appeals for help from the supervisor of public records has increased from 228 in 1982 to 801 last year - one indication that government entities are, in fact, throwing up hurdles to open records requests. At the same time the law is being used by citizens, it's increasingly becoming a political tool. For example, citing the public records law, the State Democratic Party is currently requesting Gov. Paul Cellucci's calendar since his election on Nov. 3, 1998.

"We just want to see if he takes his job seriously," said Randi Woods, the party's communications director.

Meanwhile, the Massachusetts Republican Party, citing the law, is asking for copies of this year's schedules from Senate President Thomas F. Birmingham and House Speaker Thomas M. Finneran in the wake of the budget impasse.

Some fear such overtly political requests poison the well for ordinary citizens.

"This law is clearly subject to abuse to make political trouble," Widmer said. "That makes people defensive and suspicious. But the law is the law. It's not made to be broken, even if it has imperfections."

Closed doors on open records

In one out of five of all the requests Community Newspaper Co. journalists made for public records, officials insisted that reporters reveal their names, affiliation and usually the reason they wanted the documents.

In Cambridge, for instance, an official questioned a reporter about her reason for requesting an inspection record for a local restaurant. The official, Senior Sanitary Inspector Joseph Nicoloro, demanded to see the reporter's business card or press credentials.

After the reporter, Hazel Trice Edney, replied that she did not have a card or press credentials yet, he reportedly told another government employee to get a camera and threatened to take a photo of her. Nicoloro told the reporter that the procedure is for requesters to tell him in writing "who you are and who authorized you to come here."

According to Secretary of State William F. Galvin, "The issue is whether a record is public or not."

Under the law, a request for public records can be made verbally and does not need to be put in writing.

In a later interview, Nicoloro denied that he threatened to take a photo of the reporter.

"My records here are public," he said. "You can come in off the street and ask to see an inspection report. I've been in this business for 33 years, and I have nothing to hide."

Other public officials literally closed their doors and walked away from a request. When reporter DeAnna Putnam went to the police department in Hingham, for instance, to get a crime report, officials sent her first to the front desk. When she returned to the records department a few minutes later as she told officials she would, she found the office locked up, the lights out and the employees gone. As a result, she could not get the record.

"These are civilians who leave at 3 p.m. They start at 7 a.m.," said Hingham Police Chief Joachim-Ingo Borowski. "Anytime something like that happens, talk to the boss and I'll help. I'm open and nearly all our records are open to the public."

A two-hour wait

Under the law, minutes of open meetings become public as soon as they are written and do not need to be approved before they are made available to the public. Even hand-written notes by a secretary are considered public records.

"There is no requirement that the board transcribe those minutes in response to a request," said a guide from the secretary of state.

In Weston, however, the assistant superintendent, John Stayn, made a reporter wait for two hours until the most recent school committee minutes were typed up. Stayn finally let the reporter look at the minutes in his office while he sat across from her, eating lunch and asking her what she was looking for.

In a later interview, Stayn said he thought the school committee had to approve the minutes before it released them to the public. The issue appears to be unclear in many other municipalities. Public officials denied reporters access to school committee minutes nearly 30 percent of the time in the Community Newspaper Co. survey, often claiming they had not yet been approved.

As Galvin noted, some public officials remain unclear about the law, even though his supervisor of public records holds training sessions about it from town to town at their request. And Ken White, executive director of Common Cause of Massachusetts, said: "You've got to give some people some slack in fulfilling the law if they're not aware of the law. However, there is a burden of responsibility on public officials to know this law and to comply with all its provisions."

E-mails count, too

Under the public records law, every record made or received by a government entity is presumed to be a public record. In a March 8 memo to all municipal clerks, the state's supervisor of public records, Carolyn Kelly MacWilliam, made it clear that "e-mail created or received by an employee of a government unit is a public record" subject to public access.

But in response to a Boston TAB request, several Boston City Council members recently claimed their e-mails were exempt from public disclosure. MacWilliam ordered the Boston City Council members to release their e-mails, but they ignored her decision and now the case is pending with the state attorney general, the final arbiter in such disputes.

Most town officials don't use e-mail. But in Acton, Assistant Town Manager John Murray said he has no problem making e-mails public and complying with the law. The town has set up a file of all e-mails addressed to selectmen or to the town manager.

In sharp contrast with Boston, Acton keeps a three-ring binder with all the e-mails printed out. Within minutes of a request, a reporter was allowed to read all the e-mails of the Acton selectmen and make copies - for free.

"E-mail is simply another form of communication covered by the public records law and the open meetings law," said White of Common Cause. "The laws were designed to prevent public officials from acting behind a cloak of secrecy."

Police log: 'What's that?'

Last year, then-Attorney General Scott Harshbarger made it clear that police blotters, or logs, should be made available to the public in an advisory letter he sent to police departments. The law states that "Each police department shall make, keep and maintain a daily log ... all entries shall, unless otherwise provided by law, be public records."

Yet in 10 towns surveyed, the police denied access to their logs. In Boston, the police sent reporter Dana Wilhoit from precinct to headquarters and back again. When asked for the log at Area A station, one officer responded: "What's that?" The police denied access to the log and referred her to headquarters, where department spokeswoman, Margot Hill, said the log should have been made public at the precinct level.

In 39 towns, the police also denied access to incident or crime reports.

Some offer an open book

But the Medfield police chief has developed a system to make the log and crime reports public all of the time. Every day, he reads through the previous night's log, blots out the complainant's name and deletes the exact street address to protect privacy, and then records the nature of the call and response.

"It's a public record. We leave a copy of that sanitized log out front and we let whoever wants it to take a copy of it," said Medfield Police Chief Richard Hurley. "The public is entitled to them. It's pretty clear."

Officials in 41 towns granted access to restaurant inspections during the newspaper survey. But in 20 towns, they insisted the requesters identify themselves and explain the purpose of their request. And in Ashland, the inspector made a report available, but called the restaurant to warn its owner that a request had been made to see its inspection record.

"Bad publicity for a restaurant is the kiss of death, so in fairness to the restaurant they were notified," said Arthur Shapiro, chairman of the board of health in Ashland. "I don't see anything wrong with that. I have a basic philosophy in town that we are partners with the establishments in town."

That sense of partnership is an issue in some towns.

For example, one of the touchiest topics was delinquent taxpayers, even though many towns publish a list of them in local newspapers on an annual basis. Twenty-four towns in the survey released lists of delinquent taxpayers, 10 refused to do so, and eight insisted on knowing the identity of the requesters.

"It's a public record, but I'm very careful whom I give it to," said Ipswich Treasurer and Collector Virginia Cleary. She said she wanted to protect people who had not paid their taxes because of hardship.

In Acton, Assistant Town Manager Murray told a reporter that he had no problem releasing a list of delinquent taxpayers, except he noted that there are some widows who just don't have the ability to pay and so he doesn't "go after them."

Public officials granted access to teacher salaries in 33 towns, but in five towns they denied access to the public information and in seven towns they insisted on knowing the identity of the requester. In Cambridge, for instance, an employee in the human resources office for the city's schools scolded the reporter for asking for teachers' salaries.

"Who are you?" the official demanded of the reporter. "You just walk in off the street and say you want to know what a teacher's salary is? Yes, this is public information like you say, but I'd think you'd raise hell."

Later, Jim Conry, executive director of management services at the school department, gave the reporter the schools' annual budget, which lists all teacher salaries, but only after he verified the reporter's name and affiliation.

"It's up to local citizens to flex their civic muscles and for local officials to do the right thing no matter who's asking for the records," said MassPIRG's Domenitz. ■

What the law says

The public records law states that any person has an absolute right to inspect or obtain copies of public records for a reasonable fee. The request may be made verbally or in writing; it has to provide a reasonable description of the information being sought; and it may pertain to records generated, received or maintained by computer.

The rules require the record holder to provide a written, good-faith estimate for the cost of complying with the request when it will exceed $10. If the estimate is too much, then the request can be pared down. The custodian may charge 20 cents a page for photocopies and 50 cents a page for computer printouts, plus a prorated hourly wage of the lowest-paid employee capable of completing the response to the request.

Every record made or received by a government entity is presumed to be a public record, unless it is explicitly exempt by law. Exemptions include: personnel and medical files; information that may constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy; investigative materials that would probably prejudice effective law enforcement; commercial trade secrets; unopened bids for government contracts; and names and addresses of people with licenses to carry or possess firearms.

Open & closed records

You may presume that every record made by a government entity is open to public access, unless it is subject to a specific exemption allowed under the law. The records you may obtain include:

- Audits, annual reports and studies
- Expense reports and other financial information

- Investigative materials that could harm an ongoing case
- Trade secrets or financial information provided with a promise of confidentiality

RESTRICTED ACCESS

business card the individual at the police station refused to provide the public information.

The dispatcher then called the newspaper's office and wanted it verified that he was, indeed, a reporter. When it was explained that the reporter was testing how easy it is to gain public information, the dispatcher noted, "Oh, that's too bad. He failed your test in getting the information."

In reality, it was the dispatcher and the police department who failed in this case because they did not provide the information as allowed under the state law.

Gaining access to public records on the South Shore isn't as easy as the state Open Records law intends and there were numerous challenges in getting what any average citizen should have access to. But there were also many towns and officials who welcomed the requests and easily compiled.

In Cohasset, for example, when officials and town workers were approached for information, they easily complied to the requests. Even in the midst of a power outage on the day the information was requested, the board of health office offered to fax a copy of the latest restaurant inspection once the power was restored.

The police log for the day before wasn't immediately available due to the outage, but the individual requesting it could obtain a copy later in the day, according to the officer at the front desk. In all the cases, Cohasset officials turned over the information without delay.

Hingham, in most cases, also compiled in a quick and smooth manner. Salary charts for teachers and administrators, for example, were handed over readily. Once it was requested in writing, the treasurer's office provided a record of delinquent taxpayers. Also, police overtime figures were readily available, with no questions asked.

In most cases on the South Shore, with a few exceptions, information was provided in a timely manner and within the guidelines of the open records law. There were a number of instances where reporters were asked to identify themselves, which they did without question. However, according to Secretary of State William Galvin, officials are going too far when they ask for identification. He said any citizen should be able to go into a town hall or other public office and get information without being asked to identify themselves.

In the case of Hanover, the town in almost all instances complied. The person manning the police station front desk on this particular day said a copy of the previous day's log could not be furnished, but the reporter was encouraged to look at the department's original.

The reporter ran into a challenge in Abington, however, when he sought the same information from police. He was asked to identify himself and then told, "you're not the regular reporter." He was asked for his license and business card before the log was furnished. When the reporter singled out an incident and asked for the report, he was told to "get it from an attorney" because the police could not hand it out (which is not the case).

At the school superintendent's office, the clerk would not furnish expense reports or teacher salaries in Abington. The individual would not give out the information since the superintendent was not available.

A similar scenario played out in Norwell. Superintendent Donald Beaudette was out the day a reporter requested the information and the secretary was very curious about the request. "It's just such an unusual request," she said.

She said Beaudette he would not be back until July 29 (several weeks after the request) and then would be out for the entire month of August. She required that the reporter write down his request for salaries, expense reports and copies of the superintendent's e-mails of school business.

The reporter openly said he was doing a research project on intergovernmental emails and that we would like copies of all his correspondence concerning schools or school policies. When asked, he told the secretary who he was and who he worked for. He then received a call from attorney Mike Long on July 28 saying the department would need 10 days to get the emails and also that they would need to check into the cost of releasing the emails.

After several messages, the reporter received a fax from Long on Aug. 11 concerning the $90-$100 fee which would have to be paid in order to get the emails.

"There will need to be some qualitative judgment applied," Long noted, medical, personal issues of employees etc... He said that would take time and would need to decipher through these using his professional judg ment and he works for about (they calculated) $45/hour. They estimated that it would take two hours.

The fee request was reasonable. However, people should be aware that the law states the fee should only amount to what it costs for the person paid the lowest hourly rate, who can successfully perform the job. Ultimately, a few days later someone from the superintendent's office met with the reporter and he received the information, including the e-mails.

State officials say what was discovered by the various reporters in the towns indicates many public officials remain unclear about the law, even though his supervisor of public records holds training sessions about it from town to town.

How this story was done

To check how the open record system works in Massachusetts, more than 100 reporters from Community Newspaper Company requested a uniform set of 10 documents from Police Departments, town halls, school departments and boards of health in communities across Eastern Massachusetts..

In towns they usually did not cover, the reporters first made verbal requests for a copy of a restaurant inspection, the police log, a police incident report, the latest school committee minutes, and the public works director's salary – all public records.

To test official reactions to ordinary citizens, the reporters first asked for the records without offering identification. However, they always identified themselves as reporters when asked.

In fact, that became part of the test – could a citizen require a public record without being quizzed about who they are and why they want the record.

In a second round of new requests, another team of reporters went to towns they cover on a regular basis and asked verbally and in writing for teachers salaries, the school superintendent's expense reports for last year, total police overtime for 1998, a list of delinquent taxpayer, and e-mails concerning government business.

COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY

Price a sticking point for Arrowwood purchase

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Just a few weeks ago, the Department of Environmental Management (DEM), the town of Scituate, and the town of Cohasset all wanted to purchase Arrowwood Estates, a planned 18-home subdivision on 65 acres of land next to Wompatuck State Park. State and local officials wanted to buy the land for open space and water protection purposes. Officials from DEM said they needed an appraisal of the land's value to move forward with a purchasing plan. Unofficial estimates gauged the value of the land at about $1-$2 million, but last week a professional appraiser assessed the value of the property at $3.14 million.

Vincent Bucca, a Scituate resident who has tried to convince state and local officials to buy the land, said the Arrowwood purchase seems unlikely at this point.

"We were assuming one price, and the estimate came in at the much higher price," Bucca said. "What can you do? That's the market value for those lots. Even with an eminent domain purchase, we'd end up paying a similar amount."

Prior to the $3.14 million estimate, DEM had been working on a plan that would have shared up to a $2 million purchase costs among the state, Cohasset, Scituate, and a few non-profit organizations, Bucca said. Under the plan, Cohasset, Scituate and the non-profits would have to come up with $750,000, DEM would match that amount with another $750,000, and the state would offer the developers — Mark and Walter Winchester and a partner — a $500,000 tax break. But DEM lost interest when the price soared to $3.14 million, according to Bucca.

Prior to the $3.14 million estimate, DEM had been working on a plan that would have shared up to a $2 million purchase costs among the state, Cohasset, Scituate, and a few non-profit organizations.

"After that, DEM seemed to step away even though Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand expressed support for the project and has $7 million in a discretionary fund for land purchases, Bucca said."

Bucca said he has lost faith in DEM's land acquisition program, especially after the agency spent $8 million for 200 acres of land in Mattapoisett last year. DEM bought the land without support from people in Mattapoisett, Bucca said. He added that DEM could have purchased the land a couple of years earlier for only $3 million.

"They overspent $8 million on Mattapoisett for a project that had no local support, and now they're not interested in 65 acres connected to an existing state park for $3 million," Bucca said. "Once the developer puts houses on those lots, an access to Wompatuck State Park is gone forever."

Currently, the developer has completed a road and a shared septic system for the homes. Because Arrowwood was approved in the 1970s, the septic plans do not have to conform to all current Title 5 regulations, Bucca said.

Water Commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. said Arrowwood's shared septic system is only 200 feet from the Lily Pond watershed, not the 400-foot distance currently mandated by Title V. Two of the homes will be within 100 feet of the watershed. Storm-water runoff from Arrowwood will drain back to Lily Pond, carrying possible contaminants into the watershed. The developer made some provisions to carry storm-water away from the watershed. But some of the units are placed in a configuration that allows storm-water to drain to two tributaries that carry water back to the Lily Pond watershed, McNabb said.

Mark Bartlett of Norfolk Environmental, the water commission's consultant. is examining the Arrowwood plan for other potential impacts to the Lily Pond watershed. Norfolk's initial report indicated that the lots closest to the reservoir lacked any kind of drainage controls which, combined with the septic systems, could pose a threat to Cohasset's drinking water supply.

McNabb said the water commission will consider other water protection measures if the plan to purchase Arrowwood fails to materialize. In an e-mail to Town Manager Mark Haddad dated Sept. 23, 1999, McNabb said one possibility is paying to re-direct the liquid flow from the septic system away from the watershed.

Bucca is urging residents to contact their state legislators, Secretary Durand, and David McGowan at DEM to try and win state support for the purchase of Arrowwood.

Village fitness club moving to Rt. 3A

Needs room to expand for growing clientele

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Business in Cohasset Village has been so good — it has forced Scott Ruisi to find more room to serve his customers.

The owner of Fitness First with a fitness club on South Main Street and an office on Ripley Road said he is moving into the second floor of the former Seavey engineering building on Rt. 3A to expand.

"We did well in the village," he said. "But we needed to grow."

"I hope whatever goes in brings a lot of foot traffic."
—Dean Rizzo, village revitalization task force

The fitness club occupied the former Colonial Pharmacy space. Building owner and pharmacist Ralph Harrison, who ran the pharmacy there for 35 years, said the space is already rented.

He wouldn't comment on who the new tenant is.

"The new people will make their own announcement," he said.

But Harrison did say it's a great location and business in the village is looking good.

"It was always a good location for me," Harrison said. "I don't think there's a vacant spot in the village right now except for the Red Lion Inn which is under construction."

Dean Rizzo, a member of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors and chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force, said the fitness club was a good draw.

"A steady stream of people took advantage of the programs he had there," Rizzo said. "I hope whatever goes in brings a lot of foot traffic."

Rizzo agreed with Harrison that times in the village are good.

"I wouldn't anticipate the space would stay empty as long as before because business is more vibrant in Cohasset and the village area," he said.

Jeff Thayer, Ruisi's landlord on Ripley Road where Ruisi had his training office, hopes more retailers will come to the village, although at 400 square feet, his location is more suited for an office. Thayer said he has had some interest in the site.

Ruisi said his fitness business is tripling in size at the new location and will offer a full array of services including baby-sitting, aerobics classes, massage, a steam room and full service locker rooms.

The village site had 2,400 square feet, the new location has 7,000 square feet, he said.

Ruisi is holding an open house from noon to 3 p.m. Saturday and plans to open on Tuesday. The Seavey building is across from Jonathan Livingston Seagull Square on Rt. 3A.

He said 85 percent of his clients are from Cohasset and in the new location, he expects to draw people from Scituate and Hingham, as well.

After four years in the village — three with the fitness club — Ruisi said he would miss the village, although parking for his clients will no longer be a headache. The Seavey building has plenty of on-site parking.

"We are a village success story," he said. "We love the town and we're here to serve the community and take advantage of a bigger space."

Mammography van coming to town hall Saturday

One day there may be a single method for early detection of breast cancer. Until then, using a combination of methods will increase your chances of detecting cancer in an early stage. Here is your personal checklist for breast cancer detection:

Mammography for all women who are age 40 or older; a regular breast exam by a health professional; monthly breast self-examination; personal alertness for changes in the breasts; readiness to discuss quickly any such changes with a doctor.

The above guidelines are recommended by the National Cancer Institute. A doctor's order is not necessary to have a mammogram but ask your doctor what he/she would recommend in your case and cooperate with the doctor in planning your health care.

The Mobile Diagnostics Inc. Mammography Van will be at the Cohasset Town Hall parking lot Saturday, Oct. 9, from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. For an appointment call the Social Service League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

CANCER TALK WITH CLAIRE FUNG, MD

Screening for Breast Cancer

Breast cancer is not only widespread, but also on the rise. This year, it will strike 5,000 Massachusetts women. While research has yet to explain what causes the disease, we are often able to detect breast cancer in its early stages.

If detected early, the disease is usually treatable and patients have a better choice of treatments. Therefore, women should get into the habit of examining their breasts monthly for lumps and other suspicious changes. Most breast cancers are found by women themselves which attests to the importance of breast self exams.

In addition, women between the ages of 20 and 40 should have a physician conducting a clinical breast exam, at a minimum of every three years. Women over 40 should have an annual clinical breast exam.

At 35, women should ask their physician about a baseline mammogram or breast x-ray. A mammogram can identify cancers too small to be detected by a breast self-exam or a clinical breast exam. A baseline mammogram at 35 is highly recommended, especially for women with a family history of breast cancer.

Women 40-49 face conflicting advice on mammograms. Annual mammograms during this age period, when the breast is younger and more dense, can give rise to false indications of cancer or of its absence.

While aware of these risks, my own experience suggests that women aged 40-49 can benefit from annual mammograms. As with all cancers, every case of breast cancer is unique and must be assessed accordingly. If you are in this age group, discuss having an annual mammogram with your physician.

Women over 50 experience an increased risk of breast cancer. The disease, however, is also easier to detect. Therefore, annual mammograms are not only beneficial for women in this age group, but are highly recommended.

Of course, no one method of screening — breast self-exam, clinical breast exam or mammography — is ideal. All three methods have a role to play in detecting this disease. Learn more about them and give yourself an edge in the fight against breast cancer.

An invitation from First Parish

On Tuesday, Oct. 12, at 7 p.m., Interim Minister Rev. Colin Leitch will introduce an adult program designed specifically for members and friends new to Unitarian Universalism, but open also to interested adults regardless of religious background. The four weekly sessions will be held in the Parish House at 23 North Main St., Cohasset. Each session will last not more than 90 minutes.

The primary goals of "The New UU" program are to deepen understanding of Unitarian Universalism, and to explore the implications of Unitarian Universalism for life within and beyond the congregation. Many who consider joining a UU congregation, are unaccustomed to the experience of acceptance and personal growth that is possible in a liberal church, where the essential test of religion is not an institutional formula, but how it teaches us to act in response to the hardest challenges of life.

Capacity is limited. Reservations may be made by calling the parish office at 383-1100 during office hours, 9 a.m. - 2 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Henry Dormitzer

Henry Dormitzer, 90, of Cohasset, died suddenly Oct. 1 at his home. Mr. Dormitzer conceived and sponsored Operation Sail, the Tall Ships events in Boston Harbor in 1976, 1980 and 1984, delighting millions of people. Probably no other event in that era so completely stirred the imagination and enthusiasm of Bostonians, who crowded every viewing spot along the shores of the harbor and filled it with a sea of small boats. In 1980, he founded the New England Historic Seaport located in the Charlestown Navy Yard. It was dedicated to building character in young people through sail training. Through the Seaport, he built the 125-foot schooner Spirit of Massachusetts (a faithful replica of a 19th century Fredonia class fishing schooner) to provide sail training for these young people and it has sailed New England waters since it was launched in 1984.

Mr. Dormitzer's public service career began after he retired as founder and CEO of Electro Powerpacs Corp., an electronics company located in Cambridge. Born in Woodbury, Conn., in 1909, he became the sole support of his mother and younger brother at age 15 when his father died. His first job was as a clerk in Dosset's General Store in Woodbury, but he soon parlayed a radio hobby into a small business of building and repairing radios. Moving to Newton, he incorporated the company as Wholesale Radio Laboratories, Inc., distributors of GE. Wegster Rauland and Thordarson police radios, sound amplification systems and transformers. An early success for the company was the contract to install the sound systems in the Boston Garden and Worcester Mechanics Hall.

In 1941, Wholesale Radio Laboratories collaborated with Radiation Laboratories of MIT to build the first pulse radar modulators used in World War II. After the war, Mr. Dormitzer developed and manufactured the first commercial electronic photo flash equipment using knowledge gained in the development of high-energy pulse sources and from his association with Prof. Harold Edgerton of MIT, who developed the Xenon flash tube. The company was reincorporated as Dormitzer Electric and Manufacturing Co. Inc. after the war and pioneered the development of a range of products including pulse ruby lasers, emergency lighting and high intensity light sources for medical and diagnostic instrumentation.

He leaves his wife of 67 years, Julia; three sons, Henry Jr. of Wareham, Ralph of Cohasset, Greg of Swampscott; and a daughter, Jane Keenan of Greenwich, Conn.; seven grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Henry Dormitzer

A wake was held at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset Oct. 5.

A funeral Mass was held at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset, Oct. 6.

Contributions in Mr. Dormitzer's memory may be made to the Epilepsy Foundation, 95 Berkeley St., Boston, MA 02116.

"Another season has come to an end at the South Shore Music Circus. During the summer months there were only two arrests at the SSMC. Neither was the result of alcohol being sold on the premises," he said. "I would like to commend the staff of the SSMC for their diligence in their care of serving alcohol on premise. Since their alcohol license was issued in 1994, I have seen no increase in complaints regarding alcohol, and our records indicate the incidents have actually decreased."

Big numbers, but a lot more work ahead

School cost etimates get mixed reaction

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

At first glance the school department's request of $40 million for renovations may seem high, but officials caution residents to put their emotions aside and review the facts and figures.

A number of people in town seem surprised and caught off-guard by the school department's cost estimates for renovations of the Deer Hill Elementary and Cohasset Middle High School.

"People in town shouldn't panic regarding these numbers," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "I would urge everyone to keep an open mind and remember that this project will be 60 percent reimbursable by the state. The school facilities committee and I will delve into these numbers, and my guess is that we'll come up with a lesser number. It won't be significantly less, but the architects [Strekalovsky and Hoit of Hingham] did give what I feel are high-end projections."

The three renovation options still under consideration by the school committee range from $29 million to $41 million. Two of those three options, however, are eligible for the 60 percent state reimbursement, which would lower the cost of those two options to $15 million or $16 million.

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo acknowledged the projects are expensive, but added that school renovations have cost even more in some other South Shore towns.

"The numbers are significant, but other towns have faced the same situation we're in," DeGiacomo said. "Milton is looking at a $100 million project, and Norwell's project is $54 million. These projects are expensive, but this is what it costs."

"People in town shouldn't panic regarding these numbers. I would urge everyone to keep an open mind and remember that this project will be 60 percent reimbursable by the state."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Advisory committee chairman Dick Avery cautioned that school committee members might need to spend some time convincing people of the necessity for the renovation projects rather than debating the various forms that those renovations might take.

"This is going to be a major expenditure and it shouldn't be looked at glibly," he said. "Show me the data that says we will have more kids instead of saying 'this option looks good,' or 'that option looks good.' If you don't do your homework, it's easy to get into emotional debates rather than rational debates."

DeGiacomo said that debate will naturally occur regarding the cost and scope of the renovations, but said people in town should be aware of the need for the project.

Katie is brave beyond her years

Child's battle with cancer inspires many to help

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Last October, a parent's worst nightmare came true for Hingham residents Bob and Ginny Egan. For the previous few months, their nine year-old daughter, Katie, had been experiencing unexplained fevers. By August and September, she began feeling occasional leg pains as well. The Egans spent the Monday holiday at Children's Hospital in Boston, as Katie underwent an MRI, a medical procedure that can determine internal injury. The results of that test indicated a reality that the Egans hoped their prayers would prevent.

"After they did the MRI, the doctors felt sure there was a tumor in her hip," Ginny said. "They did a biopsy the next day and it was definitive for a cancerous tumor. Right after that, they hooked us in with the Jimmy Fund."

Bob said the day when Katie was undergoing the testing was a torturous one.

"It was a really tough day," he said. "While she was getting the tests done, we just prayed that there would be a reward at the end of the day. When we found out she did have a tumor in her hip, we were devastated."

One year later, Katie is a smiling 10-year old, a fifth-grader at the Foster School in Hingham. Her tumor has been removed and she is preparing to undergo the last of her 17 chemotherapy treatments. Her doctor's preliminary findings indicate that the surgery to remove the tumor was successful. The Egans said the people at the Jimmy Fund and Children's Hospital have been outstanding through the entire process.

Katie has progressed so well that she will be able to walk the last three miles of the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk this Sunday, October 17. The walk will raise funds for cancer research and treatment at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. The Egans are particularly grateful to the Jimmy Fund for their guidance in a time of disillusionment and despair.

"This time last year was overwhelmingly frightening," Ginny said. "With the Jimmy Fund, you have a team right away and everyone clicked with us. The disease

Shipwreck victims remembered

Cardinal Law celebrates Mass and leads procession in their honor

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Emigrants from a hunger-infested Ireland aboard the brig St. John, 99 men, women, and children had their lives taken in the grasp of a violent storm off the Cohasset coast on October 7, 1849. A century and a half later, a somber rain fell from the gray skies as Cardinal Bernard Law led a procession of bagpipers and a group seeking to honor the victims' collective memory.

After a Mass which focused upon the 150th anniversary of the tragic shipwreck, most of those in attendance walked from St. Anthony's Church to Cohasset Central Cemetery, where 49 of the St. John's victims are buried beneath the Celtic Cross. Cardinal Law commented on how the light but steady drizzle outside seemed to fit the occasion.

"God has given us an appropriate day for our commemoration of the sinking of the brig St. John," Cardinal Law said.

John Sullivan, a member of the committee to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the tragedy, was also struck by the depth that the weather added to the proceedings.

"It was pretty powerful," he said of the procession and wreath-laying ceremony at the Celtic Cross. "I think the soft rain accentuated the somberness of why we were all there."

Cardinal Bernard Law led the 150th memorial mass at St. Anthony's Church in honor of the 99 Irish emigrants who perished in the brig St. John disaster off Cohasset's shores.

Despite the seriousness of the occasion, Cardinal Law did manage to interject a brief moment of levity into the day's events.

"How many of you in this church can claim Ireland as part of your heritage?" he asked. After virtually every hand in the church was raised, he laughed, "If you're Irish, you'll be able to walk."

One of those able to walk was Cohasset resident Paul St. John, whose great-great grandfather married the only survivor of the shipwreck who stayed in America.

"His name was Jim St. John, and he owned a tailor-shop down by the harbor," Paul said of his great-great grandfather. "He married Mary Kane, who was the only survivor who stayed over here. She had been married in Ireland, but her husband was one of the many who died as part of the starvation that was ongoing over there. My great-grandfather was a widower and already had five children when he married her. He was a lot older than her, though I

Local cable talk show on channel 3 tonight

Roth, Pierson to serve as co-hosts

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cable TV is one way to get the message about local issues to the people.

But since the "Pierson to Person" talk show signed off more than two years ago — apart from the local papers — Cohasset citizens have been limited to televised selectmen's and school committee meetings that feature packed agendas and little interaction with the public.

But former selectman Nan Roth and Wigmore Pierson, the host of "Pierson to Person" which was on the air for ten years, hope to change that.

"The concept is to talk about current issues and bring together the people involved."
— Nan Roth, co-host

From 8 to 9 p.m. Thursdays on channel 3, Roth and Pierson will host "Cohasset Talks" from the selectmen's office at town hall. The program — which they tested once last spring before the May override vote — will be relentlessly local and focus on issues that Cohasset cares about, Roth said.

"The concept is to talk about current issues and bring together the people involved," said Roth, who served on the advisory committee before being elected to the board of selectmen in 1996.

At 8 p.m. tonight the show will officially premier. The topic is "Cohasset's Big Digs" — what they are, where they are and when they will be completed, Pierson said. Special guests are Town Manager Mark Haddad and Domenic Tutela, president of Tutela Engineering, the consulting firm heading up the sewer and water projects underway in town.

The hosts hope the viewers will tune in, call in or be part of the studio audience.

"Community involvement with this program is a key as to the longevity of the show," Pierson said. "We will be encouraging citizens to attend our shows in the selectmen's office and invite viewers to call in questions to our guests."

The call-in number will be announced during the program.

The camera crew is made up of local teenagers who will film the show while earning community service credits, Roth said. Unlike selectmen's and school committee meetings, the camera will be mobile and be able to focus in and out.

Next week's program will focus on the local real estate market. Then

Convenience store drops liquor license suit

The owner of the Mobil gas station at the corner of Sohier Street and Route 3A has dropped a Superior Court appeal, ending his year-long quest to gain a liquor license for his establishment.

Paul Vercollone's first attempt to secure the liquor license was rejected by selectmen in June 1998, who said there was no need for another store in the area to sell beer and wine.

He then appealed the decision to the state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission [ABCC], which endorsed the selectmen's view that the town has enough liquor stores.

Both the ABCC and the Board of Selectmen had been named as defendants in the Superior Court appeal.

Second phase of drainage project

Construction on the second phase of the James Brook flood abatement project began last Wednesday once the concerns of two property owners were alleviated.

Both Mark Gratta, who owns a landscaping business at 2 Smith Place, and Joseph Rosano, who owns Strawberry Parfait on Pleasant Street, had complained that they would lose trees on their property as the result of a town easement that runs through their properties.

"We settled everything with the property owners and construction began last Wednesday as planned," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "We're finally moving along."

The second phase of the drainage project is designed to reduce the incidences and severity of flooding that has plagued the village in recent years. The combination of the village phase and the harbor phase of the project, which should be completed by November, will give Cohasset a much improved flood abatement system.

"This project won't eliminate flooding completely, but it should reduce the number of floods and make them less severe," he said.

During Saturday's open house at the fire department, call firefighter Eric Washac demonstrates the thermal imaging camera system the Cohasset Fire Department is trying to obtain. The technology was derived from Operation Desert Storm and has been credited with saving more than 40 lives.

$150,000 school technology warrant article submitted

Despite a request from technology coordinator Ken Cisneros for support for a $225,000 warrant article at the December special town meeting, the school committee voted to present a $150,000 article to town meeting instead.

"I think $150,000 is a logical amount to ask for," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "This committee is extremely supportive of the department's vision as far as it's technology plan, but we are asking a lot from the town. $225,000 would be the most we've ever gotten for technology."

Cisneros said he understands the budgetary process but is focused solely on making the school district's technology program as good as he can.

"I'll take $10 if that's all there is," he said. "But I'm looking at this from an educator's point of view. I don't want to have to stop what we have going because the kids and the teachers are all really excited."

Music Circus before zoning board

South Shore Playhouse Associates, parent of the South Shore Music Circus, seeks to continue to sell malt beverage and wine and erect a canopy at 130 Sohier St. The zoning board will hear the playhouse associates' application for a special permit at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 1 at town hall. The application is on file at the town clerk's office. Applications for special permits were approved in 1994, 1995, 1996 and 1997 with a three-year term.

Det. Grassie commended

Police Chief Brian Noonan commended Cohasset Detective Rick Grassie for his actions during the recent arson of a dwelling investigation on Doane Street.

"After an intensive four-week investigation, your actions resulted in the arrest of a suspect in this case," Noonan wrote in his commendation.

"Your professionalism and dedication and attributes of which I am extremely proud," he stated. "This type of conduct brings credit to yourself, this police department and the law enforcement community."

Local firefighters are thanked

John D. Reilly Jr. on behalf of the Hull Board of Selectmen and Hull Fire Chief James N. Russo presented a resolution to area firefighters, including those from Cohasset, for their "heroic efforts" in fighting a four-alarm fire on June 29 in Hull. The blaze destroyed two homes on Clifton Avenue but could have burned more if it weren't for the efforts of the hardworking fire fighters, the resolution said.

The resolution was presented to a group of Cohasset fire fighters that attended a benefit for Hull firefighter John Clasby who was injured in the line of duty fighting the fire.

Early morning marina blaze sinks two yachts

Cohasset's Sterling Endeavor damaged in Scituate fire

By Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITER

State and local fire officials have launched an investigation into the Monday morning blaze that sank two yachts and damaged several others, including one owned by a Cohasset man, at the James Landing Marina in Scituate. The fire also caused a 300-gallon diesel fuel leak which has environmental officials concerned about pollution to the First Herring Brook — a tributary of the North River.

Robert Murray has owned the "Sterling Endeavor," a 38-foot sailboat, for six years. Murray, who lives at 81 Atlantic Ave., had it built for him in England and usually moors his boat in Scituate Harbor. During the summer Murray entered the Sterling Endeavor in the Race to Bermuda.

He brought the Sterling Endeavor to James Landing on Saturday. The canvas covers and deck area were burned with bits of flying debris.

"The mast is cooked," he said. There are two major cracks in the hull, the rigging was burned away, the chain plates need to be replaces but Murray isn't devastated.

"It's only a boat at the end of the day," he said.

Bill Stanton, executive director of the North and South Rivers Watershed Association (NSRWA) said the oil spill is a concern, but noted that the tidal pattern of the brook will likely take care of the problem.

"In this particular situation it will probably not be a significant environmental impact, due to the flush of the tide in that area," Stanton said.

"Immediately it was a huge fire. It was a conflagration...The boat owners were lucky and we were lucky too."

Four firefighters received minor injuries while fighting the blaze which broke out at about 1:30 a.m..

Two yachts valued at $500,000 each — a 47-foot, 1989 Jersey type cabin cruiser called "Just Because," and a 43-foot 1995 Viking cabin cruiser named "Star Skipper" — were completely destroyed. Several other boats, including Murray's, were damaged in the blaze.

Although the fire was originally thought to have started on the 47-foot boat, "Just Because," Scituate fire chief James Breen said officials are now unsure whether, "Just Because," or the "Star Skipper," was the origin of the fire.

State and local fire officials launched an investigation yesterday into the marina fire that sank two yachts and damaged several other vessels moored at the James Landing Marina. Here, Abraham Ryan of Clean Harbors retrieves oil soaked sponges as part of the surface cleaning of the First Herring Brook.

Robert Murray's sailboat "Sterling Endeavor" took part in last summer's race to Bermuda. The 38-foot English built sailboat was damaged in the Monday morning blaze at the James Landing Marina.

"Just Because," owned by First Parish Road resident Peter Rhoten, sank during the fire. The "Star Skipper," owned by Robert Bedstall burned to the waterline and sank at about 10:30 a.m. Monday, Breen said.

Both boats have been hauled out of the water and are being stored at the Marina for an investigation which began yesterday headed up by the state fire marshal, the Scituate Fire Department and insurance investigators, Breen said.

"The mast is cooked."

Breen said the fuel leak came from the "Just Because." None of the 275 gallons in the tank of the "Star Skipper" has leaked. "We had it pretty well contained."

Clean Harbors, a company specializing in environmental cleanup, completed surface cleansing in the brook Tuesday, but boats moored in the area will probably have to have their bottoms cleaned of fuel residue, said Breen. Breen said that most of the fuel remained inside the booms — floating petroleum containment devices deployed by firefighters. In the future, Stanton said the NSRWA would like to see better regulations in effect for this type of accident.

The fire shocked residents of James Landing, an upscale condominium community off The Driftway that abuts the marina.

"I was watching TV at about 1 or 1:30 a.m. and I heard two kind of gunshot-type noises," said Anthony Tompson, 15, a James Landing resident.

"Immediately it was a huge fire. It was a conflagration," said Anthony's mother Lisa Tompson, adding that flames shot into the air upwards of 30 feet.

"The boat owners were lucky and we were lucky too," said Tompson noting that a wind heading southwesterly probably saved many more boat owners from damage. "It was pretty frightening, it was a big fire," she said.

Twelve on-duty and six off-duty firefighters from Scituate fought the blaze with foam. They were aided by the harbormaster's boat and equipment. Scituate Fire Captain James Anderson said it took less than two hours to extinguish the fire. The flames were knocked down at about 3 a.m., he said.

Four firefighters suffered minor injuries.

Boat owners who suffered damages in the fire commended the department on their speedy and efficient response to the blaze.

Owners of the marina had no comment on the fire.

don't know their exact ages when they got married."

The St. John family has been intimately involved with the commemoration of the St. John shipwreck for generations.

"My great-aunt Tess was a part of the group who unveiled the Celtic Cross in 1914," Paul said. "In 1953, Cardinal Cushing came, but I missed that because I was in Korea. Now we go every year."

Once the procession reached the Celtic Cross, Dorchester resident Maureen Keady sang beautifully, yet mournfully in Irish. It seemed that the heavens could hear her singing as the rain began to fall more heavily. Cardinal Law said prayers in honor of the victims before laying the wreath in their honor at the foot of the Celtic Cross.

At the Mass, Cardinal Law also led that day's special congregation in prayer for the victims. He said that even though this tragedy happened 150 years ago, much can still be learned from the human rights abuses that prompted the victims' departure from Ireland.

A potato blight began affecting that staple of the Irish peasant farmer's diet in 1845. Coupled with repressive British laws which denied basic food and shelter to millions of Irish, starvation deaths multiplied. With nothing left but death and disease at home, the Irish began to leave en masse. Between 1845 and 1855, over two million Irish emigrated to American and Australia, while another 750,000 emigrated to Britain. That exodus from Ireland's shores represented the largest population movement of the 19th century.

"As we remember the injustice that happened to the Irish in their own homeland, let us seek to right injustices that are happening today," he said. "In places like Kosovo and East Timor, people are being killed simply for their ethnic background or beliefs, much like happened 150 years ago in Ireland."

In that vain, Cardinal Law said the collection gathered at the Mass will be sent to East Timor to assist those who are suffering as a result of continued fighting between Indonesian and East Timorese forces.

Selectman Thomas Callahan was struck by the scope of the commemoration ceremonies.

"I thought the Mass was a moving ceremony," he said. "I was impressed that the Cardinal came down from Boston and I was impressed by the turnout. St. Anthony's was really packed to capacity."

Sullivan said the entire ceremony seemed a fitting tribute to the memory of those who perished off the Cohasset coast in 1849.

"It was wonderful to see so many people," he said. "Someone told me that it was nice to see news cameras in Cohasset for something other than a scandal and I agree. I thought it was a wonderful event.

Katie is brave beyond her years

was new to us, but it wasn't new to the people at the Jimmy Fund and Children's Hospital. They knew how to deal with it. They told us where to be, and when we had to be there. We've been so lucky."

Much of Katie's success in fighting Ewing's Sarcoma, a childhood cancer that attacks bone and muscle, can be attributed to an indomitable will rarely seen in someone so young. Her father said he is constantly amazed by her ability to remain positive amidst obstacles that would be difficult for anyone to overcome, let alone a child.

"The doctors and nurses love her because she always has a smile on her face," he said of his daughter. "Even when they're drawing blood at 3 in the morning, she's still smiling."

Katie 's strength for fighting cancer has been buoyed by the compassion the Egans have received in both Hingham and Cohasset, where Bob is the town's building commissioner.

"The support we've had from both Hingham and Cohasset has been overwhelming," Bob said. "A lot of people have offered us help right from the very beginning."

The love of both communities for Katie was evident at the Relay for Life in May at Cohasset High School. Walkers raised $65,000 to benefit the American Cancer Society, and a group of Foster School teachers, employees and students walked especially for Katie, under her chosen moniker, The Yellow Polka-Dotted Penguins.

"They sold luminaries for $5 at the Relay for Life, which they lit up at night," Bob said of the 24-hour event. "When Katie and I walked around, there must have been at least 50 with her name on them. It let her know that people really care."

The Egans' neighbors in Hingham sent that same message of caring to Katie in a very special way. Meeting in secret, the neighbors put together a 150-square quilt, each with a personalized message to Katie from a well-wishing classmate, teacher, or neighbor. The quilt was presented to Katie prior to her February surgery to remove the cancerous tumor from her hip.

Ginny said the family is extremely thankful to live in such a caring community.

"We live in a wonderful neighborhood," she said. "The neighbors made a quilt for her when she was a baby, which she still has. They really kept this quilt a secret. Everyone was given a white square, and people could draw pictures and write a message to Katie. It's all done in washable fabric marker, so we can wash it over and over again."

Ginny said the quilt was a source of inspiration for Katie as she prepared for her surgery, a frightening prospect for any child. The inscription at the bottom of the quilt reads: 'This quilt has many pieces. Prayers, good wishes, warm hearts, all sewn together in a blanket of love.'

"Every time she goes into the hospital, she brings it," Ginny said. "There's even a pillowcase with a pouch for the fabric markers so the doctors and nurses could sign it."

Since the February surgery to remove the tumor, Katie has progressed well. Her reactions to the chemotherapy treatments have improved while their debilitating effects have tapered off. Still, the journey has been made with many painful steps.

"After the chemotherapy treatments, her white blood cell counts go down to next to nothing," Ginny said "There are visiting nurses who come to the house every day for about 12 days after each treatment and they give her injections that help raise her white blood cell count. She's had a number of blood transfusions as well because the red blood cell count also gets knocked down."

With only one chemotherapy treatment left to undergo, the Egans are hopeful that Katie's cancer will soon be behind her. Having been through so much in a year, however, they remain cautious.

"We'll always think of Katie as a patient in some respects," Bob said. She's doing very, very well but we want to take it step by step."

As part of the Jimmy Fund Walk, Bob and five friends will walk the entire 26.2 Boston Marathon course, from Hopkinton to the finish line at Copley Square. In addition to the full marathon distance, there is also a 13-mile course beginning in Wellesley, and the 3-mile course that Katie is walking, which begins at Dana-Farber in Boston.

Over 6500 walkers are expected for an event that raised $2.3 million last year. Walkers are required to raise at least $100 to participate and this year's Jimmy Fund walk is expected to raise $2.6 million.

"The people at the Jimmy Fund have done so much for us," Bob said. "Hopefully, we'll be doing this walk for years and years and help the people who have helped us so much."

Many of those who are walking the 3-mile distance are cancer survivors such as Katie and other cancer patients whom she has met while in Boston for treatment. She said she has made friends from places she had never heard of.

"I've met people from the United Arab Emirates, Venezuela, Brazil, and India and from all over the U.S. too," Katie said.

Ginny said the family has documented Katie's journey, including all of the friends she has made along the way.

"We've kept a scrapbook of everything, including pictures of her hospital buddies," she said.

This Sunday's Jimmy Fund Walk will begin at 7 a.m. in Hopkinton, 11 a.m. in Wellesley, and 2 p.m. at Dana-Farber in Boston. The staggered start times ensure that all of the participants will be able to finish at about the same time. Anyone interested in registering for the walk can call (800) 632-3562. Feral cats are on trial

Health board meeting the site for spirited discussion

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The scene almost resembled a courtroom trial, except that in this case the judge had a hard time getting a word in edgewise.

On trial at the health board meeting was a colony of feral cats making a home across from James Lane, where a local resident has been a source of food for years. In the defense of the cats were a couple of passionate advocates for the colony's continued survival. Among those speaking for the prosecution was Margaret Taylor, 21 James Lane, who wants the death penalty.

"These cats have been a problem down on our street for years," Taylor began. "They defecate all over the yard and they've broken expensive bushes and ruined the entire garden. The smell from their feces is horrendous. You can't even dig in the garden because of the smell. I want them put to sleep."

Bette Edminster, 60 Elm St., was another witness for the prosecution and testified to the nuisance presented by the homeless cats.

"I used to live at 21 James Lane and gardened there in the past as well," she said. "The last couple of years, I couldn't even garden there because of the smell. In the wintertime, my car was always scratched because the cats climb on top of them to keep warm. It's an every night occurrence in the winter. The whole thing is an impossible situation."

Unlike a courtroom trial, however, those speaking in defense of the feral cats had an opportunity to rebut the opposing argument right away. Gail Whitehouse, 17 Ash Lane, relished that opportunity.

"In this violent world, there has to be a better way to solve this very real problem," said Whitehouse, who along with Cindy Maccleave, 9 James Lane, has been working with animal control officer Paul Murphy to spay, neuter, and re-release the cats. "Putting them to sleep is not the answer. Since July, we've spayed five females, neutered one male, and found homes for three kittens, all at no expense to Cohasset. Hopefully, we can make the lives of the residents in that area better as well as the lives of these beautiful, healthy creatures."

Maccleave said that putting the cats to sleep will not work because it is domesticated cats that are causing much of the problem.

"There are three male cats who are pets in that neighborhood and aren't neutered," she said. "They know when a female's in heat and they are the ones responsible for much of the re-population."

The back-and-forth testimony from opposing sides continued as John Connell, 25 James Lane, spoke of continued damage to his property from the feral cats.

"I've spent several thousand dollars remodeling a seasonal porch, and people always ask me if I have a cat when they're on the porch. The smell never goes away. I'm trying to kill it with bleach water, but it's not working. I bought a new vehicle and it was scratched after 10 days. I didn't buy it to keep feral cats warm. This is a situation that has to be handled now."

Elsa Miller, 60 Reservoir Road, said the answer to the feral cat problem is keeping male cats who have not been neutered away from the females.

"We have irresponsible homeowners who let their male cats loose. We need to make people aware of their responsibilities as pet owners."
Elsa Miller, 60 Reservoir Rd.

"Mass kills are absolutely not the answer, because these male cats will just come back and breed again," she said. "These feral cats come from people's houses. They get away, find a food source, and breed if they aren't spayed or neutered. That's how it starts. We have irresponsible homeowners who let their male cats loose. We need to make people aware of their responsibilities as pet owners."

While the reason behind the existence of the feral cat colony can be debated constantly, certain facts in the case are acknowledged by both sides. A colony of between 10 and 25 feral cats does exist on James Lane, and there have been three to four reported litters of kittens born this summer.

Acting as both the jury and possible executioners, members of the health board sought a solution that could be amenable to both parties.

"It's obvious that these folks want these cats gone very soon," said health board member Robin Lawrence. Is it possible to quarantine the population and then relocate them?"

Murphy said the best solution is to catch the cats about six at a time, spay and neuter them, and put them in some kind of kennel. "I can't condone re-releasing them because it isn't solving the problem," he said.

Dean Taylor, 21 James Lane, said he is willing to accept any solution that keeps the cats away from his house and his yard.

"I think what these women are doing with trapping and spaying and neutering these cats is admirable," he said. "I'm not out to kill them. I just don't want the urine and the feces on my property."

Putting the feral cats in kennels might be a solution, but it is not without problems.

"Under whose care would we put the kennels?" Murphy asked. You can spell quarantine with dollar signs and it's a tremendous amount of work."

In her closing argument, Whitehouse said she would do whatever she could to save the lives of the feral cats, but asked that all involved need to be realistic when considering solutions to the problem.

"I'll go in with three or four traps if that's what you want me to do, but that area will never be totally free of feral cats," she said. "You're asking for miracles if that's what you're after. By feeding them, we're keeping them healthy and free of disease."

Despite the passionate voices on both side of the issue, the board of health was unable to come to a decision regarding a solution to the feral cat problem. That ruling will be handed down when the hearing is continued at 8 p.m. on Oct. 26.

"I'm not ready to vote on this tonight," said health board chairwoman Alix White. "It's obvious that these residents have real concerns with the odor and the scratches on their cars. I think we need some more time to decide what action should be taken."

For at least two more weeks, a stay of execution for the feral cats.

To scoop or not to scoop

Health board mulls pooper-scooper regulation

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

We've all walked in it, stepped in it, and carefully scraped it from the bottom of our shoes. Call it poop, doo-doo, or whatever cute term you'd like to use, but any contact with dog feces is usually quite unpleasant. Most dog owners, however, have also taken their dog for a walk and let the animal do his or her 'business' in a public place, without thinking about how the feces will be disposed of.

The board of health is considering the adoption of a pooper-scooper regulation, under which citizens could potentially be fined if they do not pick up after their dogs. Both Scituate and Hingham have such bylaws, but animal control officers in both towns acknowledge that the bylaws are rarely, if ever, enforced in their towns.

"What is the purpose of putting in a regulation if you acknowledge at the outset that it's unenforceable?" asked Tom Woolf, 50 Wheelwright Farm Rd.

Health board member Robin Lawrence found fault with Woolf's line of thinking concerning the spirit of lawmaking.

"I disagree with you philosophically," Lawrence told Woolf. "Laws are made and, hopefully, they're enforced. Sometimes laws make a statement. For instance, look at speed limits. Every car on the road is speeding, but the signs make you realize that you be endangering your own life and the lives of everyone on the road when you drive that fast. I think we can make a statement here that it's not a good idea to leave dog excrement on the ground."

One reason that some residents have gotten fed up with some of the town's more irresponsible dog owners is that some of the best places for young kids to play are now littered with dog feces.

"I'm a mother of small children, and we use public parks all the time," said Ann Swanborg, 48 Nichols Rd. "The kids love to play at Sandy Beach, and it's really bad down there. It's bad at the park adjacent to the post office, it's pretty bad at the nursery schools, and we all know about the town common. I'm in support of the regulation because I think people have an obligation to clean up after their dogs."

"It's bad at the park adjacent to the post office, it's pretty bad at the nursery schools, and we all know about the town common."
Ann Swanborg

As far as the difficulty with enforcing the bylaw goes, Swanborg said that putting it on the books would only be the first step.

"The board would be making an important statement and help the average citizen to enforce the bylaw by allowing us to set an example and educate our fellow citizens about their civic duty."

Woolf said his experiences living in Boston, which has such a bylaw, has soured him as to the logic of such a regulation.

"I'm opposed that there would be any regulation at all," he said. "When I lived in Boston, it was a nightmare because of the odor coming from the trash barrels on a hot summer day. We're talking about excrement here."

Kimberly Flores, 133 Beechwood St., said that the town should set up dispensers for plastic bags as well as receptacles for the waste if they adopt such a bylaw. Such receptacle/dispenser stations are in use at Trustees of Reservations sites such as Turkey Hill and World's End.

"I don't have any kids and my tax dollars are always going to schools and things I don't use. This would be to the benefit of a greater percentage of the town. If you're going to do it, put some money towards it."

Woolf said the board should have a realistic plan for how people are to dispose of dog feces if they institute a pooper-scooper regulation.

What are you going to ask people to do when they pick up this stuff," he asked.

Animal control officer Paul Murphy said a pooper-scooper bylaw might have a hard time catching on because of many people's attitudes about cleaning up after their dogs.

"A lot of people are really arrogant," he said. "They don't want it in their yards, and so it's easier to take it to a public place where they don't have to deal with it."

Health board chairwoman Alix White elected to continue the pooper-scooper hearing at 8:15 p.m. at the board's Oct. 26 meeting so the members would have time to work on the wording of a possible regulation.

AROUND TOWN

A CARING FRIEND

Oct. 1 marked a day that will not be forgotten; it was the day when Ken Fone passed away. Ken was a kind, compassionate and caring friend, as well as always being a willing helper in whatever needed to be done. He was full of humor; he had one of those contagious laughs that could carry you through the worst of times and the best of times. He was a wonderful father, grandfather and husband; he loved his family and was very proud of them all!

To know Ken was to love him; we always have and we always will! He will be truly missed!

BEST WISHES

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Karen Ford this week; we hope that your day was a happy one, indeed!

HOCKEY BOOSTERS

The Cohasset Hockey Boosters have sure been a busy crew! They have been planning lots of things to make this year the most memorable one yet! On Sunday, Nov. 21, from 4-7 p.m. there will be a Kick-off Pot Luck Dinner, to be held at the Lighkeeper's Residence; Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 4 and 5, there will be hockey clinics, including on and off ice training and breakfasts; and Sunday, Jan. 1, from 7:30-9:30 p.m., they are planning an alumni-varsity hockey game at the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham.

The cost of ice will be divided among the skaters, and the registration deadline is Nov. 1. Souvenir shirts, raffle, skating with former teammates — everything you could wish for (better get in shape now, alumni, this year's team is already hard at work). If you have any questions or would like to sign up, call Jo-Ann Pilczak at 383-0268 or Ann Rasmussen at 383-1907. What a great way to start the New Year!

'Tis the season for yummy homemade soup

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Brrr — this is the season for some great homemade soup! The aroma that fills the kitchen is the beginning of making you warm all over! And, when you taste that first spoonful, you just know you're warm!

In restaurants everywhere, they feature onion soup, so we know that it is one of the most popular soups around. It is a favorite in our house, hopefully this will make it a favorite in yours —

EASY ONION SOUP

3 large onions (about 2 pounds), thinly sliced
1/4 cup butter or margarine, melted
5 cups boiling water
1 tablespoon chicken bouillon granules
2 teaspoons beef bouillon granules
1/2 teaspoon salt
dash of pepper
1 tablespoon sugar (optional)
1/2 teaspoon browning and seasoning sauce
6 (3/4-inch-thick) slices French bread, toasted
6 (4-x 1/8-inch) slices Swiss Cheese

Separate onions into rings and sauté in butter in Dutch oven until tender Add water to onions. Combine bouillon granules, salt, pepper and sugar, if desired; add to onions. Stir in browning and seasoning sauce. Bring mixture to a boil; reduce heat and simmer, uncovered, 1 hour.

Place 6 ovenproof individual serving bowls on a baking sheet. Place 1 slice of bread in each bowl; ladle soup over bread. Top each with one slice cheese; broil 6 inches from heat until cheese melts. Yield: 6 cups

if you don't have bouillon granules on hand, you may use beef broth and chicken broth, 3 cups of beef 2 cups of chicken and 2 cups of water.

DELICIOUS!

If you have a recipe to share, please give me a call at 383-0560.

Cooking classes offered in Norwell

The first of the natural foods cooking classes will be held — not at the Genevieve Lane Natural Healing Center — but rather at Give Me the Skinny on Route 53 in Norwell. Lane's kitchen is not yet ready. Rather than delay classes any longer, however, Lane chose to use the Give Me the Skinny kitchens to accommodate her classes.

The first visiting chef is Larry Genovese, CEO of Network Engines in Randolph. He has chosen for his topic: "Incorporating Chinese Cooking Methods and Foods into Everyday Meals."

Where? Give Me the Skinny, Route 53, Norwell (across from the Star Market complex and behind Hancock Paint and Dunkin' Donuts).

When? Wednesday, Oct. 20, from 6 to 9 p.m.

Cost? $50 — which includes $8 food fee.

Genovese will demonstrate and prepare a meal that will please all tastes. He will use foods that are fresh, seasonal and nutritionally balanced — and organically grown when possible.

Guests may participate in some of the preparation if they so desire — as well as taste-test for flavor and texture — before sitting down to a meal.

Class size is limited and on a first-come basis. Reservations may be made by calling the Genevieve Lane Natural Healing Center at (781) 982-1616.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

'Cohasset Talks'

The fact that Nan Roth and Wigmore Pierson are launching a new weekly cable TV show is good news for Cohasset.

When 'Pierson to Person' signed off in June of 1997, it left a void. We could always count on Wig to stir the pot and bring issues to the surface.

That's why we're excited about the new show "Cohasset Talks."

For one thing, both Wig and Nan are opinionated and intelligent. Each bring years of public service experience to the table and aren't afraid to ask the tough questions.

They both live in town and are affected by the issues — whether those are Cohasset's "Big Digs" (the subject of tonight's show) or tax increases to pay for school renovations or town sewers.

Being in the print media, we never viewed 'Pierson to Person' as competition but rather, another great way to keep the public informed. The fact is that we — print and television — complement one another.

"Cohasset Talks" is going to be interactive. Nan and Wig will ask viewers to call in. Interested citizens are also invited to be members of the studio audience.

We'll be watching and wish them success with the new show, which airs tonight from 8 to 9 p.m. on Channel 3.

Change is in the air

One thing is certain: readers are passionate about their hometown newspaper. And they are very opinionated. Both are very good things, especially when the hometown newspaper happens to be the Mariner.

Our phones were flooded with calls last week from readers who didn't hold back on their opinions about the new broadsheet format. Some waxed philosophic about their views on the paper, others were more direct with their responses. "It stinks," we were told about the new format.

The reasons people gave about their general dislike for the new format ranged from the "bulky, awkward" size to lamenting about a broadsheet being more of a paper for a "city" environment. They liked the hometown feel of the small tabloid.

The issues raised in the last week were ones we as a company wrangled over during the past few months. We knew people tend to resist change — many of us here at the Mariner included. We expected to have some reaction, but quite frankly, nothing compared to what we got.

We take this as a positive sign. We have always been fortunate enough to know how passionate people are about their paper and the close connection they feel to it. This week reaffirmed that ten-fold.

It will take some time for people to get accustomed to the new format and we're confident you will see that our commitment to covering local news is unchanged. We will continue to work hard to be your paper of record, reporting on all the news, events and people that make the community unique. As time unfolds, you will see the advantages to a broadsheet — more space to devote to community news and to display award-winning photography. It is content of the paper, after all, that must be the main objective every week.

For us, the decision to switch the format was not an easy one. But when all was said and done we are convinced this is the right move — especially when you factor in as a company we will save nearly 30 percent of the paper we consume every year by going from the tabloid to broadsheet format. That's a lot of trees.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on two roll calls from House debate on a proposed $21 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. The House and Senate have yet to agree on a compromise version of the budget. The legislature has already approved four temporary monthly budgets in order to stay afloat. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

MBTA(H 4400)
House 124-28, approved an amendment making major changes in the method used to fund the MBTA. Currently, the T operates at a deficit by spending whatever it costs to run the system and then borrowing money from the state and market to pay the bills. The T is then reimbursed up to 18 months later by the state and local communities served by the system. The amendment "forward funds" the T by funding its operation in advance through the state budget and limiting state funding of the T to one-fifth of the state's five percent sales tax receipts--estimated to total $610 million in 1999. The measure also decreases, over six years, annual assessments on T communities from $145 million to $127.5 million but adds 97 communities to the 78 currently assessed for T service. Another provision requires the MBTA to "adjust" its sources of direct revenue which includes fares, parking and advertising, so that the revenue will cover a higher percentage of the operation's costs. Amendment supporters said funding the T the way other progams in the state budget are funded will save the state millions of dollars. They argued the new system of community assessments is a fair and equitable one will will spread out the costs of running the system to include communities which are now getting commuter rail service but are not paying any assessment. They noted the amendment does not mandate fare hikes but only requires the T to increase overall revenue. Amendment opponents said the amendment mandates increased T revenues which will result in a hike in subway fares from 85 cents to $1.50 over six years and a hike in bus fares from 60 cents to 75 cents. They also argued that many of the 97 new cities and towns targeted for assessments are suburban communities which agreed to build commuter rail stations based on the promise that they would not be forced to finance the T's operation. The Senate version of the budget does not include this amendment. Some observers say disagreement on the T issue between the House and Senate budget negotiators is one of the key reasons the two branches have yet to agree on a final version of the fiscal 2000 state budget. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment. A "Nay" vote is against it).

LOCAL COLAS(H 4400) House 152-0, approved an amendment allowing local retirement boards to provide cost of living adjustments (COLAs) of up to three percent for retired city and town employees. Current law only allows communities to increase COLAs by up to the percentage the consumer price index (cpi) rises or up to three percent--whichever is lower. Amendment supporters said this year's cpi increase is only 1.2 percent and argued that limiting the retirees' COLAs to that amount is unfair. They argued the amendment is a local option, not a mandate, and will allow communities to help thousands of hardworking retirees. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment).

Getting the word out on home composters

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Black gold can be yours! The Cohasset Recycling Committee want to get the word out that an efficient, inconspicuous, and simple home composter is now available at the RTF on Cedar Street during regular RTF hours for just $25 each. These black plastic barrel-shaped devices will handle several bushels of leaves and grass clippings and any other organic matter you wish to put in your backyard compost pile. The composter comes with instructions for complete home composting and is sold at the first building on the right as you enter the RTF [where you may also drop off those black plastic plant and shrub containers for recycling that otherwise take up valuable space in the demo trailer roll-off]. You won't find more reasonably-priced compost containers than ours in those catalogs that are busily arriving [junk mail bin — but please put brown bags in with the cardboard!]. "Just in time for fall cleanup."

These black plastic barrel-shaped devices will handle several bushels of leaves and grass clippings and any other organic matter you wish to put in your backyard compost pile.

Please note that the town's final Paint Day will be Saturday, Oct. 30.

Finally — we are now recycling polyurethane foam [pillows, mats, especially the carpet underlayment foam] — near the demo bin [the trailer roll-off we back up to].

School people — we hope you are thinking hard about recycling! More to follow!

See you next time, probably with a story.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee

HEALTH NOTES

'Tis the season for flu shots

Flu shots will be given at the Cohasset Town Hall Saturday, Oct. 16 and 23, from 10 a.m. to noon, and Tuesday, Oct. 26, from 7 to 9 p.m. Everyone over 65 should get a shot.

Don't remember the bad old days when flu shots made you feel worse than if you had the flu. Today's vaccines are much cleaner and safer and generally don't even cause much discomfort in your arm.

The Massachusetts Health Promotion Clearinghouse has a brochure entitled "If You Have Diabetes, A Flu Shot Could Save Your Life." Well, that goes for any of you who have a chronic disease. People with asthma, cancer, COPD and other chronic conditions are more susceptible to serious complications from the flu.

So all of you out there come to one of the free clinics. There will be plenty of nurses available, so there won't be any long waits. Just in and out after you complete the paperwork, of course.

NATIONAL CHILD HEALTH MONTH

Even though we missed Child Health Day, here are some things recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that children and parents can do to promote good child health.

Children should

- Learn to wash their hands properly to prevent infection
- Eat breakfast before going to school
- Not smoke and avoid the smoke of others
- Exercise and play safely using appropriate protective gear

Parents should

- Be actively involved with their children
- Get their children vaccinated
- Get their children health insurance
- Check for health hazards in their home and eliminate them
- Place children weighing less than 40 pounds in child safety seats and all others in safety belts in rear seats of automobiles
- Seek medical advise if their child is slow to learn
- Avoid tobacco use and limit alcohol use
- Woman of child bearing age should take vitamins with folic acid to prevent certain birth defects

Food safety

Here are some tips to help you "Cook It Safely"

- Use a clean thermometer to make sure that foods reach the proper internal temperature.
- Cook ground beef to 160 degrees
- Cook roasts and steaks to 145 degrees, poultry (chicken breasts) 170 degrees and whole poultry to 180 degrees
- Cook eggs until they are firm
- Cook fish until its opaque and flakes easily with a fork
- Always reheat leftovers to 165 degrees.

Music makes you smarter!

LOCAL VIEW

JOAN JENSEN

It is a well-known fact that successful people who reach fame and fortune generally have a musical instrument which they play for enjoyment. Howard Gardner, educator and researcher at Harvard University, theorizes that one of the ways children learn is through a natural musical "sense." It has been proven long ago that the study of music enhances one's mathematical ability, organizational skills and sociability.

Music is an emotional outlet. How many times has someone sat down at a drum set and pounded out some anger, or wept while playing a nostalgic tune at the piano? Music has been used for years as a therapy for physical and psychological ailments. Dancing with a rhythmic piece helps coordination, and uplifts the soul.

This goes for adults, too.

Adults who return to the piano (for example) after years away rediscover the joy (and challenge!) of playing tunes which are old friends. It's wonderful brain food. Good for the arthritis. Good fun.

More and more, it is becoming evident that music is a very important part of a child's education. It is valuable in and of itself, and can be used as a means to teach readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetic. Not to mention history, social studies, science ... and it makes it all fun!

The best school systems have strong music programs. In Massachusetts for example, Concord-Carlisle, Wayland, Lincoln-Sudbury all have top-notch educational systems with students showing high achievement in tests in all subjects, going on to colleges and successful professions. These schools all have orchestras, with instrumental programs beginning in the early grades. These schools all have music classes straight through the grades, and especially the impressionable middle school years. The students learn to read music and to appreciate all types of music: rock, classical, jazz.

So what about the Cohasset school system? Why has "general music" in the middle school been cut? Why do we have no orchestra program? Why are the younger children not learning to read music? Why do we not have as fine an educational system as those mentioned above?

Students who play together in an orchestra or band or who sing together in a chorus, develop a sense of teamwork very much as in team sports, but in a less competitive spirit. In performing, they work out their own parts to create an intricate and complicated weaving of sound with other musicians. Their sense of self-worth is enhanced. They gain self-confidence and trust in others. They learn to respect each other.

And it's not like learning. It's playing.

And it makes you smarter.

Joan Jensen teaches piano and voice to students ages 7 to 97 in her home studio in Cohasset.

N.H. primary? Iowa Caucuses? Who needs'em?

One of these days we're going to leave the voting booth on the first Tuesday in November and head straight for the new Hampshire's "first-in-the-nation" primary to choose candidates for the election four years down the road.

Don't laugh.

The Granite State is so jealous of its role as the first to select convention delegates every four years in the presidential primaries that it has a law that requires that its primary must be held at lest a week before a similar primary in any other state.

New Hampshire has held primary elections since 1920 but it has only been since 1952, when Estes Kefauver defeated Harry Truman and Ike beat Bob Taft, that people began to take it seriously.

Unfortunately, so did several other states, hence the "week before anyone else" law, passed in 1975, and, since '52, the date of the primary has gradually been moved backward. The latest was set for Feb. 8, 2000.

It didn't take long for sharp eyed New Hampshire men to notice that the country's first primary caught attention across the land by way of that new-fangled telly-vision and pumped untold millions into the state's economy.

Unfortunately, so did several other states, hence the "week before anyone else" law, passed in 1975, and, since '52, the date of the primary has gradually been moved backward. The latest was set for Feb. 8, 2000.

Then it was discovered that Delaware Republicans were planning to hold their primary on Feb. 8 so New Hampshire Secretary of State Bill Gardner invoked the law and set the election back to Feb. 1.

This brought screams from the Midwest as Iowans, who also had a state law requiring that their presidential caucuses be held eight days before any other caucus or primary, had already set its date for 2000 — Jan. 31.

That gave Iowans the option of moving their caucuses back to Jan. 23, when the name of the winner might be forgotten by convention time, or retaining Jan. 31 and losing national publicity, candidate visits and, not incidentally, money.

The 1988 caucuses alone brought $25 million into Iowa's economy. Remember, those were the caucuses in which our own Mike Dukakis suggested that Iowans give up growing corn and turn to Belgian endive to save their economy.

But I digress...

"Suddenly," said Iowa Secretary of State Chet Culver, "because of an unprecedented mow, without any communication to Iowa...we have a very serious situation that could threaten the entire presidential selection process in 2000 and into the future."

The Iowans have proposed that Delaware hold its primary Feb. 15, New Hampshire Feb. 8 and Iowa its caucuses Jan. 31 but neither Delaware or New Hampshire, listening for the ring of cash registers, is willing to go along.

"We should be working with Iowa...to protect the status and relevance of the first-in-the nation caucus and the first-in-the-nation primary," said New Hampshire Gov. Jeanne Shaheen. "We must now focus our efforts on protecting our primary."

The key word in that statement is "relevance." In either the Iowa caucuses of the New Hampshire primary really relevant to the process of choosing candidates for president?

The National Journal's Almanac of Politics once had this to say about the New Hampshire primary:

"There are worse ways to choose a leader... but one wonders what history's verdict will be as it records how the 240 million people of the greatest nation in the free world allowed some 250,000 voters off in one odd corner of the country to winnow down, from a field of dozens of candidates trudging through the melting snow and gooey mud of small industrial cities and tiny new England towns, the list of three or four serious competitors for the preeminent position in American government and American life."

And this about the Iowa caucuses:

"An Iowa victory or near-victory is not necessary to become known nationally. No one ever needs Iowa's few convention votes. A single phone call to the governor of Puerto Rico can deliver just as many (delegates) as spending 189 days in Iowa."

Anybody got a dime?

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829
FOURTH GENERATION

I am a fourth generation plumber. "We use toilet water for cologne" is our family motto. My great-grandfather began the family plumbing business before the turn of the twentieth century, working out of a horse-drawn wagon. He fixed windmills and the associated piping, before there was any municipal water supply.

We haven't expanded our horizons much from the times when flushing the toilet was the new technology, but the plumbing trade has provided a decent living for four generations. It seems like everyone in the family is a plumber, was a plumber, or at least worked in the trade for a time. It is a humble trade, but we are all proud of our work.

Great-grandfather was known as Tinker Bailey, because he could fix anything. The story goes...

Thanksgiving morning, 1888. Tinker was fixing the kitchen drain for Becky Cushing. She said, "I heard one of the Bailey Boys is getting married this morning." He replied, "Yes miss, me." "You! My heavens what a preparation!" Old Aunt Sally said that when people heard that story, every one started calling Fred for their plumbing needs, and it was the beginning of the plumbing company.

I grew up with a sense of belonging in my family, my church, my town, and in the business. I don't think many people have that sense of place today.

Big numbers, but more work ahead

"The schools are in very bad shape," he said. "Everyone who has been paying attention knows this was going to be done. We've been talking about it for the last three or four years. There shouldn't be a debate over whether the work is needed. We have to do these infrastructure repairs and have to become compliant with the American Disabilities Act [ADA]. There will certainly be discussion on grade-alignment issues and how to do the repairs, but the need for the repairs is clear."

Voters will have a few months to digest the numbers and get a feel for the scope of the projects before making an ultimate decision on their financing. The only vote they will take on the renovations at the December special town meeting will be on whether to appropriate funds for architectural drawings. Money for the cost of constructing the project would have to be appropriated at the March town meeting.

The cost estimates for the school renovation projects were provided by Strekalovsky and Hoit architects Donald Walter and Gene Raymond at last Thursday's school committee meeting.

Three options are still left on the table — the school committee will choose one or two to bring before town meeting. One option would be to simply perform needed infrastructure repairs and make modifications such as elevators and handicapped-accessible bathrooms which are necessary to meet federal ADA requirements.

That option is estimated to cost about $28 million, of which Cohasset would absorb the entire cost because the project will not be reimbursable according to state guidelines. To be eligible for the 60 percent reimbursement, the renovations must fulfill specified program goals or must be done in order to meet the additional demand caused by increased enrollment.

In other words, simply performing renovations to the infrastructure of both schools will almost certainly disqualify the project from receiving state reimbursement. To satisfy the demands of increased enrollment and to allow the district to enhance its educational program, an addition will to one or both schools seems to be a necessity.

Haddad said the town will need to see the costs of the renovations without reimbursement.

"The town needs to understand what the renovation costs are and that they'll foot the entire bill without reimbursement," he said.

Both of the remaining two options would involve additions at both Deer Hill and the middle high school. The disparity between the two involves grade configurations.

The option preferred by school principals and Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey would involve moving the sixth-grade from Deer Hill to the middle high school. The third grade would then move from Osgood Elementary School to Deer Hill, leaving room at Osgood for full-day kindergarten in the future. That option is also the most expensive ($40.6 million, $16.2 million after reimbursement).

"Academically, I think we all prefer that option, because it provides us with a 6-8 middle school," said school committee member Kathy Ofsthun.

The other remaining option would leave the grade configurations as they are (K-3 at Osgood, 4-6 at Deer Hill, 7-8 at the middle school, and 9-12 at the high school). By leaving the sixth grade at Deer Hill, new locker rooms would not need to be built at the middle school, which makes the other option more expensive. Taking reimbursement into account, it is the cheapest option available at $37.3 million and $14.9 million after reimbursement.

"It's the most cost-effective option, and it could turn out to be the most popular," said school committee member Stephanie Noble.

Walter and Raymond actually presented cost estimates for five options to the school committee, but the committee voted quickly to dismiss two of those from further consideration.

Nixed was one option that would have included building a new middle school at an unspecified 20-acre site. Also removed from future discussion was a proposal that would have moved the sixth grade to the middle high school, but would have left Osgood as a K-3 school. The committee was unanimous in their distaste for having only grades 4-5 at Deer Hill.

"It's not educationally sound to only have two grades at a school," said school committee member Betsy Connolly. "The kids just begin to adapt to a school and then it would be time to go."

After the school committee had discussed the varying grade configurations, Avery sounded a note of caution. He said some public relations work may be necessary to convince the public that they should spend at least $15 million on the renovations.

"Even the lowest of these options is three times what we agonized over with the Osgood school," he said.

The three school renovation options and their projected costs

Parker Ave. parking

Town Manager Mark Haddad sent a letter to all residents of Parker Avenue on Sept. 30 stating that the traffic committee thinks parking on the narrow roadway should be prohibited on both sides of the street.

"(The traffic committee) feels that by eliminating on-street parking, safety on Parker Avenue will be improved," Haddad wrote.

He asked for the residents' comments by Oct. 12, so selectmen would have their opinion on the matter.

Helen and Jim Clinton, 6 Parker Ave., replied Oct. 5 and said designating Parker Avenue as a no-parking street would penalize only the residents of Parker Avenue.

"It would mean our guests would be unable to park and that we couldn't park for short periods of time to unload the car or whatever," they wrote. "In addition, it would leave the street open for those who use it to go to the launching ramp" and would therefore encourage speeding.

David Coletta, 15 Parker Ave., agreed, writing that eliminating parking on both sides would not improve safety but make the street more perilous for residents.

"The parking restriction currently in effect on the east side of the street is sufficient," Coletta said. He said cars parked on the street force drivers, many hauling boats, to travel at or below the speed limit.

Coletta suggested a sign at the entrance of Parker Avenue asking drivers to slow down might help and the Clintons suggested speed bumps.

there will be a two-week hiatus. Then the next three programs will cover the schools, library and town meeting articles, in that order.

"Wig and I also hope to cover town meeting live," Roth said.

She explained that they worked with Media One to be able to televise the show this way rather than at the studio in Norwell, which would not be as convenient and require more volunteers.

Media One staff will be on hand tonight to help train the teenagers operating the camera, Roth said.

Roth is a part-time reading teacher with the Braintree Public Schools and Pierson runs New Options Group, a career consulting business in Norwell. He also serves as chairman of the Town History Committee charged with compiling the third volume of Cohasset's history.

The hosts invite suggestions for future shows. Roth can be reached a 383-9164 and Pierson at 383-6940.

Articles attempt to block CHL expansion

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Many people who believed the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill was closed forever were surprised when owner Paul Barry announced plans last July to open a new landfill. Barry revived plans to expand into Area V, an section of CHL not used previously for landfilling. A new landfill rising next to the old one is more than some resident can bear. Two citizens' articles specifically intended to block CHL's proposed expansion will appear on the fall town meeting warrant.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) is the lead signer on both article petitions. McNabb said he has verified with the town clerk's office that the 100 signatures required to submit a citizens' article have been submitted properly and approved. One article would expand the authority of the conservation commission to protect local watersheds against landfills, and the other would change zoning regulations to prevent the Area V expansion.

"People need to know that CHL is not going to stop its efforts to expand, and we need a lasting solution," McNabb said. "The intent here is not only to block Area V, but also to block any future attempts at Areas VI, VII, VIII and IX. The town has spent more than a million dollars dealing with legal and administrative problems arising from CHL."

This marks the third time a citizens' article has attempted zoning changes that would affect CHL. In 1991, town meeting voters rejected a similar zoning changes in the same area when the article did not win the two-thirds majority needed for passage. Only 60 percent of the voters in attendance approved the zoning change in 1991. McNabb said a second article planned for 1997 was withdrawn when the town won court approval for its rejection of a previous attempt to expand Area V.

The zoning article proposed for this fall's town meeting would not affect just CHL, McNabb said. He pointed out that the article would change the zoning of approximately 150 acres of land west of Route 3A, and include all of CHL. For approximately 40 years, the land in question has been zoned for light industrial use, which permits landfills. State laws— which in this case supersede local regulations— allow landfills in any type of industrial zone as a matter of right. The article asks voters to change the zoning to highway business use, which does not permit landfill uses.

"This is only one of three areas in Cohasset zoned light industrial, which are the only type of areas in town zoned for solid waste facilities," McNabb said. "The real question we have to ask ourselves is what other uses we will be changing if we adopt this article."

Cohasset's light industrial zone is the only area of town that permits manufacturing. McNabb said any current manufacturers in the rezoned area would be able to continue operation under a grandfather clause. Other uses, such as auto body shops, are allowed in the highway business zone with a special permit.

"Since Norfolk Conveyor closed, there has been no active manufacturing in this area except at CHL," McNabb said. "Besides, who's going to go to Cohasset for a manufacturing plant? This is the smallest possible change that prohibits landfills. And we would not oppose modifications that allow other uses."

McNabb said CHL cannot utilize a grandfather clause for Area V because it doesn't have an active and approved special permit, and the main facility has been closed since July, 1998. He pointed out that changing the zoning of the whole 150-acre area also protects the town against charges of spot zoning to prevent construction of the new landfill.

"Spot zoning is singling out a single parcel for disparate treatment different from the surrounding area," McNabb said. "We're not doing that. We're changing the zoning of the entire area."

McNabb said CHL has opposed zoning changes in the past by filing a Form A Subdivision Approval Not Required, which freezes current zoning on a specific parcel for three years. But CHL may not qualify for that, McNabb said.

The second citizens' article would give the conservation commission more power to regulate storm water discharge and leachate from any landfill that drains to a watershed. Storm water has the potential to carry material from CHL into the surrounding watershed, McNabb said. There is also the threat of leachate seeping into wetlands, he added.

McNabb said the article is necessary to protect the town's water supply.

"In 1996, the conservation commission set down an order of conditions requiring CHL to implement storm water controls for zero-discharge into the watershed," McNabb said. "CHL appealed to DEP and Norfolk Superior Court, and won in both cases. DEP somehow said its regulations actually allow up to 20 percent discharge, and the court said the town based its ruling on DEP regulations so had to abide by their ruling."

McNabb said if the town's ruling had been based on local regulations, the court probably would have found in Cohasset's favor. Case law shows that in cases where local regulations are more stringent than state rules, courts rule in favor of towns. Although the conservation commission could issue a new order of conditions based specifically on local regulations, the new bylaw is better, McNabb said, because it gives the town more control over discharge from landfills.

"This bylaw gives the conservation commission explicit authority to protect Lily Pond from runoff and leachate," McNabb said. "Once it passes, the conservation can on its own or by issue new conditions."

McNabb said he hasn't consulted with the conservation commission to prevent any conflicts of interest. He added that the conservation commission favored zero-discharge in its order of conditions, and this bylaw would allow them to implement that condition in the future.

CHL is seeking permission to build a new landfill in Area V, an unused portion of the now closed facility. The main facility closed in 1998 because it lacked a valid special permit. Currently, CHL cannot build a new landfill or apply for approval from the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) because of the state's current moratorium on new and expanded facilities. DEP is expected to lift the moratorium within six months, after it completes a new solid waste master plan for the entire state.

KEDS to cover its own benefits

Rate increases will allow the program to absorb the costs

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

As part of its summer series of spotlight issues, in which certain school programs are examined in depth, the school committee decided to examine the department's tuition-supported child care program known as KEDS. The program came under fire when taxpayers and selectmen wondered why benefits for the KEDS employees were being paid by the town. While nothing new occurred this year with the before and after-school day care program for children in grades K-6 that has been part of the school department since 1987, the attention focused upon it caused its expenditures to be scrutinized.

"It's been in existence for several years, but when we made it a spotlight issue we realized that the benefits for the program's employees were being paid out of the town side," said school committee Mark DeGiacomo to selectmen at their meeting last week.

Following the school committee meeting at which KEDS was studied, former advisory board member Leland Jenkins brought the issue of the employees' benefits to the attention of selectmen. Selectmen then requested DeGiacomo's presence to appraise them of the benefit situation.

Although the benefits of all school employees are paid by the town, DeGiacomo said the school committee decided that KEDS should be able to absorb its own benefit costs.

"The school department cost, such as supplies and the salaries of instructors, are covered by tuition but the benefits are not," he said. We had to decide if this program should be fully self-supporting and it's our feeling that it should be."

To achieve the goal of a truly self-supporting program, DeGiacomo said that tuition rates will have to increase.

"Right now, the tuition rate is set to cover salaries and the cost of supplies," he said. "Next year, it will have to go up to the point where the program is self-supporting."

The cost of tuition varies with each child, depending in how often they take part in the program. Also, some children attend before and after school, while some only do one or the other.

Selectman Thomas Callahan wondered whether the cost of utilities should also be factored into tuition rates, as the program runs before and after school hours.

"I want to think of everything that goes into the program," he said.

Town manager Mark Haddad said utilities are not an issue because the building is being used by other groups as well while the KEDS program is going on.

"I don't think utilities are impacted at all," he said. "There are custodians and others who are in those buildings [Deer Hill and Osgood] both before and after that program.

According to director Elizabeth Alpert, there are 96 children involved in the program, which also includes afternoon care for students attending morning kindergarten classes and vice versa.

The before school program, known as the Breakfast Club, is open daily at Osgood from 7 to 9 a.m. Breakfast is not provided, but children may bring their breakfast with them if they wish.

Children in grades 4-6 are taken to Deer Hill at 8:15 a.m., while Osgood students are dismissed to walk to their classes at 8:50 a.m.

The after school program is divided into two groups, with grades K-2 at Osgood and grades 3-6 at Deer Hill.

"We separate the kids for a couple of reasons," Alpert said. "First of all, it helps divide the large number of children (95), and it also allows us to plan age appropriate activities."

The third-grade students are brought by bus or walk to Deer Hill, and the all-important snack is served to all the students upon their arrival. Children at Deer Hill are required to do a half hour of homework or reading, excluding Fridays, and there are plenty of other activities to occupy their interests until pickup at 6:00 p.m.

"We have outdoor play, they can do sports in the gym, and we have a loft where the kids can read or play," Alpert said. "We try to create a fun atmosphere for the kids."

Parents can choose between the programs in which they wish to enroll their child or children. There is a 10 percent discount for one sibling and a 15 percent discount for a second sibling.

CANCER TALK WITH CLAIRE FUNG, MD

Breast Cancer Alert - Part 2

Second only to lung cancer, breast cancer is a leading cancer killer of women. The best defense against this disease is early detection. Fortunately, when detected early enough, breast cancer has a 90% cure rate.

In educating yourself about the disease, you should know that some women stand a greater risk of getting breast cancer than others. According to the American Cancer Society, the following factors increase your chance of developing breast cancer:

- over the age of 50
- history of breast cancer in your close family (mother, sister)
- first childbirth after age of 30
- never having children
- obesity (weighing 40% more than your recommended weight)

In assessing these risk factors, please note that they are just that, risk factors. They are not absolute indications of breast cancer because the majority of women with these risk factors do not develop breast cancer. Being aware of the risk factors, however, should alert you to the importance of regular screening for breast cancer.

As we noted last week, all three methods of screening — breast self-exam, clinical breast exam, and mammography — are essential in the fight against breast cancer. If the disease is caught when the cancer is small and localized the likelihood of needing to have a mastectomy is significantly reduced. A mastectomy is the surgical removal of the entire breast.

Precisely because we are doing a better job of early detection, mastectomies are not as necessary or as common as they used to be. If the cancerous tumor is small and has not spread beyond the breast, a lumpectomy is equally effective. A lumpectomy is the surgical removal of the cancerous lump/tumor and a small amount of surrounding tissue. Overall, the breast is saved.

As a radiation oncologist, I specialize in using radiation to combat cancer and I see the progress we are making in refining treatment. With advanced equipment, we can focus the radiation beam more precisely to eradicate or minimize the tumor. In the process, we conserve more of a patient's healthy tissue and reduce negative side effects.

Of course, in dealing with breast cancer there are no easy answers. Every case is unique and must be reviewed accordingly. Certain patients will require localized treatment such as surgery or radiation, others a more systemic approach such as chemo- or hormonal therapy. There is, however, plenty of information about all aspects of the disease from detection to emotional reactions to breast reconstruction. Your local chapter of the American Cancer Society is a valuable and free resource. Take advantage of this public service to educate yourself.

There are also many books on breast cancer. Dr. Susan Love's Breast Book is a guide for gathering information, understanding the diagnosis and choosing treatment. Informative and clearly written, it is an excellent education tool for those concerned about breast cancer.

WHOSE RIGHT TO KNOW?

Some Massachusetts officials snub open records

When Gov. Paul Cellucci and two of his staff members went to Hollywood last April, they lived in style at taxpayers' expense.

During his five-day visit to make an appearance on "Ally McBeal" and drum up film business for the commonwealth, Cellucci and his two aides stayed at the Four Seasons Hotel in Beverly Hills for $262.20 a night.

Cellucci also rented a suite for two days for $729 a night. The total hotel tab for the trio, including their long distance phone calls: $5,130, according to public records.

Those were the only records Cellucci's office provided in its response to a written request for his out-of-state travel expenses made by the Community Newspaper Company last June.

The governor's office didn't provide any expense reports related to his taxpayer-funded trips last spring to France, Ireland and Nova Scotia.

The issue is not whether the trips were valid. Or whether the costs were out of line. Rather, it is the governor's compliance with the state's Public Records Law. The law states that the public has the right to obtain records such as expense reports in a timely fashion.

Second of two parts

"I'm puzzled," said Michael Dukakis, the former governor of Massachusetts who is now a political science professor at Northeastern University. "That kind of information ought to be available immediately. If the expenses are appropriate, why the reluctance to release them,?"

But for two months, Cellucci's office didn't respond at all to the request. Only when Community Newspaper Company filed an appeal with the secretary of state did the governor's attorney respond, in writing, with a request for $120 to find the documents and make copies.

Even after that payment was provided on Aug. 23, the governor's office said it would take nearly another month to make the records public. The governor's office agreed to provide the records on Sept. 17, three months after the original request was made.

"The governor's office needs to lead by example," said Janet Domenitz, executive director of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, which describes itself as a nonprofit, non-partisan research and advocacy group proposing liberal solutions on behalf of consumers, the environment and good government in the state.

Paul Cellucci

"If there are problems at the top and lack of respect for the law, then that may solve the mystery as to why there are problems at the local level," Domenitz said.

"It's terrible," said William Plante Jr., executive director of the Massachusetts Newspaper Publishers Association, referring to Cellucci's reluctance to part with the information.

The problem is that state officials who fail to abide by the public records law "pay no political consequences" for blocking access, he said.

When asked why it took so long for the governor's office to respond, Leonard Lewin, the governor's chief counsel, said: "I can only apologize for that. We're inundated with requests. The governor's office always tries to respond to open records requests."

However, Lewin did not return later phone calls to explain why the documents his office provided gave no details about the governor's trips to Ireland, France and Nova Scotia and the governor's assistant press secretary, Jason Kauppi, had no explanation.

Plante said a climate exists in the commonwealth where state officials feel they are above the public records law. "All too often, this is a result of a bureaucratic separateness from the ordinary citizen," he said.

It wasn't just the governor's office that failed to abide by the spirit of the law. In fact, the Department of Education was the only one of 10 state agencies surveyed to produce requested documents within 10 days.

"We believe in being totally open," said Alan Safran, chief of staff to Education Commissioner David Driscoll. "We want people to feel that the department and their schools are open to the public. That builds public understanding, and that in turn, leads to better public policy."

For each of the 10 state agencies, the newspaper requested last year's expense reports of its top executive, employees' cell phone bills, their annual salaries, overtime, and billings by consultants. The newspaper asked the governor's office for out-of-state travel expenses.

In numerous instances, state agencies responded to the request within 10 days as required by the law, but they took far longer to actually produce the records or to provide an estimate of their costs.

•In a June 21 letter, the Massachusetts State Police said they were reviewing the request. More than a month later, the police said they would provide the expense reports for free, the annual salaries and employee overtime for $52.24 and the cell phone bills for $26,732.43, based on the time it would take to remove personal phone numbers and review the bills.

• On June 21, the Department of Environmental Protection said it was doing research for the request, and during the week of Aug. 9, the agency said all of the records were ready for review and it waived all fees. "If it's a public record, it's open to anyone," said DEP spokesman Rick Lombardi. "But it's difficult to assemble a lot of records in a timely fashion because we have four regional offices across the state, each with its own human resources department."

• On June 24, the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority provided some of the documents and on Aug. 13, it added the executive director's 1998 expense reports and the year's cellular telephone bills – all for free.

• On June 25, the Registry of Motor Vehicles responded that it would cost $868.07 to produce the same type of documents that the education department provided for free.

• On June 28, the MBTA and the Turnpike Authority both wrote letters saying they were doing research to fulfill the requests. Community Newspaper Co. never got any cost estimates or records from the Turnpike Authority, which later claimed it was waiting for a clarification from CNC about the request. The MBTA wrote on Aug. 20 that it would provide all of the documents for $1,794.

• Massport never responded at all. A spokesman recently said he could not find the request.

"It borders on arrogance when these kinds of things happen to the media," said Plante, the publishers association executive. "These officials have to recognize that the media represents the people in a democratic society."

But apparently, that's usually not the way some state officials see it.

On Aug. 2, more than a month after the request, the Department of Correction, which oversees the state's prisons, said it would cost $1,445.30 to produce the records. And nine days later, on Aug. 11, the state attorney general's office – which is supposed to enforce the public records law – finally provided the documents, nearly two months after they were originally requested.

In a recent interview, First Assistant Attorney General Dean Richlin said: "Our challenge is to meet the 10-day rule. But we have a lot on our plate. We don't have all the resources that the public should expect from us. So there's prioritization all the time."

Officials face little threat of punishment

By Christopher A. Szechenyi
CNC PROJECTS EDITOR

In Massachusetts, lax enforcement has undermined the public records law.

Residents who cannot obtain public records have little recourse except to appeal to the secretary of state's supervisor of public records. The supervisor may order the release of records, but if public officials fail to comply, they face no sanctions or criminal penalties for violating the law.

In Connecticut, by contrast, public officials face a $1,000 fine for each violation of its law on open records and can face imprisonment for as long as six months.

A five-member Freedom of Information Commission based in Hartford is empowered to take violators directly to court. The commission, which handles about 600 complaints per year, can levy the fines itself or seek imprisonment through the court.

> The commission, which handles about 600 complaints per year, can levy the fines itself or seek imprisonment through the court.

But the state supervisor of public records in Massachusetts, Carolyn Kelly MacWilliam, has no authority to punish violators, even when she orders them to release public information.

If a public agency ignores an order by the supervisor of public records, MacWilliam may refer the case to the state attorney general for enforcement, but the attorney general does not have to do as the supervisor asks.

"You have to go to a political figure," Pearlman said of the system in Massachusetts. "If the order is against a Democrat, the attorney general is going to have a lot of reluctance to embarrass his colleague by taking him to court."

Whether politics was involved or not, records show that the attorney general's office, under Scott Harshbarger and now under Tom Reilly, has failed to take up cases against the Boston Police Department, the State Funeral Board, the Nantucket Schools, the Worcester Police Department and several other public agencies.

As MacWilliam herself notes, the attorney general has an inherent conflict of interest in some cases. "In cases where the record custodian is a state agency, the attorney general must determine which agency to defend – the custodian or the supervisor," she said.

In fact, a story by the Worcester Telegram & Gazette recently found that from 1991 to 1998, Harshbarger enforced only four of 81 decisions referred to him by the public records supervisor. And Harshbarger's predecessor, James M. Shannon, did not respond to any of 17 requests for enforcement.

A legislative solution to alter the law in the commonwealth and to establish an independent commission has been languishing on Beacon Hill for years. The bill, reintroduced this year by Rep. Geoffrey D. Hall of Westford, at the request of Galvin's office, would establish a system modeled after Connecticut's.

"The legislation contains sanction provisions which are desperately needed," MacWilliam testified earlier this year. "It can be difficult to achieve compliance with an administrative order when an official realizes there is no civil penalty associated with non-compliance."

And as the appeals pile up in MacWilliam's office, the problem of noncompliance is likely to grow more acute. The number of people seeking public records with the supervisor's help has almost quadrupled during the past 16 years, from 228 in 1982 to 801 last year.

The only cost to implement the commission would be reimbursement of travel expenses for its members to meet once a month.

William Plante, executive director of the Massachusetts Newspaper Publishers Association, believes many Open Meeting Law violations "are out of ignorance of the law. But occasionally we have seen some people deliberately thumbing their nose at the law."

How this story was done

To check how the open record system works in Massachusetts, more than 100 reporters from Community Newspaper Co. requested a uniform set of 10 documents from police departments, town halls, school departments and boards of health in communities across eastern Massachusetts.

In towns they usually did not cover, the reporters first made verbal requests for a copy of a restaurant inspection, the police log, a police incident report, the latest School Committee minutes, and the public works director's salary – all public records.

To test official reactions to ordinary citizens, the reporters first asked for the records without offering identification. However, they always identified themselves as reporters when asked.

In fact, that became part of the test: Could a citizen request a public record without being quizzed about who they were and why they wanted the record?

In a second round of requests, another team of reporters went to towns they cover on a regular basis and asked verbally and in writing for teachers' salaries, the school superintendent's expense reports for last year, total police overtime for 1998, a list of delinquent taxpayers and e-mails concerning government business.

Open Meeting Law violations common

By Christopher A. Szechenyi
CNC PROJECTS EDITOR

On July, 8, 1998, the Uxbridge Board of Appeals violated the Open Meeting Law by failing to post a notice 48 hours in advance of an on-site inspection at 143 North Main St.

The board took a vote during the inspection – making it subject to the Open Meeting Law, according to a letter sent to the board from Worcester County District Attorney John J. Conte's office.

On-site inspections are excluded from the definition of "meeting" under the law, so they usually aren't subject to its 48-hour advance notice requirement. But in this case, the board's vote rendered the inspection a meeting that should have been posted, the district attorney concluded, after investigating the case.

The difference may be subtle, but the Open Meeting Law is intended to protect the public's interest in government activities. In general, the law says "all meetings of a governmental body shall be open to the public..." and "no quorum of a governmental body shall meet in private for the purpose of deciding on or deliberating toward a decision..."

District attorneys in each county of the commonwealth are responsible for enforcing the Open Meeting Law. A review of the district attorneys' activities during the past two years reveals that violations of the law occur commonly.

"Sometimes the law is inconvenient. Sometimes it's awkward because some of the conversations might be more productive in private. But that's the price of democracy. No laws are perfect. But that's no reason to ignore them," said Michael Widmer, president of the Massachusetts Taxpayer Foundation.

"A lot of the violations are out of ignorance of the law," said William Plante Jr., executive director of the Massachusetts Newspaper Publishers Association. "But occasionally we have seen some people deliberately thumbing their nose at the law."

Violations by phone and e-mail

On June 22, Middlesex County District Attorney Martha Coakley's office issued an opinion that the Board of Selectmen in Maynard violated the law by routinely calling one another by telephone about town business.

She advised the board's chairman to "refrain from making calls which may ultimately reach a quorum on any matter other than that of a purely housekeeping nature."

The person who made the complaint, Tresa Jones, a selectman, also charged that board members routinely conduct private discussions in the form of e-mail. Coakley's office also advised the body to avoid e-mail messages, except for administrative or housekeeping matters.

In a similar matter, the district attorney found that the Ashland Board of Selectmen was violating the law by exchanging e-mail messages, "many of which eventually reached a quorum," about a development proposal for a portion of the former Nyanza Chemical Co. site.

In a March 10 letter, Coakley told the board that "these e-mail conversations among a quorum of the board deprived the public of the opportunity to attend and monitor the e-mail meetings." She went on to say "such private conversations are a serious violation of the law."

Coakley took no further action against the board, however, because the private e-mail communications were reviewed by the board in an open meeting; the board generated copies of the e-mails and provided them to the public; and the board's recommendation didn't prejudice the final decision on the proposal. In fact, Town Meeting rejected the board's recommendation.

Meeting minutes and notices

On April 27, 1998, for example, then-Middlesex District Attorney Tom Reilly found that the Everett Board of Fire Commissioners violated the law by failing to properly record its actions in the minutes of two meetings in the course of disciplining a firefighter, Patrick Vantour. Reilly's office directed the board to amend its minutes to reflect the votes taken and the decisions reached in the disciplinary case.

In a case in Lexington, Reilly's office found on Aug. 26, 1998, that the Board of Assessors failed to post a notice for a meeting at which there was a discussion of growth and commercial values.

Some government entities have violated the law by going into executive session for the wrong reason. For instance, Reilly's office said in a letter on Sept. 23, 1998, that selectmen in Billerica should not have reviewed the performance of the town manager in executive session, or decided privately to institute quarterly reviews of his work.

"The board should reserve all matters regarding performance reviews for an open meeting," Reilly's office said. "It was the judgment of the Legislature in enacting the Open Meeting Law that the public's right to monitor the performance of public officials outweighed the drawbacks of holding evaluations in open session."

Repeated violations

In Pembroke, the district attorney's office found repeated violations. In a March 13, 1998, letter to the chairman of the Board of Selectmen, Assistant District Attorney Mary E. Mullaney said, "I am very troubled by the prospect of continuing violations."

Mullaney said that the board apparently failed to post an executive session it held on Jan. 21 at least 48 hours ahead of time. She also reminded the board that minutes must be kept for all meetings, including executive sessions.

Mullaney noted that the district attorney has the authority to enforce the law through a civil suit, and the board may be forced to pay a $1,000 fine. But district attorneys in eastern Massachusetts rarely seek those fines because government entities usually comply with their orders to obey the law.

"The potential fines give the law some validity in the eyes of the people transgressing it," said Plante. "But they're rarely pushed to that point."

October workshops at art center

The South Shore Art Center is offering a series of workshops guaranteed to add autumnal creative inspiration. The Polaroid Transfer Process, a one-day workshop for adults, will be offered Sunday, Oct. 17 from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Taught by Lauren O'Neal, artist, teacher and executive director of the Arlington Center for the Arts, this class will introduce the process of giving photographs a hand-painted and nostalgic quality by making prints from 35 mm slides. The images can stand on their own or be integrated into handmade books, cards or other works.

Another class incorporating photography will be taught by local award-winning artist Becky Haletky. In Handcoloring Black and White Photographs, students will learn how to color black and white photographs with Marshall's oils. Use of colored pencils and oil paints will also be included. The class will meet Monday evening, Oct. 25 from 7 to 10 p.m. Students can in one evening learn an interesting new artistic technique.

Jenna Cutler, owner of Labyrinth Design, a Hingham rubber stamp store will be teaching a series of workshops in rubber stamping. The three workshops will include an introduction to different techniques including making cards, mirror or photo frames and stamping on fabric. The results are exquisite and the resulting artwork does not look like it was made with rubber stamps. The workshops are offered on Wednesday evenings in October and November. Call the Art Center at 383-2787 for more information or to register for courses and workshops.

Briton Nichols, Cohasset's black Revolutionary War soldier

YESTERDAYS

DAVID WADSWORTH

Among Cohasset's Revolutionary War soldiers one recruit was named Briton Nichols. He served in Capt. Clark's 21st Division in 1780. He was one of the men raised by the town of Cohasset for six months service, and appears on the payroll for that year, having served six months and 17 days, and having 13L 2s 8p due in wages. The descriptive list of Cohasset members of the 21st Division that year shows Briton (or Britain) Nichols as being a "Negro." He was age 40, and was 5-foot-11. He is also shown as one of the "six months men" marching from Cohasset on July 13 to arrive at Springfield on July 19, 1780, leaving there on a march a day later in Capt. Clark's 21st Division. Briton Nichols was discharged on Dec. 6 of that year.

Briton Nichols's origin is not known, nor is the exact reason his name appears among Cohasset soldiers of the year 1780; that is, why he chose Cohasset as the town from which to enlist. The volume titled "Massachusetts Soldiers and Sailors in the War of the Revolution" gives the following military record for Briton Nichols, under the name "Britton": Private, Capt. Theophilus Wilder's co., Col. Gill's regt.; enlisted Aug. 24, 1777; discharged Nov. 29, 1777; service 3 mos. 19 days, with the Northern Army, including travel days home; also Capt. Job Cushing's co. (Hingham and Cohasset), Lieut. Col. Samuel's Pierce regt.; enlisted May 24, 1779; discharged July 1, 1779; service 1 mo. 11 days, at Tiverton, R.I. These times of service were followed by those previously; "engaged for the town of Cohasset." His name also appears on the list of men raised for the six months service and returned by Brig. Gen. Paterson as having passed muster, in a return dated Camp Totoway, Oct. 25, 1780.

"Narrative History of Cohasset," vol. 1 by E. Victor Bigelow, in discussing Cohasset soldier Ambrose Bates's diary describing the march to, battle at and return from Saratoga in the fall of 1777, speculates that Briton Nichols, who had enlisted in August and was discharged in November that year, seemed to have been one of Bates's messmates, among other Cohasset and Hingham soldiers. That enlistment would have been part of the effort to reinforce the Northern Army in its successful campaign against British General Burgoyne that culminated with the British defeat at Saratoga.

During the Revolution, lengths of service in Militia and army fell into various time durations: from three months for specific assignments, to longer enlistments of as much as three years, and Briton Nichols appears to have served in at least three of these short-term enlistments. Each town received a "quota" for the number of men it must supply for military duty, and the smallest towns, such as Cohasset, could find themselves hard-pressed to continually produce men to fill their quotas. Thus bounties were paid to recruits from elsewhere to enlist in Cohasset, helping to fill its quota. It seems possible that Briton Nichols might have been one of these "quota men," though the record does not state so. Another possibility, though perhaps remote, is that he might have been a slave or indentured servant of a Cohasset family. It is noted that when Nathaniel Nichols died in June 1758 his Will mentions two slaves, "one male, one female," but no names are given.

The more extensive rolls of the larger Hingham militia companies, though carrying a number of out-of-towners (probably quota men receiving bounties) and several black soldiers, do not appear to carry the name of Briton Nichols; thus, he appears to have served solely from Cohasset, and may have had no connection with our parent town of Hingham. His name does not appear in the published Genealogies of either town. It appears that more extensive research than local records would be needed to learn the identity and history of the only known African-American to serve in the Revolution from Cohasset.

'The Road to Jerusalem' is Oct. 24

The Society's annual meeting will be held at Kimball's-by-the-Sea on Sunday, Oct. 24. There will be a social hour from 5 to 6 p.m. and then dinner, followed by an illustrated talk by Curator Dave Wadsworth, the title called "The Road to Jerusalem Revisited." The original presentation of the history of Jerusalem Road was given in the 1980's at a Society meeting, and this will be a revised version of that fascinating subject. Jerusalem Road is one of the most ancient of highways in Cohasset, with a particularly varied history. More will be announced soon about the 1999 annual meeting and dinner with program, but be sure to reserve that date.

The cost is $30 for members and $35 for non-members. For reservations contact the Society at 14 Summer St. or call 383-1434.

Beechwood is subject of talk

This fall will see a continuation of the Society's popular series of informal Thursday evening programs devoted to various facets of Cohasset's history.

On Oct. 28 Rebecca Bates-McArthur and others will present a second talk on the fascinating history of Beechwood. These programs will be held at the Lighthouse Keepers' house, Government Island, and will meet at 7:30 p.m. with the talk starting at 7:45 p.m. There will be light refreshments.

The cost is $30 for members and $35 for non-members. For reservations contact the Society at 14 Summer St. or call 383-1434.

Football squad drops a thriller, 22-21

Skippers must regroup for Norton on Saturday

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

As the clock continued to tick, no one in the stands was quite sure just what the Abington High football team was going to do, but the Cohasset sideline knew.

Trailing 21-19, the Green Wave marched all the way down to the Cohasset 14-yard line, where it faced fourth and seven. Abington coach Jim Kelliher elected to let the play clock tick all the way down to one second, and he called timeout with 58 seconds left on the game clock.

"We've scouted them, and we played them last year, so we knew what they were going to do," said Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe. "We knew they'd go for the field goal."

The Green Wave did just that, and Mike McCleary's 32-yard kick sailed through the uprights to give his team a 22-21 win. The loss drops Cohasset to 1-3 overall and 0-2 in league play.

Cohasset never trailed until the final 58 seconds of the contest.

"It was so nice to see us play well, especially after the stinker we played the week before," said Rolfe. "I thought (offensive and defensive tackles) Craig Parker and Craig Davis were outstanding on both sides of the ball."

Next up for the Skippers is a game at Norton on Saturday. The game has been switched to 2:30 p.m. because of SAT's.

"We have to get ready and play really well," said Rolfe. "We have to build on the things we did well. We looked good offensively, but we had too many lapses."

Daniel Trowers had 26 carries for 121 yards, giving the Green Wave fits all night.

"You really can't stop a kid as fast as he is," said Kelliher. "You can only hope you can somewhat contain him. You're always afraid that he's going to get away. He's got that gift. You think you have him, then boom he takes off."

The Skippers jumped out to a 7-0 lead when they marched 63 yards on the opening possession and scored on a Brian Krupczak one-yard plunge. Trowers had seven carries for 44 yards on the drive.

Abington answered on the very next possession with an 11-play, 64-yard drive that culminated in a one-yard touchdown by Joseph Iacobucci with 13 seconds remaining in the first quarter. Jonathan Watters carried the ball four times for 45 yards.

Both offenses sputtered briefly, before Watters was able to return a punt to the Cohasset 12 late in the half. Four plays later, McCleary attempted a 28-yard field goal, but the kick sailed wide right and the half ended with the score tied, 7-7.

"Mike's a good kicker," said Kelliher. "He was upset at himself for missing that kick. He felt he should have made it"

Cohasset had the lead again when Kevin Andrew scooped up a fumble and returned it 24 yards for a touchdown. Jason Brown found Trowers open in the end zone for two and a 15-7 lead.

Abington answered right back with an 85-yard kick return from Watters to cut the lead to 15-13 with 4:26 to go in the third quarter

Cohasset was able to up its lead to 21-13 on a 38-yard run by Trowers with 9:37 left. The Green Wave answered yet again on the ensuing kickoff, as Richard Hall brought it back 80 yards for the score. Abington's bid to tie it failed when its pass play was broken up on the conversion attempt, and Cohasset led 21-19.

The Skippers went three and out on their next possession, and Abington took over on its own 20 with 7:45 remaining. Twelve plays later, the Green Wave faced fourth and seven from the 14 with 58 seconds left, setting up McCleary's heroics.

"What a great game," said Keilliher. "This is the most exciting game I've had in 27 years as a head coach. To get two kickoff returns for touchdowns is great. We really came through. The kids did a heck of a job. I know it's a hurting time for them, but they played a great game too."

Rolfe agreed.

"It surely was exciting," said Rolfe. "I told the kids they played a great game."

Skippers look to get offensive

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The field hockey team just could not find their niche last week, despite playing solidly against two extremely good teams. They lost to Notre Dame 3-0 and to Hull 2-0.

Both of the opposing teams happen to have hundreds more girls from which to choose their varsity squads. When there are more girls, the teams are going to be better. That is simply the law of averages.

Since it is a small town, these girls are going to rely on heart as well as their hard work for the remainder of the season. Many of the Skipper faithful know you do not need numbers to have that.

"We came out flat," said junior Ashley Ulmer. "I don't know if it is because we were exhausted from playing Hanover or what."

Notre Dame has been tough to beat ever since they came into the league.

Their junior varsity squad is also talented, and defeated Cohasset, 5-0.

"We really played well as a team."
SENIOR CO-CAPTAIN
MELISSA PYFROM

Last week was a bitter pill for the ladies in blue to swallow, especially after their great play against the aforementioned Hanover team.

Though the score did not show it, the girls played up to their potential against Hull. Losing 2-0, the Skippers played their best.

Coach Debbie Bostwick has said time after time this season, it is not about winning or losing, it is about playing your best.Despite the loss, most of the players on Cohasset felt they played well.

"We really played well as a team," enthused senior co-captain Melissa Pyfrom. "They [Hull] are a really good team."

On a cheerier note, the junior varsity team tied Hull 2-2, with two goals coming from sophomore Allison Scott and assists from freshmen Heather Peraino and Krista Nicynski. Cohasset also got strong play from freshman netminder Sera Genovese.

With the pair of losses, Cohasset's record dropped to 3-4-3.

Coming up this week are three very winnable road games in Carver, Norwell, and Chatham. If the Lady Skippers can come away with victories at all three of the contests, they would need just one more tie to clinch a .500 season, and thus, a berth in the end of year tournament in Nantucket.

Losses are always tough, whether it be a blowout or a one point defeat at the last second. But hopefully, Cohasset can bounce right back next week with a newfound determination.

It must have been that bad batch of apple cider

EXTRA POINTS
MIKE HARDMAN

It was sometime in August and the last thing I remember is that I was playing a mean whiffle ball game with some friends, worked up a thirst and reached for the cider someone gave us about five Halloweens ago.

I'm not a drinker with the exception of the time I got a sugar rush from drinking a case of chocolate milk about 12 years ago.

But since the apple cider experience, I've been in a blurry state, alternating between conscious and unconscious.

Just the other day, I thought I was coming out of it when I took another shot to the old noggin.

I dreamed or imagined that the Boston Red Sox were the middle of a championship series against the New York Yankees.

Ya, right.

Who's in right field for the Red Sox? Bernie Carbo.

Roy White and Horace Clarke must still be playing in the Bronx. What's Joe Pepitone batting these days?

After all, this isn't happening.

There's no way the Red Sox beat the Cleveland Indians. Not since Lou Bourdeau in 1948 has the Red Sox ever beaten Cleveland when it mattered. A series in July, especially when the Indians were real bad, maybe.

1948.

It could have been the Kenmore Square series. Why pitch Danny Galehouse?

But those were your father's Red Sox.

Our Red Sox have caused enough pain with the Indians being the prime suspects along with the Cardinals, Reds, Orioles, Mets, Yankees, Royals, A's, White Sox, Tigers (1972 anyone?), Rangers, Senators, Brewers, Blue Jays, Angels (wait, their curse might be worst than the Sox), Twins, Mariners, etc, etc...

You can only focus on one tragedy at a time.

Focus on the Indians:.

1995. Hey Jose what where you seeing? Same goes for you Mo.

1998. One game. They won one game.

Aren't the Indians the team that scored a zillion runs and won a billion games? Manny Ramirez would kill those ragged arm Red Sox pitchers. Roberto Alomar, Kenny Lofton, Sandy Alomar, Travis Fryman, Harold Baines, David Justice and of course, Jim Thome, those are real ball players.

This is the Red Sox.

This is October.

The two go together like catsup on tuna fish.

A Sox outfield of O'Leary, Lewis and Nixon couldn't hit their way out of rosin bag. What's O'Leary's batting average in October, .031?

Before the affects of the cider hit me again the other day I dreamed that Pedro got hurt in the first game, the Indians won the first two games in Cleveland and I thought I was finally cured.

I wouldn't drive to work and end up in Rhode Island anymore. I'd go to the store and not come home with 20 bags of cookies.

Just like every year, I'd go back to waiting to see the moving vans head to Florida.

"Give the Sox another a pitcher, a power-hitting outfielder and then the curse will end." Say that on a cold day in January and you'll feel much better.

Just when I was starting to recognized my family again last weekend, I got hit by the cider after affects again. In my fuzzy state, the Red Sox hitters, led by John Valentin, pounded the Indians' pitching at Fenway evening the series.

Just the other night, I was getting ready to watch "Everybody loves Raymond" when it hit me again. There was Pedro throwing no-hit ball for six innings and O'Leary driving in seven runs as the Red Sox won the series. I knew I was under the influence of something powerful when I dreamt of watching Red Sox bullpen coach John Cumberland doing a dance in the locker room.

I figured when I woke up on Tuesday everything would be back to normal. I'd be skipping the Indians-Yankee championship, bemoaning another elfoldo by the Red Sox, and saying it was too painful to watch.

Runners ready to tackle Baystate race

TRACKSIDE

JOE REARDON

Chuck Martin has seen plenty of progress from the marathon club he founded back in July. Come this Sunday, the runners will put their training to the test when they compete in the Baystate Marathon in Lowell.

A number of the club's runners are using the race in hopes of qualifying for April's Boston Marathon. Martin couldn't have picked a better course. Race directors and runners regard the Lowell race alike as being one of the fastest in the area. Every year a high percentage of finishers dip under Boston's qualifying times.

"It's a very fast, double-loop course," said Martin, who also coaches the Norwell High cross-country teams. "From what I hear it's the best place to qualify for Boston."

Martin said half the fun of meeting with the core group of 10 runners was having a good time, socializing and getting a solid workout in all at the same time.

"It's a great group of people," he said. "It's a good atmosphere to train in. I just laugh for two hours because some of them are hysterical. I like the different personalities."

Among the runners who will be running on Sunday are Norwell's Harry Thompson and Laura O'Keefe of Scituate. During a recent 20-mile run over the Baystate course, the pair averaged a strong 3:17 marathon pace.

Scituate's Colleen Gillis and Norwell's Alicia Porro will be running, as will Katie and Tracie Ryan of Quincy and Norwell, respectively. Shep Halloran of Norwell and Scituate's Gerard Fitzgerald are entered in the half-marathon race, held in conjunction with the marathon.

"I'm very impressed with how they did [training]," Martin said. "It's great seeing them improve."

Headstart on Halloween

South Shore kids can get a headstart on their Halloween fun at The Great Scarecrow Chase on Oct. 23 on the Norwell High School athletic fields. Registration begins a 1 p.m. and there is no entry fee. Donations for the Norwell running programs will be accepted.

The races are open to children from preschool through sixth grade. Kids are encouraged to dress up as scarecrows for the age-group races. Several hay bales will be placed on the various courses and there are several prizes to win, including best scarecrow costumes.

Preschool and Kindergarten kids will run over a quarter-mile course with first and second graders racing a half-mile route. Third and fourth graders race 1-1/2 miles, as do the fifth and sixth graders.

For more information contact physical education teacher Alicia Porro or call Chuck Martin at (781) 659-4033.

Head of the Weir River race on Oct. 23

One of the Hull Lifesaving Museum's hallmark events, the Head of the Weir chases the tide out the estuary and into the open water from West Corner, to Bumpkin Island, to the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse. A highly contested five-miler, the "Weir" draws coxed youth and adult crews, single and double scullers, curraghs and Alden ocean shells, and is an extraordinarily exciting race of experienced rowers.

The race will take place on Saturday, Oct. 23. A great spectator event, featuring more than 100 of the region's finest rowers, with best views from the bridge on George Washington Boulevard (5 to 15 minutes after the start) or the Boathouse finish line. Registration will begin at 10 a.m. behind the Hull Public Works building at West Corner on Route 228. For more information or questions about participating in the race, call Ed McCabe at the Hull Lifesaving Museum at (781) 925-5433.

It must be bad apple cider

"Let's go Bruins."

I was working hard on Tuesday when I thought I heard Lobie or Geno or Lynchie at Yankee Stadium doing a live remote promoting last night's first game between the Sox-Yankees.

That darn apple cider.

A Yankee-Red Sox, four at least, seven a possibility series? Yah right, and the people on the Ricki Lake Show are for real.

There's no way this happening.

The sports gods must be taking a Club Med vacation in the Bahamas. Something serious must have happened to the person in charge of torturing Red Sox fans.

The next thing someone is going to tell me is that Pedro is actually going to pitch against Roger in game three at Fenway Park on Saturday.

Yah right, I'm going to wake up about six feet, eight inches and have my jump shot back too.

"Yes, I'll hold for coach Pitino."

It's got to be that cider.

Come to think of it. I wonder if there's another bottle of that stuff kicking around? I might need another sip or two to get through the rest of the month.

Red Sox-Yankees? I can deal with the side affects. You know, Rhode Island is actually quite nice this time of year.

By way, are the Patriots really 4-1? Check that, I might require another case to get through football season.

So you want to name a boat?

Sailing club using innovative fundraising technique

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Sailing Club's 12-foot sailing boats, called its Mercury fleet, are now over 20 years old. If the boats could talk, they could regale the town with memories of teenage sailors now in their 40's and of countless laughs shared among friends. However, after two decades of use, the most the boats might be able to say is 'ouch.'

"We usually educate 200 kids a year in the Mercury boats," said Ann Musto, vice commodore of the Cohasset Sailing Club, which is located on Government Island adjacent to the Minot's Light Replica. "They get used really hard. We try to work on them over the summer, but it's past the point where we can repair them ourselves."

Due to concerns of safety, reliability, and performance, the club's executive board has determined that the boats cannot last another season without needed repairs.

"We're going to get them re-gel coated, and fiberglassed," Musto said. "To buy 10 new boats would cost almost $100,000. By renovating them, we'll only have to spend $30,000."

PHOTOS COURTESY OF THE COHASSET SAILING CLUB

Young sailors take to sea in several of the 12-foot Mercury boats the Cohasset Sailing Club hopes to repair.

An early morning scene featuring the sailing club fleet docked at Government Island.

The non-profit group has not held a fundraiser of any kind since the money was raised to buy the Mercury boats in the early 1970's. To raise the money, the group's board has come up with an interesting fundraising idea. Taking a cue from sports stadiums, whose naming rights are often sold to the highest bidder, the club is hoping to interest local businesses in buying the exclusive naming rights to one of the 10 Mercury fleet boats for a tax-deductible donation of $2,000.

"I don't know what company wouldn't want a $2,000 write-off and get naming rights to one of the boats," Musto said. "We want to make the deck colors really recognizable so it would be easy to see who named each boat. For instance, a Red Lion Inn-supported boat could be bright red and it would really stand out. I can imagine all of the different-colored boats out in the harbor, sparkling and looking brand-new. It's going to be fantastic."

Taking a cue from sports stadiums, whose naming rights are often sold to the highest bidder, the club is hoping to interest local businesses in buying the exclusive naming rights to one of the 10 Mercury fleet boats for a tax-deductible donation of $2,000.

Contributing businesses would also receive recognition on a plaque in addition to the naming rights on one of the Mercury boats. The sails of the boats are only three years old, and will not need to be replaced for another three to four years.

Any business that contributes to the restoration of the Mercury fleet will be part of a rich nautical tradition dating back to 1964, when the club was founded by Herb Towle and the late Rev. Edward Atkinson, the beloved longtime minister at First Parish Unitarian Church.

"I sailed with a fella named Joe Lee on the Charles River when I was young," said Towle, who is now 81 years old. "I wanted to copy what he did after I got back from World War II. I wanted my kids and other kids to have the opportunity to learn to sail. We got people to donate because a lot of the parents of those kids didn't have the money to take the sailing courses."

When Towle began the Sailing Club 35 years ago, he could not have imagined how many youngsters would pass through its boats.

"About 8,000 kids have gone through it since it started," he said. "One student has become an instructor at the Naval Academy and another girl took a schooner all the way to Nova Scotia. We've had a lot of good kids who have gone on to do very well."

Musto said one of the main reasons the board is so excited about restoring the 10 Mercury boats is that it will allow the club to continue teaching kids to sail for years to come.

"We need to encourage people to keep sailing," she said. "I hope that the people of Cohasset will back the project from both a business and community standpoint so we can continue to do that."

Town override vote is slated for Dec. 11

$1.4 million for construction drawings needed

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

"I will not vote to include this article on the warrant unless there is an override vote for the $1.3 million. What happens if the town doesn't vote for the rest of the project?"
SELECTMAN MERLE BROWN

With all of the talk surrounding the various school renovation options, their costs and possible changes in grade configurations, the matter of funding construction drawings for the proposed project has received little attention.

Selectmen ensured Tuesday that greater attention will be focused on that issue when they decided to make passage of the $1.3 million warrant article at the Dec.6 special town meeting contingent on a debt-exclusion override election, to be held Saturday, Dec. 11.

"I will not vote to include this article on the warrant unless there is an override vote for the $1.3 million," said selectman Merle Brown. "What happens if the town doesn't vote for the rest of the project?"

Town Manager Mark Haddad had such a scenario in mind when he suggested to selectmen that they not include the article on the warrant without an override stipulation.

"If the project fails at the annual town meeting in March, we'd still be carrying the bag for $1.3 million," he said. "My recommendation to the board is to schedule a debt-exclusion override for the drawings and for the actual construction of the project."

The appropriation of the money for the construction drawings would have to receive a two-thirds majority at the special town meeting because it is a borrowing article. Should that article be passed, only a simple majority would be needed to pass the debt-exclusion override.

Haddad said the town would be taking an unnecessary financial risk

Tax bills to jump 6 percent

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The tax rate and the value of the average assessed home have both gone up for fiscal year 2000, good news for the town's balance sheet, but bad news for the town's property owners.

Selectmen set the tax rate for FY 2000 at $15.09 per $1,000 of assessed valuation. The new rate is contingent upon the approval of the state Department of Revenue, but Town Manager Mark Haddad said that would be no problem.

"I've been in contact with them and am assured that they'll approve the new rate," he said at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

The $15.09 tax rate per $1,000 of assessed valuation is up 14 cents from last year, only a one percent increase. For the second straight year, however, the average value of an assessed home has risen, and property owners will see that increase reflected on their tax bills.

The average Cohasset home last year was assessed at $341,124 with a tax bill of $5,099.80; this year, that same home is assessed at $358, 490 with a tax bill of $5,409.61, an increase of $309.81.

The new rate would be reflected in the third quarter tax bills.

Haddad said the new rate would be reflected in the third quarter tax bills which will be sent out Dec. 31.

Selectmen once again followed the recommendation of the board of assessors and Haddad that they not split the tax rate, and thus residential and commercial properties will once again be taxed at the same rate.

"As we have in the past, we recommend that the town not split the tax rate," said Elsa Miller, chairman of the board of assessors. "The town is only seven percent commercial, and [deputy assessor] Cheryl Pooler does not recommend splitting the tax rate unless we become 25 percent residential."

In a letter to selectmen, Pooler explained why the split tax rate would not serve the interests of Cohasset.

"In order to save the residential class about five percent on their tax bill, we would have to increase the commercial, industrial, and personal property tax bills by 50 percent," she wrote.

Because the town is so heavily residential, even the slightest possible split rate would have an adverse affect on business owners. With a tax rate shift of 12 cents off of the residential rate, $1.51 is added to the commercial rate.

Under that scenario, the owner of a home assessed at $350,000 would pay $5,239.50, a savings of $42. The owner of a business of equal value would pay $5,810, an increase of $528.50. Under the single rate currently in effect, both owners pay the same.

Report fuels concerns about Greenbush line

Selectmen want to use as leverage to force another EIR

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset selectmen are attempting to secure a meeting with fellow officials in Hingham and Scituate to discuss writing a joint letter urging the Army Corps of Engineers to rethink an environmental impact report for the proposed Greenbush rail line.

The action comes on the heels of a report released this week by Harvard University which states the MBTA's Environmental Impact Report [EIR] may be deficient in some areas. Chief among the deficiencies highlighted in the study was the conclusion that the T did not adequately include the competitive effects of the Red Line and commuter boats in its EIR.

That report was the topic of discussion on Tuesday night when Greenbush mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber came to selectmen to explain its importance to Cohasset. The study was done by the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard and was undertaken at the request of the town of Hingham, which paid $18,000 for the study. Though Hingham did fund the research, it had no input into the results of the study and was not able to comment on drafts of the report.

"This was an independent study and Hingham had no impact on its outcome," Gruber said. "The report had a narrow focus, and looked at the alternate modes of transportation available to the T and its analysis in choosing diesel rail. The three areas that this town is adamantly concerned about regarding the train are air quality, noise, and vibration. If the T chose electric light rail or boats, the effects on Cohasset would be vastly different."

"If we don't have some kind of leverage, we're just going to wait for them [the MBTA] to put on their golf shoes and tromp over us."
COHASSET MITIGATION COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN TOM GRUBER

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the new EIR is only one of the issues that a tri-town meeting should address.

"The way I see it, there are two items we should focus on," she said. "One is the letter to the Army Corps requesting the new EIR and the other is seeking federal assistance in

Roads are torn up all over town

Road work gives residents a headache

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Most would agree that driving through Boston today while the Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel is underway is a nightmare.

Although it can't rival that billion-dollar project, little Cohasset is having "Big Dig" headaches of its own.

No less than four "digs" are underway — three on land and one in the harbor.

While the continuation of the dredging project requiring the removal of moorings is a nuisance for the harbormaster, the roadwork is a big pain for local motorists.

On last week's Cohasset Talks TV show, hosted by Wigmore Pierson and Nan Roth, representatives from Tutela Engineering — the town's consulting firm, overseeing water and sewer main projects and the James Brook Flood Control project — fielded questions from the hosts and viewers on the local "digs."

The projects are going on simultaneously so it seems as though almost no road in town is immune from being dug up for one or more of the projects. Last week the problem really came to a head when South Main Street was shut down just south of the library diverting traffic onto other torn-up streets and making it seemingly impossible to get to certain parts of the village. That prompted Selectman Merle Brown to attend the program and complain to Dan Couglin and Domenic Tutela of Tutela Engineering.

Officer Ron Lawrence of the Scituate Police Department works a detail at the construction site on Ripley Road.

"Elm Street it tied up to the end of the month and now South Main Street," he said. "Why not wait two weeks when Elm Street is open? Why pick South Main Street at this time?" (Elm Street in front of Kimball's has been blocked off for months for the James Brook flood control project work).

Couglin said the contractor was trying to expedite the work to get it accomplished before adverse weather comes. He promised that one lane of South Main Street would remain open going forward.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told viewers that the roads would be patched as soon as possible.

That can't come soon enough for local police. Chief Brian Noonan said this week that the dirt and gravel on the affected streets is hard on the cruisers that must travel the roads.

The department is also arranging for 10 to 12 detail officers a day to direct traffic at the various work sites.

Parking to remain on one side

Town Manager Mark Haddad asked selectmen not to take action on the recommendation of the traffic study committee to make Parker Avenue a no parking street on both sides.

Selectmen agreed to Haddad's suggestion, as the selectmen's office has received numerous calls from residents adamantly opposed to the parking ban.

D&A committee seeking members

Four vacancies are open on the town's drug and alcohol committee. Anyone interested in finding out more about the committee or wishing to join should contact the selectmen's office immediately. At 383-4105.

Resurfacing costs for sewer project

More than $103,000 was spent on resurfacing costs for four streets as a result of the ongoing sewer project in town.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the resurfacing costs would be paid for through a combination of sewer contract fees and Chapter 90 funds.

Over 3,500 tons of asphalt were used to resurface Jerusalem Road, Linden Drive, Forest Avenue, and Rustic Drive. Also included in the $103,000 cost were five days of police details and asphalt testing.

Bradley, Holden may seek Murray's state rep. seat

Would first face off in Democratic primary

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Both men are young, Hingham residents, lawyers, fathers, husbands and Democrats. And they both want the same thing — to serve as state representative for the Third Plymouth District, consisting of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

In fact, the biggest challenge that Michael Holden and Garrett Bradley may face early on is giving voters a reason to vote for one of them over the other.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray isn't saying if she'll seek reelection next year. But last year's victory was a hard fought one for the 74-year-old Cohasset Republican. Bradley, 29, was a formidable opponent taking Hull and winning 46 percent of the total votes cast. Energized rather than deterred by the defeat, Bradley plans to try again.

Now Holden, 34, who is chairman of the Hingham Board of Selectmen, is throwing his hat into the ring.

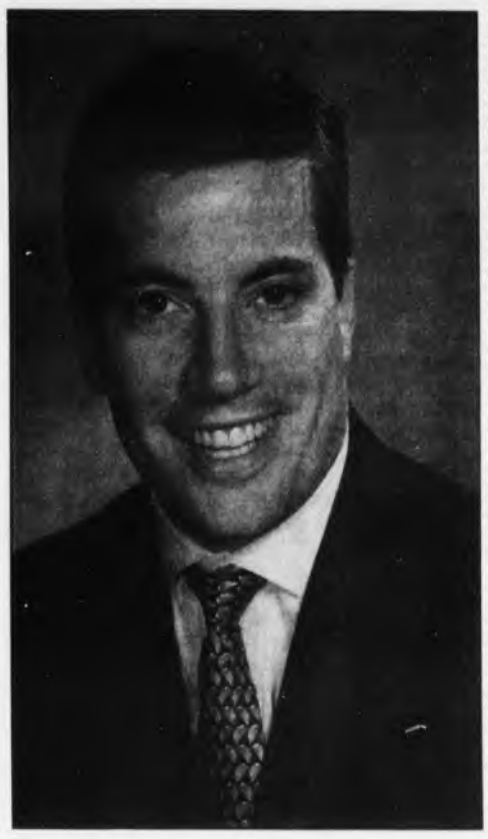
Although Holden and Bradley have not made formal announcements, both say they are candidates.

Monday, Bradley held his campaign signs for state representative outside the polls in Hull where there was a special election to fill a vacant selectman's seat.

And Holden is hosting a campaign kickoff spaghetti supper on Saturday at the Sons of Italy Hall in Hingham.

If they do run, they — and any other Democrats who file papers for the seat — would compete in a primary next September. The winner would face either Murray or another Republican in the November election.

Garrett Bradley



Michael P. Holden

Originally from Fall River, Holden, who is married with four children and a fifth on the way, has lived in Hingham for 10 years. He served on the Hingham board of health for two years before beating incumbent Iris Daigle for a seat on the board of selectmen in 1997. Holden will step down when his term expires in the spring.

"I won't pull papers again for selectman, but I will pull papers for the state rep. seat," Holden said.

Holden thinks his municipal experience gives him the edge over Bradley, a former Plymouth Country prosecutor.

"The state is not funding its fair share when it comes to special education."
— Garrett Bradley

"In my capacity as selectman, I've had the opportunity to go up to the Statehouse on a number of issues on behalf of Hingham," he said. As an example, Holden pointed to the town's efforts to adopt its own cost-of-living formula for municipal retirees that will require the filing of a home rule petition through the legislature. The process is still moving forward, Holden said.

But Bradley, who was recently named to the Hingham capital outlay committee, cited — in addition to his work as a county prosecutor — his six years as a youth football coach and work with the Hingham Community Playground, Hingham Education Foundation and his campaign last year as examples of involvement at the local level.

"I have gained valuable insight into the issues affecting families in this district as well as the experience necessary to represent them, and the entire district at the state house," he said.

Both men are in private law practice. Holden is a partner in Holden & Feeney with offices in Boston and Hingham. Bradley, the father of a 4-1/2 month old baby girl, is with the Boston law firm, Thornton, Early & Naumes.

Both Bradley, who grew up in Hingham, and Holden are opposed to restoration of the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad that would run through Hingham and Cohasset. However, if the train does come, both men said they would fight for a tunnel under Hingham Square. And both men oppose the access road proposals to the former Naval air base due to the negative traffic impacts on area residents.

Tax relief and requiring that the state pick up more of the costs of providing special education are other areas that both men list as priorities.

"As a selectman, I've seen the impact that special education costs have on every line item."
— Michael Holden

"The state is not funding its fair share when it comes to special education," Bradley said.

"As a selectman, I've seen the impact that special education costs have on every line item," Holden said.

Holden said his childhood gave him the impetus to seek public office. His parents worked hard to help their six sons achieve, he said.

"My father worked in a variety store," Holden said. "He and my mother tried to put us in a better position than when they were kids.

"At the Statehouse, I would hope to carry issues forward to put my kids in a better position in a town we've worked hard to stay in, in order to send them to quality schools," he said.

Bradley, who said he knocked on 12,000 doors in the three towns during last year's campaign, is prepared to do it all again.

"I need to work a little harder and talk to people a little bit more," he said. "We came close and I've received such encouragement to run again."

Murray, the incumbent, said she would make up her mind soon. She predicts if she doesn't run, the race will be wide open on both sides of the political aisle.

"To be honest with you, my kids want me to step down and take time to smell the roses," she said. "But my problem is I love it. I love helping people. So one day I think I'm running and the next day, I'm not."

So far, Hingham Selectman Martin Crane is the only Republican to publicly say he will seek Murray's seat if she doesn't run. He is also considering a run for state Sen. Robert Hedlund's seat if Hedlund, a Republican, wins the mayoral race in Weymouth next month.

Tax rollback is Republican topic

The Cohasset Republican Town Committee will meet at the home of Polly Logan, 121 Nichols Rd. Thursday, Oct. 21, at 7:30 p.m., chairman Janet Fogarty announced.

Highlight of the meeting will be signing of nomination papers of town committee members, report of nominating committee, announcement of committee appointments and the importance of obtaining signatures for the petitions to roll back the state income tax to 5 percent.

Fogarty also announced that the GOP state party will sponsor a workshop for all town committee members and candidates to learn how to raise money and enhance party building. The workshop will be held Wednesday, Oct. 27, at 7 p.m. at the Framingham Sheraton Tara. She also noted that elected officials of Plymouth, Norfolk and state committee members have been invited to attend and added that all GOP meetings are open to the public and newcomers of Cohasset.

if selectmen chose not to make passage of the article contingent upon an override.

"If we didn't have an override and appropriated the $1.3 million, we'd be taking a risk that the construction money would be approved in March," he said. "If it failed, then we'd have to find $1.3 million in the budget, and we simply don't have it."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo agreed with Haddad that prudence dictates an override vote on the money for the drawings.

"I support the selectmen's decision to put the article to a Proposition 2 1/2 vote if it passes the special town meeting," he said. "When you're talking about that kind of money, it's the fiscally responsible thing to do."

DeGiacomo understood that an override vote on the drawings is likely a vote on the entire project, but added that there could be repercussions if renovations are not undertaken.

"People will have to feel comfortable with the project as a whole to spend that kind of money," he said. "If people don't want the project, they're not likely to vote for the money for the architect drawings. People have to understand that there are legal requirements that the town must fulfill to comply with the American Disabilities Act [ADA] and that the conditions of our 50-year-old buildings are deplorable and embarrassing."

Citizens will be able to witness those conditions in the weeks before the special town meeting, as the school committee is in the process of organizing tours of Deer Hill and the middle high school.

"We need to make sure that folks understand the full extent of what has to be done at these schools," DeGiacomo said. "I would strongly encourage everyone in town to attend a tour and see for themselves."

The $1.3 million figure for the drawings was furnished to selectmen by Strekalovsky and Hoit, the Hingham architectural firm working on the school renovation project. That amount was reviewed by another architectural firm, who concurred that the figure was accurate.

Construction for the three school renovation options still under consideration by the school committee range from $29 million to $41 million. Two of those three options, however, are eligible for the 60 percent state reimbursement, which would lower the cost of those two options to $15 million or $16 million.

Should the entire project be passed in March, the cost of the construction drawings would be 60 percent reimbursable by the state.

After the Mariner went to press on Wednesday, architects Donald Walter and Gene Raymond from Strekalovsky and Hoit were set to explain the costs of the project at a joint meeting of the school committee and school facilities committee.

School facilities committee Robert Spofford said the cost estimates for the three remaining renovation options would be looked at in greater depth at that meeting.

"We're going to look at some of the items in greater detail and find out why the costs are what they are," he said. "We're going to look at the architects' numbers for Deer Hill compared with those from five years ago, when Deer Hill was going to be part of the Osgood project. We want to find out what that disparity is and why it exists."

Road work gives residents a headache

"We've been bringing in details from Hingham, Hull, Scituate and all the way up to Weymouth," he said.

On a bright note, Coughlin said the North Cohasset sewer project is nearly completed and he expects the contractor to be out of there in three to four weeks. He expects the Central Cohasset project to be completed by June 30.

Yet to start is the Lily Pond sewer project.

The King Street water main installation is also nearly done which is the last of the water projects except for one. Down the line is the water tank project for Scituate Hill that will require installing a water main across Route 3A. That's expected to start in the spring.

Last week the problem really came to a head when South Main Street was shut down just south of the library diverting traffic onto other torn-up streets and making it seemingly impossible to get to certain parts of the village

Homeowners in North Cohasset have been coping with "digs" of their own. Couglin explained that the contractor is required to only "pave his trench" if the homeowner's driveway was dug up for the sewer installation. Some homeowners do not like the appearance while it is structurally sound, aesthetically it's not, he said.

Haddad said some homeowners are working with the contractor privately to get their driveways paved.

In a related matter, Couglin explained that the individual pumps for each connection in North Cohasset have to be tested and certified. North Cohasset, for the most part, is on grinder pumps not gravity sewers. So while the sewer is in, the pumps have to be tested and the individual septic systems decommissioned before the sewer can go on line. Areas will be brought on line in groups, he said.

Former selectman is honored

Selectman Diane Sullivan announced her hearty congratulations to former selectman Rocco Laugelle, who has been named vice president of the Norfolk County Selectman's Association. The group is made open to all past and present selectmen from Norfolk County towns.

"As everyone knows, Rocky was a wonderful selectman in Cohasset for 15 years," Sullivan said. "He's been part of the Norfolk County association for 20 years."

Hazardous waste collection scheduled

Cohasset residents may attend the HHW collection Oct. 23, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Norwell, Highway Garage on Route 123 with the written permission of the Dept. Of Public Works. Permission is not required if the collection is in the resident's hometown. All attendees must provide proof of residency. The town of residence is responsible for the cost.

Residents wishing to attend should call the DPW, board of health or the South Shore Recycling Cooperative at 508-785-8318 for a list of acceptable and unacceptable substances, permission and directions. Latex paint is not a hazardous waste. Quantities are limited to 15 gallons or 30 lbs. of material per car.

Renovating Red Lion Inn moves ahead

But planners insist on site plan details

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Taking something very old and transforming it into something new is part of the challenge for the Red Lion Inn project.

"It's not as clear as taking a fresh piece of land and starting from scratch," planning board chairman Al Moore said. "People have to keep in mind we're not building a new structure. The whole site plan process is designed for that kind of project."

Moore made his remarks during a heated meeting last week during which frustration was expressed on both sides of the table.

"I think in the end result, it will probably be quite nice."
— Gordon Hislop, design review board

Construction manager Jack Valle, who took over in February, is working with an inherited site plan that no longer matches the project. He must also deal with a change in the elevator code that requires installing an elevator big enough to fit a 6-foot, 6inch stretcher into the renovated inn. The elevator will require a box-like structure on the roof that could affect the appearance of the building.

The planning board — continually faced with questions from citizens about the project — is upset that a final site plan that incorporates the neighboring Lilac House and Red Lion hasn't been submitted. The board also wants to see additions like the "tower" on the roof for the elevator detailed on the plan.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy expressed the most frustration over missing details such as the color of the shutters which hasn't been decided. But Moore stressed the plans are almost there.

"We're down to arguing over the color of the shutters, and that's a very different kind of argument," he said in a telephone interview earlier this week.

So despite the problems, all want the project to proceed. And before winter arrives, planners want the openings in the exterior of both buildings "buttoned up."

To that end, the design review board added the inn project to its agenda Monday. And the planning board was slated to review the plans again last night after the Mariner went to press.

"We're down to arguing over the color of the shutters, and that's a very different kind of argument."
— Al Moore, planning board chairman

In a telephone interview, Gordon Hislop of the design review board, said at Monday's meeting it was agreed that the roof line, similar to a porch roof, would be continued around the whole building. He explained that the color of the building will be chestnut brown with white trim. The roof will be white cedar that will be silver-gray in appearance.

"I think in the end result, it will probably be quite nice," he said.

Moore said that under the town's bylaws a site plan is not required for an existing structure if plans don't exceed the footprint by more than 200 square feet. And then, only the new part is subject to a site plan review.

He said the Red Lion Inn is so old that the builders were not sure what they had until they started to rebuild it.

As Valle pointed out, parts of the building "were ready to fall down."

Moore said the owner is not cutting corners and wants to do it right.

"But all we're saying is 'we need to have a plan, we need to have it all come together,'" he said.

Gerde Ordelheide, who is now shooting to finish the project in March, bought the Red Lion Inn in June 1998 and the Lilac House six months later. The inn and Lilac House will be joined via a covered walkway. In July, he told the health board a wine bar is planned for the basement of the inn. There will also be a sauna in the basement along with a wine cellar and storage areas. The main floor will feature the lounge, dining room and state-of-the-art kitchen. Upstairs 15 luxury suites with four-poster beds and a Jacuzzi in every room are planned. Ordelheide hopes to build a Vermont-style barn which will include a big fireplace where guests can relax. Next door at the Lilac House, a bakery, bistro and old-fashioned retail store will be constructed. The upstairs of the Lilac House will include a function hall and office, he said.

Zoning setback problems at the site have been resolved, Building Inspector Robert Egan said.

Moore said he is optimistic about the plans although they are being approved in bits and pieces.

"We're not trying to be obstructionist," he said.

Shelter for feral cats offered

A possible solution to the ongoing feral cat problem on James Lane may have been provided by an interested observer outside of town.

The Board of Health received a letter from the Daisy Humane Society in Rockland this week, offering to rescue the cats and kittens in the James Lane neighborhood in the event that the health board voted to euthanize the feral cats.

"These cats and kittens will be provided care and comfort for the rest of their natural lives either by adopting families or by the Daisy Humane Society, wrote Theresa Buffum, president of the non-profit organization. "We have four humane heart traps and we would ask you to allow us some time to rescue the animals before you take action to euthanize them."

At the last health board meeting, residents of James Lane complained of the impact the feral cats are having on their property, including scratches on cars and a horrendous odor emanating from gardens where the cats have been relieving themselves.

Some area residents have been working to spay, neuter, and re-release the cats, but many residents would still like to see the cats put to sleep.

Buffum said her organization is capable of helping to solve a very contentious neighborhood dispute.

"We have been successful in the past in domesticating feral cats and placing them in homes," she said. "We are blessed to have volunteers who dedicate themselves to saving feral cats and kittens from the outdoors and from the harshness of human hands."

Buffum wrote that she would be present at the Oct. 26 health board meeting to discuss her proposal with board members.

Report fuels concerns about Greenbush line

imposing emissions regulations sooner. I'm all for us writing to Senators Kennedy and Kerry."

The federal government has passed more stringent standards for engine emissions, but those standards will not go into effect until 2002 for new engines and 2007 for rehabbed engines. The MBTA's existing trains, which would likely be used on the Greenbush line, will be exempt from those regulations.

"We might not get anywhere with the federal regulations, but at least we can say we tried," Sullivan said.

Gruber hoped the report by the Kennedy School could be the impetus for a concerted effort by all three towns to put pressure on the Army Corps of Engineers to undertake a new EIR. Without such a bargaining chip to use in mitigation negotiations with the MBTA, he said such talks would be fruitless.

"The meetings we've had with the T have gotten us nothing, zippo," he said. "What it comes down to is that we don't have any leverage. We looked at joining the Hingham lawsuit against the T, but it's gone too far for us to get on board at this point. If we don't have some kind of leverage, we're just going to wait for them to put on their golf shoes and tromp over us."

Selectman Fred Koed doubted whether seeking a new EIR is the answer to the town's mitigation concerns.

"This is all very interesting, but how is it protecting the best interests of the town?" he asked. The Army Corps and other agencies are a check against the T, and they've already looked at the EIR. "Mitigation involves how best to protect the town along the rail bed. The decision of what form of transportation the T is going to use is not in our hands, and it has already been made. These are two separate issues."

Selectman Thomas Callahan disagreed with Koed's thinking and said mitigation must involve looking at other modes of transportation.

"Mitigation includes looking at alternatives," he said, "Money is an issue that people downtown will understand. If it can be shown that diesel rail is not the best bang for the buck, the statehouse will listen. They pay attention to dollars and cents."

Following the debate about the purpose of mitigation, Gruber summed up his thinking in getting the three towns to look at requesting a new EIR.

"There might be other modes of transportation besides diesel rail that would make the quality of life better in our towns," he said, "while still ensuring service at a lower cost. This gives us a chance to make a unified statement and tell the T that they better do this right."

AROUND TOWN

LOOKING GOOD

Guess who was spotted around town last weekend? None other than Cohasset's own Brendan Mulcahy! Brendan looks wonderful and is very happy in his home, and feels great! Everyone is looking forward to seeing more of him, that's for sure!

HONORING VOLUNTEERS

On Tuesday, Oct. 19, Andy Merrill held a special luncheon for the volunteers of the Cohasset Consignment Shop. The festive event included presentations, prizes and surprises to the dedicated, loyal volunteers.

The Cohasset Consignment Shop was founded in 1953, and has always been staffed by volunteers — proceeds provide funding for the Social Service League of worthy programs for the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Norwell.

Andi is always looking for volunteers; to volunteer or to seek information call 383-0687. And, by all means, go to the shop located on 3A Tedeschi Plaza. Guaranteed there is something there for everyone!

HEALTH AND HAPPINESS

The next time you see Tim Bechert be sure to give him a congratulatory hug — it's official, he is now the proud husband of Mandy (Weinhold) Bechert!

The wedding, held Oct. 9 in Hampton, N.H., was beautiful, indeed! Talk about a radiant bride, Mandy looked beautiful! And Tim never looked happier or more handsome than that day!

Their reception was held at the Abenaqui Country Club where everyone had a special one indeed, both for the bride and groom and all of us who gathered to honor them!

We wish you health and happiness and love forever, Mandy and Tim!

NEW TALK SHOW

Hope you had a chance to see the opening production — Nan Roth and Wigmore Pierson are now the hosts of a new cable talk show, to be shown every Wednesday night at 8 p.m. on Channel 3. Community involvement is their platform, you may either attend the show or call in with your questions. Be sure to tune in!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

We want to send birthday greetings, be they early or late, to the following Cohasset special people: Phyllis Leighton, Mary McCarthy, Doug Peck, Bob Peterson, Cecelia Sampson, Marion Smith and Edvia Yocum.

GET WELL SOON

We send Get Well wishes to Rose Mary Laugelle this week — hope that you are feeling better and that you aren't over-doing it (have you ever known Rose Mary to sit still?). Take care of yourself!

DETERMINATION

NEW LOCATION

Have you noticed that Fitness First is no longer located on South Main Street? Don't despair, they are still here in Cohasset; they just got too big for the building! Now they are on Route 3A, on the second floor of the former Seavey engineering building — the space is bigger, the parking a lot easier; other than that, everything will be the same.

MUSEUM PASSES

Besides having lots of books, dedicated workers and a quiet place to study, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library has more to offer us — did you know that they have museum passes for Cohasset residents to the Museum of Fine Arts, the Boston Children's Museum, the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum; the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum; the New England Aquarium; Computer Museum; the Plimouth Plantation and the USS Constitution?

Just check at the front desk for information, and plan your trips now!

ON THE MEND

Hey, Pat McCarthy, hope that your back is better! If you see him "hobbling" around town, send him home so that he will give it a much needed rest! We know you're tough, Pat, and that you'll be better soon, but take care of that back!

That's the news for this week, may I count on you to fill me in with an item for the news next week? Once again pictures are welcome, also! You can call me. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street, or sent by mail or fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax is 741-2931.

Help for Medicare

Two years ago, when Congress finally cut federal spending enough to bring the budget into balance, the biggest hit was taken by Medicare. Reforms were expected to reduce Medicare spending by $116 billion over five years and $400 billion over 10 years.

Those reforms worked better - or worse - than their authors expected. The Congressional Budget Office now projects the five-year savings at $200 billion, the 10-year savings at $600 billion.

In Massachusetts alone, the Medicare cuts are reducing federal payments to health care providers by $1.7 billion over the next five years. Squeezing that much money out of Medicare has come at a huge cost in terms of quality and access to the health care system:

• Community hospitals are cutting corners wherever they can, and some have closed, because of millions of dollars of lost Medicare revenue.

The fiscal discipline has forced efficiencies that were necessary and inevitable. But the Congressional physicians over-prescribed their budgetary medicine, and the health care system is going into toxic shock.

• Teaching hospitals have reduced beds, research and programs.

• Home health care agencies have had to reduce patient loads, raise fees or cut patient visits, often forcing patients who could do fine at home into more expensive nursing home care. Twenty home health agencies in Massachusetts alone have gone out of business.

• Massachusetts nursing homes are expecting losses of $300 million over the next five years. Eleven have already been forced into bankruptcy.

• Arbitrary caps on therapy services have hurt thousands of providers and patients.

• Health insurance and HMO's have reacted by raising everyone's rates to compensate for Medicare losses. The state's largest HMO, Harvard Pilgrim, terminated First Seniority coverage for Medicare patients served at Milford-Whitinsville Regional Hospital specifically because Medicare reimbursement is lower in Worcester County than in other parts of the state.

It's not that the budget shouldn't have been balanced or that Medicare shouldn't have been cut. The fiscal discipline has forced efficiencies that were necessary and inevitable. But the Congressional physicians over-prescribed their budgetary medicine, and the health care system is going into toxic shock.

Sen. Ted Kennedy, who has been a leader on health care issues for decades, has proposed a targeted restructuring of the Medicare reforms to address specific problems facing hospitals, home health agencies and nursing homes.

Kennedy's Medicare Beneficiary Access to Care Act, filed earlier this month, would add $20 billion to the health care system over 10 years, which is just a tenth of the unanticipated savings realized by the Balanced Budget Act's overreaching. It is a carefully thought-out adjustment to Medicare reforms that could be a lifeline for thousands of health care providers and millions of patients. It deserves prompt consideration by a Congress that must not turn its back on the damage its actions have wrought.

Feral cats can be managed

TO THE EDITOR:

Feral cats, kill them? That's not what the animal experts have documented works.

What is a feral cat and where do they come from? Lately there has been an outrage about the growing numbers of feral cats. A petition was recently brought to the Town Health Department to "eliminate" by killing some 15 to 20 cats and kittens. We attended the meeting, listened to both sides, spoke and then decided to compile factual information about feral cats. There are "experts" who have worked for years all over the county to rectify situations like the one that exists on James Lane and other sections of Cohasset.

A feral cat by definition is: feral (adj.)_1. Existing in an untamed state. 2. Having escaped from domestication and become wild. Ferals roam free, are unowned; we call them alley cats or strays. They have been abandoned or were neglected pets that are now trying to live on their own. They develop a fear of humans and become wild. And, as any creature in the wild and unmanaged does, they multiply.

An estimated 60 million ferral cats live in the USA. The cats are victims of an unfortunate set of circumstances. Circumstances that are preventable. To list the most common:

1. Pet owners not accepting the responsibility of their "cute" kitten.

2. Pet owners refusing to spay or neuter their cats.

3. Pet owners abandoning and turning the pet outside to live and feed.

4. Sexual active cats band together in groups and form feral cat colonies.

As a result feral cats become the communities' responsibility. Unmanaged these colonies can become a neighborhood nuisance. The present group of annoyed neighbors wants the cats killed. This has been done in the past, and the cats are back and there are more of them. The experts have the statistics and documentation to prove killing is not a solution. Research and experience has proven that eradication is ineffective and expensive. New cats will return and return in even greater numbers. They return in less than one year.

All the research we collected presents a far more humane and economical solution. Statistically the number of cats will decrease and the annoying behavior that any unaltered cat causes when left to roam free will stop. The best solution in all the different research studies has proven to be a "trap, inoculate, spay or neuter and release." Putting the cats back in a managed area, with shelter and food will permanently stop the currently expanding problem.

We must also raise awareness to our fellow neighbors that a cat is a house pet. A cat should be spayed or neutered. If this is not what you intend for that cute little kitten, don't bring one home. Cats let out to play are more prone to disease, killing of birds, death by a car, coyote or fox and fleas. All pet owners should be held accountable for their actions. At present, the animal control officer can only keep up with the irresponsible dog owners. We think it is time that we come up with a similar system to stop the neglect of cats in our community.

Admittedly the feral cat population is a problem; a problem created by our neighbors and yours. It is not a problem that will go away with a mass kill. This was tried on James Lane Street several years ago. It was not effective. There are several volunteers already attempting to solve the problem. They are actively, single handedly and at their own expense and time, trapping and having the cats altered, inoculated and released. Those that are young enough can be placed with responsible pet owners.

And lastly. To those who criticize the efforts we can only ask: Are you actually contributing to any solution? We have collected factual reports on how to solve the problem. Any one can find them on the Internet by searching for feral cat colonies. This search brings you to numerous articles that give the statistic on-mass kills versus trap, alter and manage. A little help from those who are annoyed by the ferals would go a long way in eliminating the problem.

Let's not spend town money to do a quick fix. We advocate solving the problem with public awareness, pet-owner accountability, and giving a group of concerned citizens a chance to eliminate and control the problem . Do you have a trap, or time to transport? But most of all, any pet owner with a cat that has not been altered, do the responsible thing. Alter you pet. He will be happier and so will your neighbors.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on two roll calls from House debate on a proposed $21 billion fiscal 2000 budget. The House and Senate have finally agreed on a compromise version of the budget which is now expected to reach the House and Senate floor within two weeks. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

WELFARE(H 4400) House 151-0, approved an amendment allowing welfare recipients to substitute up to 10 hours of education and training as part of their 20 hours per week work requirement. The amendment also requires the state to screen new welfare recipients, without a high school diploma or a proficeincy in English, to assess their skills and determine if they face other barriers to employment including substance abuse or disabilities. Amendment supporters this early screening and intervention will help prepare recipients to enter and remain in the workforce when their welfare benefits expire. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment).

	Y

FIREFIGHTERS(H 4400) House 85-65, approved an amendment delaying implementation of a proposal which gives a ten percent salary increase to firefighters who already have or will earn an associate degree in fire science. The local option proposal also provides that any city or town which accepts the salary incentive proposal will receive state reimbursement of half the salary costs. The amendment would delay the proposal until the legislature conducts a study of the costs and the Ways and Means Committees okay the proposal. Amendment supporters said the cost of the proposal is unknown and urged a delay so the cost can be calculated. Amendment opponents said the proposal will ensure that cities and towns have well-educated firefighters who keep up with modern techniques and continue to serve their communities and save lives. They noted the proposal is a modified version of a successful salary incentive program already offered to police officers who further their education. (A "Yea" vote is for delaying the salary incentive proposal. A "Nay" vote is against the delay).

Learning about all that awesome brown stuff

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Yesterday we guided a group of Girl Scouts through the RTF.

They were so genuine, so eager, so polite.

They were second-graders, cute as buttons, 'pints of peanuts.'

I have a mental picture of sparkling eyes, some missing teeth,

Some in official brown uniform shirts with badges,

Some in T-shirts because the long-stemmed thermometer read 60 degrees.

'Just grass clippings and leaves and Mother Nature.'

My station was my beloved compost piles.

Some Scouts seemed unsure about treading on the black gold.

The piles were so much bigger than they were.

We actually saw steam escaping.

Some of the Scouts knew approximately the temperature of our bodies.

Then we all watched, fascinated,

As the inserted thermometer quickly reached 149 degrees in the fresh pile.

'Just grass clippings and leaves and Mother Nature.'

Then they enjoyed having their names or initials written on the individual cups,

'Lucy' and 'Mimi' and 'C.C.' and so on.

And equally enjoyed filling them three-quarters up ['Is this enough?'].

And then handling the seeds.

Improving the Deer Hill and Middle-High School

EDUCATION MATTERS

ROB SPOFFORD

For several years now, the Town has grappled with the need to improve our school facilities.

The Deer Hill and Middle-High School are close to 50 years old and are beyond their useful lives.

These buildings fall short of State educational specifications regarding space and, in many cases, come up short on basic functionality, e.g. erratic heating systems and electrical capacity that can not support technology. Additionally, the buildings do not meet Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) requirements for the disabled, cannot accommodate the projected larger enrollments and, in case of the High School, require major repairs and renovation to qualify for accreditation in 2002.

Over the coming weeks the school committee, school administration and town manager together with the school facilities committee will be exploring various options to best address the repair and renovation needs of the Deer Hill School and middle-high school for the next 50 years.

The goal of both committees, school administration and town manager will be to recommend to the Town at the Dec. 6 Town Meeting the best option that balances the educational needs of our students while recognizing that all proposals must be fiscally responsible.

The committees and administration have received initial rough cut estimates for 7 options and scenarios to consider from the Town's architect Strekalovsky & Hoit. We have narrowed these to 3 options that we will seriously consider and evaluate. Some derivations exist within the three. These include (1) basic renovation needs, including ADA upgrades, with no changes for program or future enrollment considerations; (2) renovations, with ADA upgrades, along with program enhancements and future enrollment considerations with the current grade configuration; (3) similar to two but with program enhancements requiring a grade reconfiguration of moving the sixth grade to the middle school and third grade to Deer Hill.

We welcome and encourage any constructive input anytime throughout this process.

We have begun the process of understanding and fine tuning these estimates with input from the architects, superintendent, school principals and curriculum coordinator. This will include a detailed review and analysis of future enrollment projections and potential Commonwealth of Massachusetts reimbursement.

We plan to meet shortly with various other town committees and community groups to receive input and to discuss the various options. We welcome and encourage any constructive input anytime throughout this process. Additionally, we will meet each Wednesday between now and Town Meeting at 7 p.m. in the high school conference room. These meetings are open to the public.

In future columns we will provide more detailed information about this process.

Rob Spofford is chairman of the Cohasset School Facilities Committee.

Schools are winners in proposed budget

FROM THE STATE HOUSE

SENATOR ROBERT HEDLUND

This week the budget conference committee reached an agreement and reported a compromise version of the Senate and House proposals. After much debate and deliberation, Senate and House leaders agreed to include our highest priorities in a balanced budget that includes a variety of tax cuts. It is my hope that future budget conferences are more successful in reaching crucial compromises in a timely manner.

The conference committee report is in the final stages of completion and some of the main differences between the House and Senate have been resolved. I am pleased that the Senate commitment to fully funding the Education Reform Act of 1993 will be included in the budget submitted to the Governor. Our insistence on supporting local schools with state funds means statewide spending of $89 million more than the House recommended, and this is vital to the Commonwealth's economy as well as to our local goals. Additionally, responsible and responsive health care programs are also going to be an integral part of the budget. Our district will benefit well from the Senate's emphasis on enhancing health care as part of this compromise.

Part of our responsibility in these good economic times is sharing the bounty with those who are both deserving and in need. For this reason, we proposed doubling the program that helps seniors purchase their costly prescriptions. We have worked hard to ensure that the compromise budget includes significant expansion that moves toward the Senate goal by increasing the value of the benefit, the number of eligible seniors and making qualified disabled individuals eligible as well.

Our insistence on supporting local schools with state funds means statewide spending of $89 million more than the House recommended, and this is vital to the Commonwealth's economy as well as to our local goals.

The Senate was able to prevail regarding expenditure of Tobacco Settlement Health Care Funds with an agreement to deposit 70 percent of the receipts in a trust fund for future spending and 30 percent for expenditure on current health care priorities — including catastrophic drug coverage for seniors and anti-smoking initiatives. This is fiscally responsible and responsive to the kinds of health care crises ordinary men and women throughout the Commonwealth now face.

These economic good times are also being shared through tax relief. The tax cuts that will be included in the final budget will benefit the full range of Commonwealth taxpayers. The variety of tax cuts includes a reduction in the income tax rate, an extension of investment tax credit and a housing tax credit to spur the development of affordable housing. The compromise budget also includes the Senate proposal, called the Circuit Breaker, to provide tax credits to seniors of modest means who are burdened by property taxes or rent.

We should be pleased that the final budget will include appropriations and tax cuts that reflect the Senate's commitment to learning from the past, sharing the economic good of the present and investing in the future — each concept a well-balanced facet of the Fiscal Year 2000 budget.

The Braves of Boston

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

In the midst of all the Red Sox-Yankees talk for the past week, let's take a moment to eulogize the Braves. No, not the Atlanta Braves. Certainly not the Milwaukee Braves. But the originals. The Boston Braves.

I must confess that, before they up and moved to Milwaukee, I spent many a sunny afternoon in the left field pavilion at Braves Field, watching fly balls bounce off Sam Jethroe's head and fans in the right field Jury Box cheer their Tommy Holmes.

I was a BU student with time on my hands then and, after the Braves departed in 1953, the old field was bought by BU and renamed Nickerson Field after an old college benefactor. The long-gone pavilion is now part-dormitory, part skating rink.

But they were my team, and my taste for baseball evaporated when the contractor-owners Lou Perini, Guido Rugo and Joe Maney, known locally as "The Three Little Steam Shovels," moved them to greener pastures in Milwaukee.

They were indeed greener. The Braves drew 250,000 fans in their last year in Boston. The next year more than 1.8 million paying customers watched them in Milwaukee.

But they were my team, and my taste for baseball evaporated when the contractor-owners Lou Perini, Guido Rugo and Joe Maney, known locally as "The Three Little Steam Shovels," moved them to greener pastures in Milwaukee.

I've seen less than a dozen Red Sox games since then.

They were lovable klutzes, My Braves, perennial also-rans. Since the World Series began in 1903, they won only two National League pennants (1914 and 1948) and one World Series (1914). They won 38 of 154 games in 1935 and finished 61 fi games behind the leader.

I know that because I was at my first game that year with my Uncle Oscar, a baseball fan since the 1890s who wanted to make sure I got to see a tottering old man on spindle legs named Babe Ruth play out the string for the Braves. If I saw him I don't remember.

But I recall the outfield — Randy Moore, Wally Berger and Hal Lee — because Berger led the league in homers (34) and runs batted in (130) and I once watched a simple fly ball pop out of Lee's glove right in front of thousands...no, hundreds...no, scores of fans in the pavilion.

The catcher was Al Spohrer, who once challenged a teammate, Art the Great Shires, to a bout for the heavyweight boxing championship of baseball, and they might have gone at it if that old spoilsport, Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis, hadn't put his foot down.

The leading pitcher was Fred Frankhouse, who won 11 and lost 15. He led by a large margin. The worse was Ben Cantwell, who won four and lost 25, followed by Ed Brandt (5-19), Bob Smith (8-18), and Somerville's own Danny MacFayden (5-13).

Bill McKenchnie was the manager, but the Braves weren't that much better when their most noted manager, Casey Stengel, came along. He was struck by a cab one year, and Dave Egan, the acerbic columnist at the Daily Record, voted the driver "the man who has done the most for Boston baseball."

After the war, so many former St. Louis Cardinals came over to the Braves, along with manager Billy Southworth, that the team was known as "the Cape Cod Cardinals" when it won the National League pennant in 1948 and went into the World Series with the Cleveland Indians.

I still have a copy of the Daily Record's front page with headline reading: "Sain Beats Feller, 1-0" and, of course, there was controversy.

Cleveland hurler Bob Feller and shortstop Lou Boudreau worked a play that enabled the Indians to pick Boston catcher Phil Masi off second base. But umpire Bill Stewart called him safe and Masi later scored the only run of the game.

Nearly 50 years later, this enabled me to remind Paul Stewart, the National Hockey League referee, "I saw your grandfather blow a call, too."

Gratitude for commemoration

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is to convey gratitude to the many from Cohasset who contributed to the success of the Commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the Wreck of the Brig St. John.

For those people who had traveled from the little island of Lettermullen off the West Coast of Ireland, to this far-off place they had heard of all their lives, it must have seemed like a dream. I am sure those from Galway and the Irish-speaking community of Boston felt much the same. The roses tossed into the sea off the Grampuses, the beautiful Mass, the procession to the cemetery with all the church bells on the Common tolling and the carillon playing, the ceremonies at the parish hall, the very moving portrayal of Elizabeth Lothrop reading her original diary entry from October 1849. They will carry those memories back to Ireland, share them with their neighbors and cherish them in their hearts for the rest of their lives.

All the support received from the people of Cohasset let them know that those lost lives and the tragedy of the Brig St. John have not been forgotten in this little New England town.

And so I wish to thank the store manager and the floral manager of the Stop & Shop for their generosity in helping secure the long-stemmed white roses which were tossed at the Grampus Ledge to commemorate each of those who died; Captain John Murphy of Great Escape Charters of Scituate, and our harbormaster, John Winters, who both made that event possible; and the Cohasset Historical Society, whom I represented, who paid necessary expenses, lent the costume and the artifacts from the Wreck of the Brig St. John and kept the Maritime Museum open for the entire weekend.

Also, the curator, David Wadsworth, who worked at the museum and was available to the visitors at the Lothrop House or the museum all weekend; to Mark Haddad and the town for their support; to Dr. Mulvey and the Cohasset Schools, Janet Figuerido; Ann Porter of the guidance department, and Ms. Deleone of the art department, and students Matt Santoro, Kaitlin Stansell and Chris Golden for their willingness to help; Marjorie Murphy and the Junior Librarians from the Deer Hill School who traced a line drawing of the Brig St. John, which was displayed at the museum over the weekend and moved throughout the day on Sunday; and Pat McCarthy for the watercolor paper.

Also, the Christopher Gallery who supplied the mat for that drawing, and Carousel Antiques, who donated the frame for it; Katie Roche, whose depiction of Elizabeth Lothrop, in period dress, brought that young woman from Cohasset of 1849 to life so poignantly; Father Mulvehill of St. Anthony's for the many trips to the parish hall and church; Jacqueline Clark, the Rev. Gary Ritts, and the Rev. Clifford Cutler, who arranged for the church bells to toll from all three churches as the procession moved by on its way to Central Cemetery; Ralph Perroncello and Eddie Struzik, whose constant care of the cemetery grounds was so apparent as the Celtic Cross was visited many times in these past few weeks; Claire and Bob Collins, who participated in many committee meetings in Boston, and Jim and Mark Murphy who did all the last-minute running and even got to help toll the church bells.

Trick-or-treaters to be home by 8 p.m.

Selectmen also suggest 10 p.m. curfew for teens

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

As in previous years, Cohasset's kids should be able to examine their bounty of cavity-inducing treats while watching their favorite prime-time television shows.

Selectmen set Halloween trick-or-treating hours from 4-to-8 p.m., allowing all of the town's ghosts and goblins to be home long before bedtime. Homeowners will also be able to turn off their porch lights fairly early in the evening without a 10 p.m. Tootsie Roll interruption.

Police Chief Brian Noonan also asked that selectmen suggest a 10 p.m. curfew for teens.

"I understand that it is difficult to enforce," he wrote in a memo, "but it may assist parents in setting guidelines for their children."

Selectmen cannot require the curfew because there is no allowance for one in the town's bylaws, but they may suggest one if they wish.

What all town officials would like to prevent is a repeat of what happened on Halloween night in 1996, when groups of teenagers in the village pelted local police officers with eggs.

Despite the memory of that event three years ago, some selectmen had problems with putting more restrictions on a celebratory night.

"I can go along with the chief if he feels a curfew is necessary, but I already think Halloween is over regulated," said selectman Diane Sullivan.

"Put me down as an 'I,' but I think it's over regulated as well," agreed selectman Fred Koed.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris acceded that the curfew might be difficult to enforce, but said it has worked the last two years.

"Since we've had a suggested curfew, we haven't had any repeats of the egging incidents," she said. "Perhaps we should send a letter to other towns asking them to recommend a 10 p.m. curfew for teens as well. If all of the surrounding towns had a curfew, it would make it much easier to enforce."

Town Manager Mark Haddad also suggested that selectmen consider an age limit on trick-or-treaters for next year, which he said has worked in other towns in reducing the amount of teens going door to door.

Selectman Merle Brown said that enacting such a regulation would only serve to impose additional restrictions on the town's youngsters.

"When they're all dressed up, I can't tell if they're 13 or 20 when they come to the door," he said. "We can make that suggestion, but I don't think we need to make it a law."

Coyotes roaming Cohasset landscape

No danger to humans, but pet owners should be aware

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

If you live in a wooded section of Cohasset, you are likely to have seen coyotes roaming in your area. The coyotes like wooded areas because they are home to potential food sources such as small rodents, birds, rabbits, snakes and frogs. Also, the woods are a potential safeguard from the area's most dangerous coyote predator, the automobile.

"We have anywhere from 18 to 22 coyotes in town right now," said animal control officer Paul Murphy. "In the spring and summer the population is larger. They basically contain themselves to three locations: Wheelwright Farm, the area around Cohasset Heights Landfill, and the area around the Cohasset Golf Club and the transfer station. Those areas are where the coyotes can find a source of food."

Murphy said there was also a family of coyotes that roamed behind the Deer Hill and Osgood schools this summer, but those coyotes have since moved on.

Coyotes are generally shy and avoid contact with humans. They will, however, gravitate to food sources and so humans should avoid feeding them at all costs. By providing a food source, people can alter the animal's natural behavior, making them less wary of humans and opening up residents to the potential of bites or scratches.

Especially in the winter, when coyotes have the most difficult time finding food, residents should keep their house pets indoors.

"They will definitely take cats," Murphy said. "House cats are next on the food chain once their other food supplies dry up. They've also been known to attack small domestic dogs on occasion."

"Leaving pet food outdoors is one of the worst things homeowners can do. For a hungry coyote, that's a source of food. When it comes back hungry, it might just find a cat or dog.
ANIMAL CONTROL OFFICER PAUL MURPHY

Because there is an abundance of squirrels and rabbits in town, pets are safe for the most part. Pet owners who live in the wooded areas where the coyotes usually stay, however, should take steps to keep coyotes away from their animals.

"Leaving pet food outdoors is one of the worst things homeowners can do," Murphy said. "For a hungry coyote, that's a source of food. When it comes back hungry, it might just find a cat or dog. Also, coyotes will try to get into your trash, so it's a good idea to keep your trash secured. If you do those things, you shouldn't see coyotes on your property."

While some people have never seen coyotes, Murphy said it is nearly impossible to mistake one for a domesticated dog.

"Coyotes different have a different look to them," he said. "Especially in the winter, they can look pretty scraggly."

According to the Mass. Division of Fisheries and Wildlife, coyotes are the size of a medium-sized dog, but can be distinguished by their longer, thicker fur. They have long, bushy-tipped tails that are usually pointed down. Their snouts are long and slender, and their ears are pointed and erect.

The pelts of coyotes in Massachusetts range from grayish-black to blonde, light tan, or even all black. Females weigh 33-40 pounds while males are slightly larger, at 34-47 pounds.

Coyotes are generally shy and elusive by nature, which is the reason why contact with humans is so rare. They generally breed in February or March with four to eight pups usually born in April or May.

Many coyote sightings are made at dusk or dawn, though Murphy said they are always around.

"They're primarily a nocturnal animal, but they can be out and about 24 hours a day. Much of the reason they choose to come out at night is because they won't be bothered or harassed."

While house pets can be in danger if coyotes are in desperate need of food, one of the animal groups in town in the most danger are the colony of feral cats that congregate near James Lane.

"If they stay there, those cats stand a great chance of being taken by coyotes," Murphy said.

New school zone signs possible

Safety Officer Richard Yocum reported to Police Chief Brian Noonan that he has received numerous complaints about the electrically operated school zone signs.

Yocum cited instances of the signs not turning on or turning on late and noted that they are poorly maintained as well. As a result of the problems with the flashing signs, the police department has recommended replacing them with permanent school speed limit signs which designate the times when reduced speed limits are in effect.

Cohasset Harbor Marina dispute heads to court

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick is no prophet, but he accurately prophesied that a dispute over the Cohasset Harbor Marina expansion would end up in court. Chittick predicted the court battle on Aug. 19 when it became apparent that the ZBA would rule against the Marina's expansion. As Chittick expected, the ZBA unanimously ruled on Sept. 9 that the marina expansion encroached on a residential zone and therefore violated the town's zoning bylaws. Marina owner Paul Trendowicz filed an appeal of the ZBA decision in land court on Oct. 8.

The court battle will focus on whether the town's 1969 color-coded zoning map correctly shows a yellow residential zone extending to the middle of Bailey's Creek. Marinas are not allowed in residential zones without a variance or special permit. Trendowicz — believing he had all the required permits for the project — increased the length of the marina dock by 280 feet and increased the number of boat slips from 47 to 85. The land court has not set a trial date yet.

The ZBA ruled on the marina expansion in response to a complaint filed by Michael and Victoria Hurley of Border Street. The Hurleys' home is near the marina, which is located at 33-37 Parker Ave.. The Hurleys appealed a decision by Building Inspector Robert Egan approving the marina expansion. The Hurleys' appeal was rejected initially because they failed to file their claim within the ZBA's proscribed time limits. The Hurleys promptly filed a second appeal. Attorney Richard Henderson represented the Hurleys, convincing the ZBA that the town's zoning map is drawn accurately.

The ZBA used Henderson's arguments as the jump-off point for their ruling that the marina expansion had encroached upon a residential zone. The ZBA said Trendowicz would need a special permit or variance to legalize the marina.

The court battle will focus on whether the town's 1969 color-coded zoning map correctly shows a yellow residential zone extending to the middle of Bailey's Creek.

Attorneys for Trendowicz claim the ZBA decision should be reversed because:

- the zoning map is inaccurate and ambiguous. Their claim was bolstered somewhat when Town Counsel's office speculated that a printing error may have inaccurately extended a residential zoning line into the middle of Bailey's Creek. The marina expansion clearly extends well into the alleged residential zone in the creek.
- the ZBA should not have allowed the Hurleys to appeal a second time because they clearly missed the filing deadline for the first appeal.
- the ruling runs contrary to previous ZBA decisions that the area below high-water is unzoned.
- there was not a legal quorum present to act upon a correction to the ZBA's original decision. The correction stated that the ZBA ruling reversed only part of Egan's decision to allow the marina to expand. The ZBA has not issued a cease-and-desist order against the marina. Trendowicz can keep the expanded marina open until the court case runs its course.

In another matter also involving the marina, the ZBA upheld some of the points in a separate appeal of Egan's decision allowing the expansion. Theodore and Kathleen Kilkuskie said a storage shed for the marina owned by Trendowicz sat on their residential property. Trendowicz moved the shed, but only a few feet onto his own property. The ZBA agreed with the Kilkuskies that the shed should be moved at least 30 feet from their property line to comply with zoning bylaws.

The ZBA also agreed with the Kilkuskies that the marina expansion should have undergone site review by the planning board. The ZBA took no action against the marina on that point, stating that Trendowicz should first be given the opportunity to appeal the decision to state courts.

The ZBA did not agree with the Kilkuskies that Trendowicz had illegally expanded the size of his parking lot. Representatives for Trendowicz said the parking lot had been re-configured for better access.

Cohasset water quality report is released

The Cohasset Water Department today released its first "Water Quality Report" to the public. Copies of the report were mailed today to all residents of Cohasset.

"We are pleased to report that the quality of the water is excellent as it leaves the Water Treatment Plant," said John McNabb Jr., chairman of the Board of Water Commissioners. "Unfortunately, the accumulation of sediments in the Bear Hill water tank and in the water mains causes discolored water in many areas of town. We are addressing this problem through our long range capital improvement plan, which includes building a new water tank on Scituate Hill and our program to clean and line water mains and to replace undersized water mains."

"We want every resident of Cohasset to understand where their drinking water comes from and how important it is to protect the quality of the watershed areas."
— John K. McNabb, Jr., water commissioner

"In addition to information about the quality of the drinking water," McNabb said, "the Water Quality Report includes a large 4-color map of the watershed for the sources of Cohasset's public drinking water supply, and shows the location of some potential threats to watershed quality. We want every resident of Cohasset to understand where their drinking water comes from and how important it is to protect the quality of the watershed areas."

This report was mandated by EPA regulations, which, under the Consumer Confidence report regulations, required all drinking water suppliers to complete and distribute a report on the sources of drinking water and the quality of the water by Oct. 19.

Copies of the Water Quality Report are also available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Town Hall, and the Water Treatment Plant, 339 King St.

A gift of hope

Cohasset family giving a home to Russian immigrant couple

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

When the Soviet Union disintegrated in 1991, a joyous Boris Yeltsin stood atop a tank waving a Russian flag. The red, white, and blue tricolor was to signal a new era of freedom for people who had been held back for decades by the country's communist regime. While a degree of freedom was indeed realized, the resulting failure of the country's leadership to convert to a capitalist economy has left most essentially destitute.

Thanks to a 10-year friendship with a Cohasset couple, a Siberian man and his wife will be leaving their homeland in search of a better life in America. Dr. Susan Emmer and her husband, Richard Schmidt, first met the visiting Anatoly Lysak in June 1989. Anatoly came to America as a member of a singing troupe, and Emmer had been asked by a friend to help the Russians feel comfortable. She immediately struck up a friendship with Anatoly, who was one of the better English speakers on the trip.

"Anatoly and I got to know each other, and I found him to be a very nice, gentle person," Emmer said of their initial meeting. "Their trip came before the Soviet Union broke up, and there were KGB chaperones all around them. Everything was tightly controlled, but we were still able to talk and get to know one another."

In the course of one of their conversations, Emmer learned of the wish of Anatoly's 16-year old son for a particularly American souvenir.

"His son really wanted a pair of basketball shoes," she said. "Anatoly went to a shoe store, but found that he didn't have the money. He only made about $50 a month."

Emmer and her husband saw an opportunity to make a dream come true and they secretly purchased the shoes for Anatoly's son. When the couple presented him with the gift before he was to depart for Russia, Anatoly wept.

"He couldn't believe that someone would do that for him," Emmer said. "He wrote to us that his son had become the celebrity of his high school because of the sneakers. It's amazing what we take for granted in a place like Cohasset."

Emmer and Schmidt have exchanged letters with Anatoly ever since. They heard stories of his two grown children by his first wife and of his occasional bouts with loneliness. The couple were overjoyed, then, to learn of his 1995 wedding to English teacher and technical translator Olga Kukarina.

The collapse of the Russian economy, however, has thrown a wrench into Anatoly and Olga's future plans. An exciting future suddenly looked bleak.

"We have much more than we need, and this is a chance to put it to good use. It's a chance to simplify our lives and see ourselves through their eyes. Those perspectives will enrich us immensely."
DR. SUSAN EMMER

"Both Anatoly and Olga lost their jobs and he asked if I could find them meaningful jobs in America," Emmer said. "He's a radiophysicist and worked at the Siberian Department of the Russian Academy of Sciences. Being a university employee, he lost his job when the state's money dried up. I went to MIT and other places, but it's tough to get somebody a job sight unseen. People want to meet who they're going to hire."

Unable to secure work for the Russian couple, Emmer entered them in the U.S. government's Diversity Immigrant Visa Program. The program offers 50,000 visas a year, but to be considered Anatoly and Olga had to go from Siberia to the American Embassy in Moscow for a series of interviews. They were selected for the program and received visas to come to America. The process, however, was financially devastating.

"I don't know if people in America realize how far it is from Siberia to Moscow, but it's like going from Boston to the middle of the Pacific Ocean," Emmer said. "Between that trip, hotel rooms in Moscow, and $1000 for the visa, they wiped out their life savings."

Anatoly and Olga live in a two-room apartment in Siberia, a relative luxury considering that two families often share such apartments in Russia. They were hoping to sell the apartment in order to build up some savings to bring to America, but the economic situation in Russia made such a scenario impossible.

'Nobody in Russia has any money," Emmer said. "A lot of Anatoly and Olga's friends have worked for six months without getting paid. They're handing the apartment to Anatoly's daughter and her husband, who just had a child."

To pay for their plane tickets, Anatoly and Olga have sold all of their furniture and even some of their clothes. They will arrive with little more than the clothes on their backs and the dreams in their hearts. Emmer is amazed by their courage.

"These are not kids that are coming over," she said. "It's so hard to make such an unbelievable shift at 40 or 50 years old."

Emmer and Schmidt are opening their home to Anatoly and Olga when they arrive in America on Nov. 6. While the Russian couple will not have to worry about food and shelter immediately, Emmer said they are going to have a tough time getting on their feet.

"They're basically coming here with nothing," she said. "When they come, they'll need a car to go on job interviews, money for car insurance, and three months rent so they can get an apartments once they find work."

To help them establish their new lives in America, Emmer has started a fund for the couple at Pilgrim Co-operative Bank.

"It's called A New Beginning Benefit Fund and we started it to make it easier for them to begin their new lives," she said. "We're hoping that people will want to help. What would it be like to go to a foreign country and start all over? The only people they know here are me and my husband."

Anatoly and Olga on their wedding day.

Dr. Susan Emmer and husband Richard Schmidt with eight year-old daughter Emilie. Emilie is holding a yard sale for the Russian couple and giving her room to them as well.

Emmer and Schmidt's eight year-old daughter, Emilie, is also contributing to helping the Russian couple get settled in America. The family has been in the process of cleaning out their home to make room for their Russian guests, and Emilie decided to sell some of her old toys to help their cause.

"She asked if we could have a yard sale and give all the money to Olga and Anatoly's fund," Emmer said of her daughter, a third-grader at the South Shore Charter School. "We read that Saturday is Make a Difference Day, which is a national day of volunteerism sponsored by the Points of Light Foundation. It seemed like the perfect time to do it."

The Points of Light Foundation will award $2.6 million nationwide to worthy causes throughout the country. Emmer registered the yard sale, which will be held at her home at 7 Woodland Dr on Saturday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., on the internet and was pleasantly surprised to hear from one of the members of the foundation last week.

"We got a call last Friday from one of the members of the foundation's advisory board," she said. "The fact that we're doing this caught their eye."

While Emmer is not sure that contact will lead to any monetary reward for Anatoly and Olga's fund, she is certain that having them in her home will reap much more significant rewards for her and her family.

"We have much more than we need, and this is a chance to put it to good use," she said. "It's a chance to simplify our lives and see ourselves through their eyes. Those perspectives will enrich us immensely. Emilie is giving up her bed for them, and I think this whole experience will teach her a lot about generosity and sharing."

Emmer and her family will pick up Anatoly and Olga when they arrive in New York on Nov. 6. Olga has never been to America, and Emmer said it will be fascinating to see this country through a newcomer's eyes.

"Richard said he wants to be there when Olga goes to the supermarket for the first time," she said. "It's going to completely blow her mind. We just take things like that for granted."

America may be a land of opportunities unavailable in Russia, but Emmer said that Anatoly and Olga's transition will be difficult nonetheless.

"They love their country, and there's a tremendous amount of despair involved with this move," she said. They may never see some of their friends again. Olga told me that leaving her country makes her feel almost like a woman leaving her sick child. She told me that the spirit of her country is dead. How would I feel to say the spirit of America is dead?"

Anyone wishing to contribute to Anatoly and Olga's fund can send a check to Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, 48 S. Main St, c/o A New Beginning Fund. Dr. Emmer would be happy to give anyone more information and may be reached at 383-6028.

Jason Brown scored two touchdowns as the Skippers defeated Norton, 18-14.

Sophomore Tim Baird had three goals in wins over Chatham and Hull.

Skippers on the rebound

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset boys soccer coach Juan Ramos wasn't sure just what to do.

After a rough start, his team had rallied to post a 4-3-1 record as the Skippers approached the halfway point of the season, but then Cohasset had a three game losing streak.

Losses to South Shore League power Norwell and Norton were certainly understandable, but also had a tough loss to Carver.

"We had beaten them the first time, so that was a bad loss," said Ramos.

But the Jeckyll and Hyde routine that has been the boys soccer season took a turn for the better as the Skipper have rallied with wins over Hull and Chatham.

Cohasset now needs five points in the last five games to qualify for the state tournament.

"I think we have played better the last couple of games," said Ramos. "I'm encouraged."

If Cohasset is going to reach the postseason, the team will have to continue to play well, as there are still some tough games left.

The Skippers were scheduled to play at Hanover yesterday. The Indians have qualified for the postseason and are battling for second place in the league.

A trip to Abington is scheduled for today. The first time the two teams met, Cohasset came away with a 3-1 win over the Green Wave. On Monday, the Skippers play Randolph. The two teams tied earlier this season. Chatham is also on the schedule

"We have some winnable games," said Ramos. "We have our work cut out for us. It's up to us."

Tim Baird had two goals against Chatham. The sophomore also had a goal against Hull.. Junior John Hertig also had a goal against Hull.

"They have really stepped up," said Ramos.

The coach wants to make sure that

Freshman Maura O'Brien has been solid in net for the girls soccer team this season.

Injuries plague girls soccer

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

At the start of the season Cohasset High girls soccer coach Deb Beal never envisioned the Lady Skippers would be struggling with a 1-9-2 record after 12 games.

She saw a team that was on the cusp of qualifying for postseason play, not a squad with the sole goal of finishing respectably and coming back strong next fall.

Much of the Lady Skippers' woes have more to do with bad luck than a lack of talent. Injuries have plagued Cohasset for most of the season and definitely weakened the team.

"I want to see them be competitive and end the season with the pride they started with."
Cohasset High girls soccer coach Deb Beal

Ankle injuries to Alissa Conley and Maureen Equi have forced the pair to the sidelines. They will return to the lineup before the end of the season, but Beal fears neither will be at top strength.

"They won't be 100 percent to finish the season," she said.

Then there's Clara Scery.

Scery injured her knee last year and spend months doing rehabilitation work to strengthen it to the point where she could play again. Two weeks before the start of camp this summer Scery dislocated her knee and she has battled the injury all season, leaving her well below full strength.

But there have been bright spots for the Lady Skippers, which makes it all the more frustrating when Cohasset loses. They have shown hints of brilliance, but haven't been able to sustain a high level of play necessary to win games in the South Shore League.

"I think we'd be a little more competitive than we are," Beal said.

When they have been competitive, the Lady Skippers have shown definite toughness. Take the 1-0 loss to the always tough Norwell High team. Cohasset limited the Lady Clippers to just a few shots on net and freshman goaltender Maura O'Brien played a superb game. The lone tally came when a Norwell Clipper raced down the right side and ripped off a kick that O'Brien had no chance at.

"It was definitely an eye-opening experience for the girls, playing so well against Norwell," Beal said.

Against Hull in wind-swept conditions, Cohasset roared back from a 5-0 half-time defect to score five times in the second half for a 5-5 tie. Eileen Ridge struck for two goals while Maura Duffy and Maggie O'Neil each gamered a goal.

"They were excited to come back," Beal said.

The Lady Skippers had Hull's number this season as they registered a 3-0 win as well.

One problem Cohasset has had all season is the team's less than overwhelming starts and finishes. The Lady Skippers haven't come out from the start and played aggressively enough. And in the final minutes of games, there have been breakdowns allowing the opposing team to get more goal scoring opportunities.

"Usually it's the first 10 minutes and the last 10 minutes that hurts us," Beal said.

With five games left, there is nothing Beal would like more to see than the team come together and play its best soccer of the sea-

Gridders hold off late Norton rally for win

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

If you stumbled into Norton High's Adams Field in the fourth quarter, you saw two things.

A pretty good final period and two teams that didn't leave much on the field when it was over.

The Cohasset High football team defeated Norton, 18-14, last Saturday afternoon, improving to 2-3, while the Lancers dropped to 1-4. The Skippers will travel to Nauset on Saturday for a 1 p.m. game, while Norton is at Carver on Friday night at 7 p.m.

On Saturday, it was the end of the game that both coaches were talking about..

Norton was able to get the ball down to the Cohasset 22-yard line before time ran out of the Lancers.

The Lancers' noseguard Jeremy Silva came up with a fumble recovery to get his team the ball back with 3:52 left in the game.

Norton, then behind the running of Kenyatta Hale, 259-yards, and Matt Hillman and the passing of Ryan Rooslet was able to move the ball into the Cohasset end.

Hillman had a nine-yard run to get to the 23-yard line of the Skippers, but Cohasset's Craig Parker, who came up big on the drive, made a couple of tackles and was able to get in on Rooslet to disrupt the play.

"He rose to the occasion," said Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe of Parker's performance.

The Lancers were without any timeouts in the closing seconds, which prevented them from running the ball. Instead, they had to go to the air and the Skippers were able to keep them out of the end zone.

"It was a very competitive game," said Norton head coach Paul Harrison.

Rolfe could have done without the last minute drive by the Lancers, but the Skippers coach was glad to take the ride back home with a victory in his back pocket.

"This is a league win and that's why it is big," he said. "This is a game that we needed to have."

"This is a league win and that's why it is big. This is a game that we needed to have."
Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe

The Skippers were able to bounce back from a last-second defeat to Abington, 22-21, the week before, but Rolfe felt that game was a plus for his squad.

"We were pretty confident after that," said Rolfe about the Green Wave defeat. "That couldn't hurt us."

With it being homecoming, the Lancers wanted to give their fans a win.

"I felt this was a winnable game," said Harrison, "but the penalties hurt us."

Both teams are young squads.

"Our kids try very hard," said Harrison. "We're just not there yet. We're like an eight-cylinder car, running on six-cylinders. We will be there. The kids are working hard."

Rolfe would like to see his team eliminate the mistakes that allowed the Lancers to hang in until the very end, but the Skippers came up with enough big plays to get the victory.

After the two teams battled to a scoreless first half, the Lancers got on the board after a 40-yard run by Hale, set up his six-yard touchdown. On the two-point conversion attempt, Rooslet threw a pass to Tim Jardin for an 8-0 lead.

Cohasset's Joe Pergola came up with an interception to set up the Skippers' first touchdown. Sophomore quarterback Jason Brown kept the ball on a keeper around right end and went in for a 30-yard score. The Lancers stopped the two-point conversion.

On their first drive of the fourth quarter, Brown, despite being facemasked, ran for a 36-yard touchdown on the option for a 12-8 lead. Junior running back Daniel Trowers threw a big block to spring the quarterback.

Then, it was Trowers' turn as he went in from 16-yards out for an 18-8 lead.

In the battle between the junior running backs, Hale came right back with a 46-yard score. On the two-point conversion, Rooslet threw a pass to David Glassman to cut the lead to four points.

"He's a warrior," said Harrison of Hale, "and comes to play. He's a nice young man.

"(Trowers) is very quick and has a nice slide step."

The two will be worth watching again next year on the gridiron when they face each other again, but right now, both teams are looking for more victories.

with the Skipper so close to qualifying for the postseason, they don't get overwhelmed.

"We don't stress anything except for doing the best that you can," said Ramos.

The credit for the turnaround goes to the players, according to Ramos.

"I told them that we've reached a plateau," said Ramos. "We needed to go back and work harder in practice, and the kids did."

It was also time for the coach to adjust.

"I asked myself if I could be doing anything different," said Ramos. "I changed the practices around a little bit. I gave the kids a different look. It seems to have worked out."

son.

"In reality, we have the ability to win four of them," she said. "I want to see them be competitive and end the season with the pride they started with."

Beal is very optimistic about next season, thanks to a host of returning players and those players who will be making the move from a very successful JV program to the varsity team. The team is well coached and does all the fundamentals well. Passing, moving and scoring are all strong points of the JV team.

"I'm looking forward to getting my hands on them next season," Beal said. "I'm very optimistic about the JV girls. The Cohasset Soccer Club is doing a great job prepping the kids for high school soccer."

Mystery novels just never go out of style

Genre is as popular as ever among readers

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

An increasing number of adult readers are picking up mystery books in their leisure time, and the array seems endless.

Mysteries have been popular reading for many years — from Agatha Christie novels to the well-loved "Nancy Drew" series by Carolyn Keene. Both authors date back decades, but their books are still widely read.

Today, culinary mysteries and ones taking place in suburban lifestyle settings — such as the Susan Henshaw series by Valerie Wolzien — are gaining in popularity.

In Diane Mott Davidson's novels, featuring Goldy Bear the caterer, everyday problems and challenges — including being a single mother for part of the series and coping with the challenges posed by a well-meaning but spirited teenage son — blend with murder to keep readers guessing up until the end of the novels.

"I try to solve the mysteries as I go along, although I usually don't have much luck. I always know there will be some kind of twist at the end."
— Helen Weiser of Hull

The variety of mystery choices never seems to stop — from Lilian Jackson Braun's "cat" mysteries, including "The Cat Who Played Brahms" and "The Cat Who Knew a Cardinal" to Jill Churchill's cleverly titled "whodunits" — "The Class Menagerie," "Grime and Punishment," "War and Peas" and "A Quiche Before Dying," to name a few.

Camille Minichino's mysteries have a large readership. Her three novels so far, entitled "The Helium Mystery," "The Hydrogen Mystery" and "The Lithium Mystery" revolve around a unique theme — the periodic tables — but in simple enough terms that both scientific and non-scientific readers alike find them fascinating.

There's even a Conor Daly series for golf-lovers, featuring Kieran Lenahan.

The biggest challenge, though, is for authors to keep up with the growing demand for their next books.

Sue Grafton novels, featuring tough but compassionate Kinsey Millhone, have already run the alphabet from "A is for Alibi" to "O is for Outlaw," which was just released in hardcover. Her fans can only hope that once she reaches "Z," she'll start all over again with "double A."

Many of the most recent mysteries dwell more on solving a murder than on blood and gore. Some are on the lighthearted side. However, others are complex and sometimes intense and even disturbing.

Helen Weiser of Hull, who attended "Spenser" author Robert Parker's recent talk at Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset (see related story), reads mysteries almost exclusively.

In fact, she just picked up a copy of the "Cooking School Murders," which she believes was written in the 1970s or '80s, at a yard sale. To the best of her recollections, the same author wrote "The Baked Bean Suppers."

"But Agatha Christie novels are still my favorite," Weiser said.

What makes for a good mystery?

Parker wows fans with talk on latest novel

Helen Hunt to star in movie based on book

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Mystery legend Robert Parker, the author of 26 "Spenser" private-eye novels, wowed more than 80 mystery lovers from a number of South Shore towns recently at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset.

There was standing room only as Parker fans of all ages listened attentively as he spoke about his latest novel, "Family Honor." The mystery was written exclusively for Oscar-winning actress Helen Hunt, who will play the part of Sunny Randall in a film adaptation sometime next year. The actress requested making a motion picture with Parker, who has written numerous novels and movies.

When he visited Buttonwood, Parker apologized for arriving late. He hadn't anticipated such heavy traffic on Route 228!

"Helen Hunt wanted me to write a female 'Spenser' for her because she's a fan. But Sunny Randall is not a 'Spenser' in drag."
— Robert Parker

But since a Buttonwood employee had caught sight of him at the light near Stop and Shop, guests had waited patiently for Parker to appear.

"I'm sorry I'm late, but I will make it up to you and leave early," he quipped.

Buttonwood has hosted a number of mystery writers over the years.

"But none has had so devoted a following as Robert Parker," said Betsey Detwiler, owner of Buttonwood, as she introduced the famous author as the "dean of American crime writers."

Parker responded, "All that means is that you're old!"

The gregarious, quick-witted writer has just completed the 322-page "Family Honor" manuscript, which features a new protagonist — Sunny Randall — a former cop, would-be artist and working private eye.

His new female heroine is tough but intuitive, with a beloved miniature bull terrier. Spike, her restaurant-owner friend, is never far away — willing and able to contribute some heavy muscle when necessary.

His wife, Joan, who Parker calls "my main squeeze," worked on the script with him.

When the president of Sony Pictures contacted the famous author to ask him to meet with Hunt, Parker recalls thinking he'd gladly walk there if he had to. Needless to say, that wasn't necessary.

"Helen Hunt wanted me to write a female 'Spenser' for her because she's a fan," he said, but "Sunny Randall is not a 'Spenser' in drag."

Following a three-hour meeting, Parker agreed to write a novel that Sony could buy once it was completed and adapt into a movie.

"I didn't want to write a screenplay. I'm not a collaborative guy," he said.

Once the book was completed, Parker told Sony he'd be perfectly happy to listen to suggestions, although he indicated he might not go along with them.

"The ugly secret is that screenplays should take three weeks to write, but it will take at least a year," he said.

Originally, Parker wanted to title his novel "Count the Raindrops," but he was overruled.

"Titles are like covers — they're part of the marketing process," he said.

One guest at his Buttonwood talk asked if Parker plans to write more Sunny Randall mysteries.

While he's unsure at this time whether or not he'll write a sequel to "Family Honor," a new "Spenser" novel will be released in the spring.

Another in attendance asked whether "Family Honor" will be changed when the screenplay is written.

"You bet it will," Parker said, "and probably not for the better!"

Did he have difficulty writing a mystery novel from a female vantage point?

"I had a lot of trouble, but my wife offered her perspective," he said. "I wouldn't have undertaken the project without Joan. She female-ized the pages for me. She'd say, 'Bob, we're not calling that 'rouge' anymore.'"

In the end, Parker was reasonably happy with the outcome.

The couple has been together since age 17 and married for 43 years.

"Joan is the girl of my dreams," Parker said.

As far as incorporating humor into his mysteries is concerned, Parker said he doesn't try to force it.

"It just comes," he said. "Humor has to come out of a circumstance. It's organic."

While Parker hasn't decided whether or not he'll write another Sunny Randall mystery, he's hoping the movie will be a success.

"If all goes well, we'll have perhaps the hottest female star in Hollywood (in Sunny Randall) and a best-selling novel if it weren't for (the) Harry Potter (fantasy) being well up on the list!" he said.

Robert Parker, who spoke recently at Buttonwood, has penned many a mystery novel.

Mystery novels never go out of style

In Weiser's viewpoint, it's a novel that isn't gruesome and doesn't contain swearing.

"I enjoy low-key mysteries," she said. "I like to see how a mystery is solved, without a lot of gore."

Weiser also enjoys P.D. James and Sue Grafton.

"I try to solve the mysteries as I go along," she said, "although I usually don't have much luck. I always know there will be some kind of twist at the end."

Mary Higgins Clark mysteries keep Weiser up all night because she can't put them down once she's started them.

"I can't stop reading. I just want to go a little further, " she said. "They keep me on the edge of my chair."

A growing number of mystery fans have enjoyed hearing talks presented informally by prominent mystery writers which have been hosted by Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset during the past six years.

On Oct. 20, Buttonwood held its fall mystery night, featuring authors Linda Barnes, Rob Kean and Michelle Blake.

In Barnes' new mystery, "Flashpoint," feisty Boston private eye Carlotta Carlyle stars for the eighth time in a tale involving a tenant-landlord dispute.

"The Pledge," Kean's debut novel, is a story of cutting-edge suspense set in a college fraternity.

In Blake's "The Tentmaker," the sleuth, Lily James Connor, is a female Episcopal priest with a passion for truth.

At Hingham Public Library, it's not uncommon to hear a mystery novel fan or two discussing the latest release by their favorite author.

Children are also enjoying their share of mysteries.

At Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham, mystery reading is once again on the rise after a brief lull.

According to manager Linda Gardner, mysteries have been competing against the horror element for some time.

"Goosebumps took over the market for awhile, but mysteries seem to be coming back a bit," she said.

This summer, for example, a promotion by the publisher of Nancy Drew books combined with the influence of nostalgic parents who had read the young sleuth's books themselves as children to create a comeback of sorts for that series.

"Nancy Drew books are definitely a parent-driven interest," said Gardner.

While some children are reading Hardy Boy mysteries, they're not as popular.

But a number of mysteries designed for younger kids in grades 1-3 are capturing the attention of a large number of children.

Those include "The Three Investigators"; "The Zack Files"; "Nate the Great Detective" novels featuring Sharmat, a little guy who wears a Sherlock Holmes hat and solves mysteries; and ones featuring Encyclopedia Brown, boy detective, as the main character.

"Some of the kids grab on to these and keep coming back for more," Gardner said.

The A-Z mystery series for kids by Ron Roy includes titles such as "The Absent Author" and "The Bald Bandit." Books about Cam Jansen, a girl detective, are also capturing the attention of a large number of readers.

Even the Pleasant Company, which produces the American Girl historical dolls, is coming out with a new series of mysteries set against an historical backdrop.

"A good mystery has an empowering affect on kids," Gardner said. "When they read about how a child solves life problems, they like to put themselves in the characters' place and do some of those things themselves."

It's hard for any type of novel to compete with the bestseller Harry Potter series, though, which has caused a great interest in fantasy books.

Cohasset Place names

The intersection of Beechwood and King Streets long has been identified locally as "Reed's Corner." At the western edge of the road adjacent to the intersection, a small Cape Cod style cottage, built in 1811 by Moses Pratt, in later years was resided in by Robert Henry Reed and three more generations of the Reed family.

Moses Pratt, the builder, was born in 1783 and married Lois Gustin. Their son, George L. Pratt, born in 1809, married in 1834 Dorcas Wood. George died in 1841 and Dorcas married (2) Robert Henry Reed in 1844. They resided in the Moses Pratt house, as did their son William Henry Reed, born in 1847, and his wife Catherine (Logan) Reed.

The next generation of the family was Harry Herbert Reed, born in 1886, whose wife was Ada B. Reed. Their son Harry H. Reed Jr. was born in 1915. He is listed as being an engineer, and his wife was Ethel M. Reed. The Reeds remain at Reed's Corner in the town's annual Street List into the 1960s, extending the family's residency there to nearly a century and a quarter..

Organist from Latvia at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday concert series, St. Stephen's Church welcomes Latvian organist Talivaldis Deksnis for a recital Sunday, Oct. 31, at 3 p.m. Deksnis is organist at the Dom, the cathedral of Riga, Latvia, where he plays one of the largest instruments in Europe, in a church more than 500 years old and boasting a reverberation time of more than eight seconds! Telivaldis will perform works by Latvian and other Eastern European composers as well as compositions by Bach, Franck and other masters.

On Deksnis' last visit to Cohasset, he said that for him being at St. Stephen's was a "beautiful and magical experience." Come and share in this magic on the Eve of All Hallows!

A free-will offering will be taken.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., is handicapped accessible, and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For information, call 383-1083.

October workshops at art center

The South Shore Art Center is offering a series of workshops guaranteed to add autumnal creative inspiration.

A class incorporating photography will be taught by local award-winning artist Becky Haletky. In Handcoloring Black and White Photographs, students will learn how to color black and white photographs with Marshall's oils. Use of colored pencils and oil paints will also be included. The class will meet Monday evening, Oct. 25 from 7 to 10 p.m. Students can in one evening learn an interesting new artistic technique.

Jenna Cutler, owner of Labyrinth Design, a Hingham rubber stamp store will be teaching a series of workshops in rubber stamping. The three workshops will include an introduction to different techniques including making cards, mirror or photo frames and stamping on fabric. The results are exquisite and the resulting artwork does not look like it was made with rubber stamps. The workshops are offered on Wednesday evenings in October and November. Call the Art Center at 383-2787 for more information or to register for courses and workshops.

Newbery honor author to speak

Buttonwood for Kids and the Hingham Public Library present their Meet The Authors Night for Young Adults, featuring award-winning author Bette Greene, Thursday, Nov. 4 from 7-9 p.m. at the Hingham Public Library.

Greene's most well-known novel, "Summer of My German Soldier," a modern classic, deals with issues of prejudice and abuse in a serious and thoughtful way. Summer tells the story of 12-year-old Patty Bergen, whose hometown in Arkansas becomes the site of a camp housing German prisoners in World War II. Although she's Jewish, Patty begins to see a prison escapee, Anton, not as a Nazi, but as a lonely, frightened young man, with feelings not unlike her own.

Because of the serious nature of some of Greene's books, this free event is recommended for children ages 10 and up and their parents. Reservations are requested for seating and refreshments. Call Buttonwood at 749-2665 or the Hingham Library's Children's Room at 741-1406 for more information or to reserve your place.

Meeting on Social Security reform

The Hingham Area Branch of the American Association of University Women (AAUW) serving women in 12 South Shore communities invites interested women to attend a program on Social Security Reform to be held Tuesday, Nov. 9, in the Library/Media Center of the Hingham Middle School at 1103 Main St. in Hingham. The speaker will be a representative from U.S. Congressman William Delahunt's office. Refreshments will be served at 7:45 followed by the program at 8 p.m.

This program is part of a continuing interest by AAUW in public policy issues. For more than a century, AAUW has promoted equity in the workplace, in education and in all aspects of women's lives. This is why AAUW has long been committed to a Social Security program that improves the social status and economic security of the elderly. When Congress considers proposals to reform Social Security, it is critical that our legislators realize that women are more dependent on Social Security than men. Women earn less than men which translates into lower benefits. Women are half as likely as men to receive a pension. Women do not spend as much time in the work force as men. Women live longer than men. Join the AAUW as it explores the different ideas that have been proposed to reform the system. For more information on membership, call Sheila Doherty (848-8122) or concerning this program Chris Gregoire (749-5493).

St. Anthony's Parish Council

At a meeting of St. Anthony's Parish Council, Sunday evening, Oct. 17, Roger Wade, was elected to the office of vice chairman. He will take over the duties previously held by Paul Rooney since the establishment of the Parish Council in the spring of 1996.

The Arimatheans will provide service in the name of the parish to parishioners who have had a death in the family. Among the services would be assistance in planning the funeral liturgy and providing a reception for friends and relatives of the deceased. Walter Phelps Kern

Walter Phelps Kern, 80, of Canton, died Oct. 13.

He was born in Dayton, Ohio, in 1918 and was a resident of Cohasset for more than 40 years and then resided in Canton for the last five years.

He served six years in the U.S. Army Signal Corps, in the South Pacific, during World War II. He received an engineering degree at MIT, where he was a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity and the sailing club and a master's degree in nuclear physics from Temple University.

While working at Tracerlab, a nuclear instrumentation company, he met and married Barbara Cobban. He was a highly sought-after engineer, employed in a variety of industries. For more than three decades he was employed at Teradyne as chief mechanical engineer, retiring in 1998. He holds more than a dozen patents for mechanical and electro-mechanical devices.

He was active in the Sports Car Club of America as a race care driver, driving a variety of automobiles, the last of which—the Saab Quantum—he designed and built. It became a forerunner of the Saab Sonett sports car. In the earliest days of electrical-vehicle development, he modified a Saab Sonett to run on electrical power and used it for commuting. He was an active member and president of the Sonett Club of New England and a member of the Saab Club of America.

He was active for many years in the Cohasset Chapter of the American Field Service and served as president. He and his family sponsored a Japanese exchange student who remains a close member of the family.

He was an avid tennis player, a member of the Cohasset Squash and Tennis Club since its founding, and a close follower of professional tennis tournaments and the Davis Cup competition.

He enjoyed designing and building model railroad layouts; he was a sponsor of the building of the sailing ship The Spirit of Massachusetts.

He leaves his wife Barbara A. (Cobban) Kern; a daughter Jill P. Kern; two sons, Jonathan F. Kern and Shigeomi Suzuki; and one grandson.

A memorial service will be celebrated Oct. 30 at 2 p.m. at the First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church, 1508 Washington St., Canton. Visiting hours are omitted. Interment will be private.

Herb Jason and his brother, Kenneth R. Jason, finally see the monument they worked to long and hard for installed at Government Island.

Lightkeepers' Memorial nears completion

Engraved granite stones are now in place

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Sometimes, dreams do come true. That much was in evidence Tuesday morning as 86 year-old Herb Jason, a lifelong Cohasset resident and lobsterman, watched at Government Island as workers from W.C. Canniff and Sons in Quincy lowered a 3300-pound engraved stone of polished black granite that will serve as the centerpiece of the memorial that has been a dream of Jason's since he was a boy.

The Antoine and Wilson Memorial ensures that the town will forever remember Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, the two young lightkeepers who lost their lives when the original Minot's Ledge Light crashed into the sea, unable to withstand the vicious storm which struck the coast on the night of April 16, 1851.

"The lighthouse bell was ringing furiously around 11:00," Jason said in describing the scene of that night. "The lighthouse was swaying two feet from center on either side. Antoine and Wilson put a message in a bottle which said that the lighthouse would not last the night and put their initials, J.A. and J.W., on it."

A large engraving on the front of the memorial depicts the original Minot's Ledge Light as it looked before its untimely demise. Also engraved on the front is the story of Antoine and Wilson and of the furious storm that took their lives.

Schools' rehab cost disparity is reconciled

1998 study of different scope than current projections

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

School renovation estimates ranging from $28 million to $41 million has led some to wonder why a 1998 study said that both Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle High School could be renovated for a cost of under $13 million.

"It's important to stress to the school committee that people want to know how the project got from $13 million to $28 million," said Town Manager Mark Haddad at last Wednesday's joint meeting of the school committee and school facilities committee. "$15 million is a lot of money. Inflation isn't that bad."

Last year's study, done by KFP Architects, Inc. of Weymouth, was part of an overall town facilities audit which also assessed Town Hall, Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and the police and fire stations. Stephen G. Devine, principal of KFP Architects, said the disparity in cost estimates between his firm's study and that recently completed by architects from Strekalovsky and Hoit of Hingham is due to their completely different purposes.

"There's a very definite distinction in what they [Strekalovsky and Hoit] did and what we did," Devine said. "They're looking at program and enrollment needs for 50 years and are looking to tap into state funding. We looked mainly at the physical needs of buildings for repairs and such. They're entirely different studies. You're not comparing apples and apples, you're comparing apples and oranges."

Haddad agreed with Devine's assessment, saying that KFP had a much narrower focus with its report than do Strekalovsky and Hoit. Much of their study centered on helping the schools to meet stan-

Feral cat protectors must have a plan

Health board wants details next week

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The feral cat population on James Lane is going to stay at least another week.

At its Tuesday meeting, the health board gave a group of concerned cat lovers until next Wednesday to come up with a plan to trap, treat and house the animals for 30 days.

The board is responding to complaints from the neighborhood that the feral cat colony is causing property damage and is creating odor and nuisance problems.

The health board wants to rid the neighborhood of estimated 20 feral cats as soon as possible to provide a cooling off period until a long-term solution to be found.

The board will address the issue again Wednesday (Nov. 3) at 8:30 p.m.

"The feral cats are contaminating gardens, living under porches," said Jack Creighton, 20 James Lane. "Their odor and cat droppings have caused discomfort among residents."

But Creighton added he and most of the neighbors don't want the animals to be put to sleep.

"But they need to be removed and removed quickly," he said.

Several women in attendance said the colony needs to be managed and that euthanasia should not be an option.

"We're on the same page in terms of wanting to solve the problem," said Gail Whitehouse, 17 Ash St. "They've been there for 17 years and no magic wand will make the problem go away quickly.

"We want the neighbors to come together on this issue and not have growing animosity over the problem. Cats have not caused the problem, people have."

Whitehouse said feral cat colonies include unwanted, neglected pets. Male house cats that haven't been neutered also contribute to the problem by impregnating female feral cats.

"Euthanasia is inhumane and ineffective," she said. "It's been tried many times and the cats come back."

Whitehouse and Elsa Miller, 60 Reservoir Road, are leading a group of enthusiasts who want to "manage" the colony by neutering and spaying the cats and returning them to the area. A managed colony is limited in number because the cats which are territorial won't let other cats in. The women have persuaded the neighbor who has fed the cats to stop and would move the "feeding station" away from the houses. They would also like to create a shelter in the woods in an old well house that belongs to the water department as a place for the cats to congregate.

During the past three years, at least 30 people in Massachusetts have died of heroin overdoses and 206 others survived the drug because they were reached in time with a life-saving drug called Narcan, according to a study released this month by local, state and federal officials.

"We knew heroin kills but we didn't know that's it's happening at such an alarming rate," said U.S. Attorney Donald Stern, who released the study. Heroin doesn't just plague the inner city — it has arrived here on the South Shore as it has become cheaper, purer and easier to take.

Today we present you with an in-depth look at the drug and its consequences in a special report. See page 17

New middle school format a possibility

School committee likely to vote for 6-8 configuration

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Parents of children in the Osgood and Deer Hill elementary schools will soon find out where their kids might be headed when they reach the sixth grade.

The school committee was set to vote last night after the Mariner went to press on the school renovation option which it would bring before the Special Town Meeting on Dec.6. Based upon the advice of the town's educational leaders, the school committee said last week it preferred the option which would move the sixth grade from Deer Hill to Cohasset Middle High School and move the third grade from Osgood to Deer Hill. Those moves would create the grade 6-8 middle school that the town's school administrators prefer.

"It's very likely that the school committee will vote for the 6-8 middle school grade configuration," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo at last Wednesday's joint meeting with the school facilities committee.

At the special town meeting, the school committee will seek to secure a two-thirds majority for the appropriation of $1.3 million, which will pay for detailed architectural drawings of the chosen renovation option.The appropriation would then be contingent upon the result of a debt-exclusion override election to be held Dec.11. Only a simple majority is needed to pass the override at that election.

The option which would move grades 6-8 to the middle high school is the most expensive of the two options still on the table that would be eligible for state reimbursement. It would cost $24.4 million with a cost to Cohasset of $16.2 million after the 60 percent state reimbursement is figured in.

Additional new construction would be needed to increase the size of the middle school wing should the sixth grade be moved from Deer Hill. Without that added new construction at the middle high school, the cost to Cohasset of similar renovations is estimated to be $15 million.

Many at the meeting said they had heard concerns from parents that sixth-graders were too young to be exposed to high school students. Architect Gene Raymond of Strekalovsky and Hoit said that the plans for a renovated middle high school include measures to ensure separateness between high school and middle school students .

"The middle school and high school are already on different bell schedules, which keeps the students very separate as it is," Raymond said. "We've pulled music out of the middle school wing in our plan, which will keep high school students away from the middle school

Voter registration times detailed

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or election day may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Meeting on Monday, Dec. 6, is Friday, Nov. 26, and the last day to register to vote for the Special Town Election on Saturday, Dec. 11, is Saturday, Nov. 20. On both dates the Clerk's office will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before the respective cut off dates.

Sunday hours for package stores

As they have in previous years, selectmen approved the opening of package stores for business on Sundays during the upcoming holiday season. The state allows package stores to be open on the Sunday before Thanksgiving and each Sunday thereafter until New Year's Day, but only with the approval of the local licensing authority (the Board of Selectmen) in each community.

Packages stores will be open from noon until 9 p.m. on Sundays. Employees must be paid time and a half for Sunday work and refusal to work on a Sunday may not be grounds for discrimination, dismissal, reduction of hours, or any other penalty.

Hagerty Park in permitting process

An individual permit for the Hagerty Park project will likely be needed from the Army Corps of Engineers, which could add two months to the permitting process.

Engineering consultant John Modzelewski said he is not all that concerned about the Army Corps request, because he knows the project is a high priority to them.

"This permit is not that much more involved than a state permit would be," he said in a phone interview. "I know that everyone at the Army Corps wants to hop on it as soon as possible."

Town Manager Mark Haddad also seemed confident about the permitting process.

"They've said they're going to work with us," Haddad said about the Army Corps.

The proposed park would include a 110-foot elevated walkway across the salt marsh that would connect to Government Island, a small grassy picnic area, and a parking lot.

School tours slated for Saturday

Members of the Board of Selectmen and the advisory committee will take a tour of Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle High School on Saturday afternoon to see for themselves the disrepair which has been reported by architects and school administrators.

"It's critical that everyone involved in making decisions regarding the school renovation get into these facilities and see them," said school facilities committee chairman Rob Spofford.

School committee members gave anecdotal evidence of the dilapidated state of the schools.

"I know of visiting sports coaches who won't let their teams use the locker rooms," school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said. "They go and find a classroom to change in or change in the hallways."

"I had a student tell me that the kids couldn't do a science experiment in October because the organisms they were supposed to be working on had frozen. The heating and ventilation systems are terrible."

Cohasset's John Atkinson leads Marine Corps flood relief effort

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WIRTER

Even the most technologically advanced nation on Earth is no match for the fury of an ornery Mother Nature. That much was proven when Hurricane Floyd battered the coastline of eastern North Carolina on Sept. 16, leaving complete devastation in its wake.

There have been 42 confirmed deaths as a result of the storm in North Carolina alone. Even in mid-October, a month after the vicious storm rampaged up the East Coast, more than 2,000 people remain in shelters in the state. Schools are expected to be closed for another month and the overall financial losses in the Tar Heel state are expected to reach $6 billion.

Capt. John Atkinson in his Marine dress blue uniform.

"The damage was as bad as I've seen anywhere in the world," said Marine Corps Captain and Cohasset native John Atkinson, who headed up a relief effort in Burgaw, North Carolina, a coastal town about 40 miles northeast of Wilmington. His primary objective in that effort was to rescue those trapped by flood waters which rose rapidly in the storm's aftermath. Atkinson was the commander of Task Force Gator, a week-long mission in which Marines used amphibious assault vehicles to reach those surrounded by flood waters.

"The water was eight to ten feet high in some spots," Atkinson explained. "In other spots, however, the water would drop off and the local authorities couldn't maneuver their boats over the land. Our vehicles have the capability to go both on land or in water. We could get to places they couldn't."

Atkinson's normal role is as commanding officer of an assault amphibian company in Camp LeJeune, North Carolina. He has more than 200 Marines under his command as well as 46 Assault Amphibian Vehicles, with their weapons and specialized gear. He said those vehicles encountered some unusual obstacles as they negotiated the flood waters.

"The water was rooftop-high in many areas, which made it pretty dangerous because there were some houses and cars completely submerged," he said. "There were tens of thousands of pigs and hundreds of thousands of turkeys floating in the water. There was raw sewage and downed power lines in the water as well."

Task Force Gator was able to rescue 15 people from their watery imprisonments, but Atkinson said it was not always easy for people to say goodbye to their homes.

"A lot of people didn't understand the gravity of the situation," he said. "They were clinging to whatever parts of their life that were left, which is understandable. At the same time, though, there was eight to ten feet of rushing water all around them."

Atkinson said he was happy to be able to aid a relief effort in his own country, as much of the work that he has done in his career in the Marine Corps has been outside our borders.

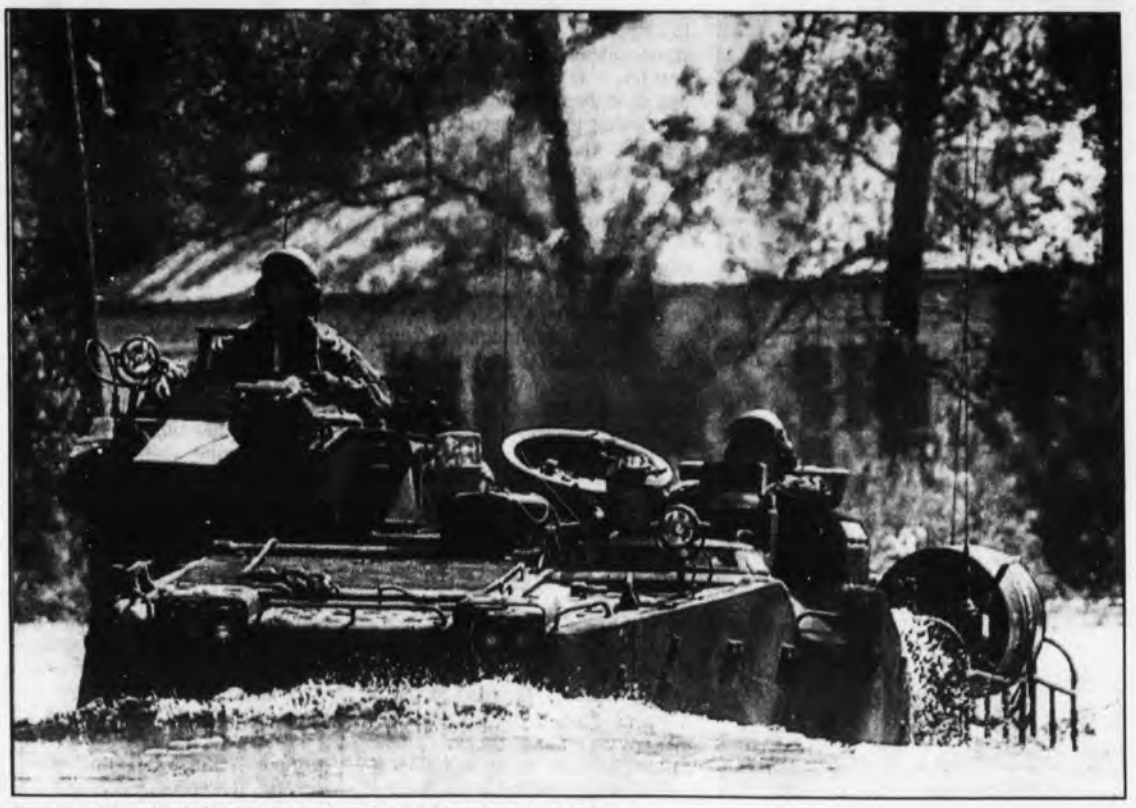
"It was nice to be able to help out some of our fellow Americans who don't always see what we do," he said. "We took this very seriously. We treated it like a real-world combat expedition."

Many of Atkinson's other missions have taken him to parts of the world he could have scarcely imagined while growing up in Cohasset.

One of his deployments was a six-month float off the coast of Bosnia in 1996. Capt. Atkinson was a member of the 26th Marine Expeditionary Unit, which supported troops that were enforcing the turbulent peace in that unstable region.

His mother, Marian Atkinson, said his dangerous missions overseas have helped her to build a closeness with his wife, Heather.

"Anytime John is overseas and possibly in danger, it's extremely heart-wrenching," she said. "Those times have helped me build a very strong bond with my daughter-in-law. I know she's feeling the same things I'm feeling."



Marines navigate North Carolina flood waters in amphibious assault vehicles.

Marian and her husband, Thomas, went to Camp LeJeune in 1994 to watch John depart for west Africa, where he was part of an operation to evacuate the American embassy during a military coup d'etat in the Gambia which overthrew the regime of then-president Dawda Jawara.

In addition to those missions, Atkinson has also been deployed to corners of the world such as Central and South America, North Africa, Europe, and the Middle East.

"We're always up to the challenge of showing the flag, and are ready to help wherever we can in the world," Atkinson said.

Marian said that John has shown that patriotic spirit for as long as she can remember.

"He wanted to be in the military from the time he was about three years old," she said of her son, who is the fifth-youngest of her seven children. "I think he was born with red, white and blue-striped blood."

Capt. Atkinson said his upbringing contributed to his career choice as much as any innate desire to serve his country.

"I was just raised in a very patriotic family," he said. "The values of the Marine Corps are ones that I wanted to live up to for as long as I can remember."

Indeed, Atkinson was not one of those who wandered through college in search of direction and inspiration. A 1988 graduate of Cohasset High School, he majored in political science at Boston College, but his sights were focused on a military career. While at BC, he went to marine Officer Candidate School and was commissioned as an officer upon his 1992 graduation.

He said his experiences are far removed from those he gained while growing up in Cohasset, but said he is thankful to have been raised here.

"It's a beautiful town, and I always miss New England a little bit," he said. "Especially this time of year, with the colors and the change of seasons. Of course, I miss my family and grandparents there as well. Although I think I was a little bit sheltered, I feel privileged and lucky to have grown up there."

While he sometimes longs for his hometown, he is proud of the experiences he has gained in the Corps and of the values with which he and his fellow Marines live their lives.

"We live in a little bit different world than most people do," he said. "The people I live with and work with every day measure success not by material possessions but by their performance in living up to the highest standards of honor, courage, and integrity. Every day, I trust these people with my life and they know they can do the same with me."

His mother said she misses all of her children dearly. Another son is in the secret service and her five daughters are spread throughout the country as well.

"Because of geographical distance, I can't see them as often as I'd like," she said. "We got everybody together for Christmas last year, but it's always quite an endeavor."

She said she misses John a little more these days because of the birth of his now one-year old daughter, Ashley. Even though she can't visit her granddaughter often, she said John and Heather often send footage of Ashley in action.

"They send videos of her growth and development to me as often as they can," she said. "I love seeing them. I'm so proud of the family and the career he has made."

Schools' rehab cost disparity reconciled

dards of the American Disabilities Act, with which they are still not in compliance. Handicapped-accessible bathrooms and elevators are among the needed modifications.

"KFP's charge was just to meet those ADA requirements and do basic infrastructure repairs," Haddad said.

To acquire state reimbursement of 60 percent for the school renovation projects, the school district must demonstrate that those renovations will sufficiently enhance the educational program or will serve to meet increased enrollments. In addition, the renovations will have to meet standards that will allow the buildings to have 50-year useful lives.

Two of the three school renovation options still on the table are projected to be 60 percent reimbursable by the state. With reimbursement, the cost of those options would be lowered to $15 million or $16 million.

Architect Gene Raymond of Strekalovsky and Hoit said the current cost projections contain many construction costs not contained in last year's KFP study.

"We've plugged in substantial numbers for project costs. We've included the cost of temporary classrooms, a clerk of the works [who oversees the project], and construction contingencies. We did everything as if it were going to be a state-reimbursed project."

Devine of KFP agreed with Raymond's contention that many of the costs listed in the current Strekalovsky and Hoit renovation estimates were absent in his firm's study last year.

"The big difference with our study is that we weren't looking at the 50 year time frame that they [Strekalovsky and Hoit] are," he said. "The state is investing its money for a long period of time. We projected our repairs to last ten years and we did more or less a grocery list of those repairs.

"When you go for state money, they'll require some upgrades that we wouldn't have looked into in areas like technology. We were supposed to help the schools to maintain what they have. Some upgrades may have been necessary but nothing like they're looking at to get state funding."

Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan noticed a major difference right away in the scope of the two studies when he began comparing them.

"In the KFP report, most of the Deer Hill roof was going to be repaired rather than replaced," he said. "These [current] plans involve a new roof."

Raymond of Strekalovsky and Hoit said that KFP's study was not deficient in any way, and in fact praised that firm's architects for their diligent work on the report. He noted, however, that cost estimates for that report will differ from the current estimates because the current project is of a greater scope.

"They [KFP] did a very detailed study on maintenance of the buildings," he said. "Their charge was to figure out what you'd have to do to keep the buildings running. But KFP's report didn't touch the existing piping because that's not what they were asked to do. Their report was just to keep the building going. We're looking at a project that will last the next 50 years. That involves replacing some things that might not need replacing right now, but will in the next 50 years."

Haddad said it is absolutely crucial for people in town to understand that project costs such as construction contingencies, a clerk of the works, and modular classrooms which have been factored in to the current projections are much of the reason for the cost disparity between the two reports.

"What I hear the [Strekalovsky and Hoit] architects saying is that $28 million is what it's going to cost to do $13 million worth of work," Haddad said. "We have to get that message out to the town."

A $1.3 million warrant to fund construction drawings for the school renovation project will be presented at the special town meeting on Dec. 6. Appropriation of that money will be contingent on an override election to be held on Dec. 11.

The override vote is necessit- because the cost of the drawings cannot be absorbed within the limits of Proposition 2 1/2, a state law which caps the amount a town can raise the tax levy in any given year.

David Chase, a member of the previous school facilities committee which worked on the Osgood Elementary School project, said that time is of the essence for members of the school committee and school facilities committee to explain the differences between the two reports to the people of the town.

"You'd better be prepared to answer these questions about the disparity in cost [between the Strekalovsky and Hoit and KFP report]. Trying to get the town of Cohasset together is like trying to herd cats. This town meeting vote is coming on like gangbusters."

New middle school format a possibility

Despite those assurances, some school committee members were wary that by pressing for a 6-8 grade configuration, they could be risking defeat at the ballot box.

"We're going to have a large contingent that we desperately need who might be afraid of sending sixth-graders up to the middle high school," said school committee member Stephanie Noble. "I've been playing out some of these scenarios in my mind and I'd hate to see us lose the override based on pushing for a 6-8 middle school.

"I don't see 6-8 or 7-8 as one of the burning issues of our time. I'd just hate to see these needed renovations be lost because of an issue I don't feel is so important."

Fellow school committee member Pat Martin admitted to being nervous about the possibility of an impending override election.

"There are some people who think that separateness between middle school and high school students can only be achieved with a new building," she said. "I guess I'm a little haunted by last year's override, where we stood by a budget that was high and got burned."

Others argued that the school committee has to do what they believe is best for the town from an educational standpoint and try to get that message across to voters.

"It's possible that you're misreading the situation," selectman Ronnie McMorris told Martin and Noble. "Do your research and tell us what is the best option for this town. It seems to me that the responsibility of the school committee is to lead this community educationally."

School facilities committee chairman Rob Spofford said that trying to ensure renovations at the expense of the educational needs of students is illogical.

"The building should not drive the program," Spofford said. "The school committee has to drive the program along with the administration."

School committee member Betsy Connolly said the committee has to take stock in the advice of the town's principals and Supt. Edward Malvey, who unanimously agreed that a 6-8 middle school best serves the educational needs of Cohasset students.

"We have to have faith in our educators, and I have complete confidence in their knowledge and experience," she said. "This town needs leadership in educational decisions. When do we make that statement?"

While acknowledging that she too would prefer a 6-8 middle school grade alignment, school committee member Kathy Oftshun said community input into the decision is essential.

"Because we need to involve people, we have to listen to what they have to say," she said.

DeGiacomo agreed that the school committee needs to involve people, but in a way that will solely explain the committee's position. He cautioned that the committee is not in a position to seek advice.

"We're telling people that this is the way we feel and this is why we feel that way," he said.

Malvey said he would accept whatever decision the town ultimately makes, but added that he would stick to his guns when added for a recommendation.

"I feel that a 6-8 middle school is the best for the developmental and educational needs of our students," he said. "I'm not going to back off on that."

In a presentation to the school committee and other town leaders last month, Malvey and other town educational leaders explained the merits of a 6-8 middle school configuration.

"In researching the developmental needs of sixth-graders, who are typically 11 years old, we found that they are more like seventh-graders than they are like fifth-graders," said K-12 curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey at that meeting. They're characterized as early adolescents, which means they're very social and like to work in groups. They like to explore subjects such as music and art and like to work together in foreign language, science, and computer labs. The middle school organization appeals to the young adolescent and the research I did shows that the sixth-grader belongs at a middle school."

Malvey said that Cohasset would be part of a national trend if it moved to a 6-8 middle school configuration.

"It's safe to say that a 6-8 format is the rule rather than the exception, especially from a perspective of age-appropriate development," he said.

School facilities committee member Adrienne McCarthy urged the school committee to follow the educators' advice.

"The educational program should be the same for grades 6-8, because that's how kids learn," she said. "I don't think you can make this decision with fear of failure."

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

$40K for computers

Selectmen agreed to recommend a warrant article at the Dec.6 special town meeting that would appropriate $40,000 for the purchase of computer hardware and software for use at Town Hall.

Included in the $40,000 are new computers for the town accountant, town clerk, and payroll department, as well as accounting software for both the school business office and town accountant. In addition, the assessors would get a digital video camera that would allow them to create a video database of all town properties.

Town accountant Michael Buckley said his ultimate goal would be to have all Town Hall information on a property be available on a single database.

"I'd like to have someone come in and say '38 Forest Ave.' and have everything right at their fingertips," he said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan thought the computer advances would be well worth the cost.

"It seems like we need these things," she said. "We have to streamline town government."

Town manager Haddad proposes a finance director

Town accountant would take on additional duties

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

In recent years, town financial departments all over Massachusetts have been faced with budgetary pressures due to complexities such as education reform and higher governmental accounting standards. Coupled with the recent turnover in the town's treasurer/collector's department, Town Manager Mark Haddad said the changes necessitate the creation of a director of finance

"What I'd like to do is similar to the DPW consolidation several years ago," Haddad explained to selectmen on Tuesday. "The town used to have separate highway, tree, park, cemetery, and refuse departments. These have now been consolidated under one department, headed by the DPW superintendent. It has worked very well and has allowed for shared resources and better accountability."

Haddad said a senior-level financial officer would help ensure similar accountability in the financial department. Currently, that department is made up of three individual departments: the treasurer/collector's department, the assessors' department, and the town accountant's department. The heads of those three departments each report to Haddad individually.

A finance director would be in charge of all three departments, allowing for flexibility to deal with turnover or the extended absence of an employee as well as allowing for shared resources. Haddad said the benefits of a finance director go beyond simply enhanced accountability within the finance department.

"During the course of our annual town audit, the auditor suggested that we evaluate the cost/benefit of appointing a senior-level financial officer," he said. "Right now, we rely too heavily on banks to do our reconciliation. Also, no one person has responsibility over our debt process. The director of finance would be responsible for those and we'll be better off. We might even be able to improve our already strong bond rating."

"Right now, we rely too heavily on banks to do our reconciliation. Also, no one person has responsibility over our debt process. The director of finance would be responsible for those and we'll be better off. We might even be able to improve our already strong bond rating."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

After hearing Haddad's proposal, selectmen were split on its merits.

"I think this is a great idea," said selectman Thomas Callahan. "We'd be modernizing and streamlining our finance department."

Fellow selectman Ronnie McMorris was less enthusiastic about the proposal. She said the change would put too much financial decision-making power in the hands of the town manager.

"This creates too much of a separation between the board of selectmen and the town manager," she said. "I think it's better to have an independent person who would look at the town's finances. We have to look into the future and, down the road, we might have a town manager who doesn't do as good a job as Mark does."

Haddad countered McMorris' argument by saying that it is the job of the town manager to be responsible to the board of selectmen.

"The town manager is the chief financial officer in the town and I need to maintain that appointing authority," he said. "It's my job to report to the Board of Selectmen."

Selectman Diane Sullivan couldn't understand what all the fuss was about.

"These are all town employees under Mark," she said. "This is just a reorganization."

Haddad would like to appoint current town accountant Michael Buckley to the position of director of finance. Buckley would still assume his current duties as town accountant. In fact, Haddad said he wouldn't attempt to hire a separate town accountant unless the town eventually gained control of the school department's finances.

"If we don't take on the schools, I'll never ask for another town accountant position," he said. "When we did the DPW consolidation, it was the ultimate goal to take over the maintenance of the schools, which it still is. But like the DPW consolidation, we need to establish this on the town side first. We need to have our ducks in a row before we'd be prepared to take on the schools."

Haddad suggested that a $3,000 raise for Buckley for the rest of this fiscal year be added to the warrant for the special town meeting on Dec.6. Regardless of that appropriation, the creation of a director of finance must be approved by the town because it requires a bylaw change.

Some selectmen were wary of the salary jump, which would increase Buckley's yearly salary form $62,000 to $67,500.

"I'd be prepared to vote to recommend this right now without the salary increase," selectman Merle Brown told Haddad. "The town seems to be in good financial shape and I don't see the need for $3,000 to increase a salary when there aren't major problems here."

Callahan suggested to Haddad that he consider creating the position without a salary increase until the annual town meeting in March.

"I would like to compensate Michael for the added responsibility, but I don't want salary to hold this up," Haddad said.

Selectmen couldn't come to a decision on whether to recommend the article for the special town meeting, as they were divided on the questions of salary and appointing authority of the position. Brown said they would revisit the issue at next week's meeting.

Selectmen recommend $10K feasibility study

Improvements to fire and police stations will be examined

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

It seems that improvements are being looked into for virtually every capital building in Cohasset. The new Osgood school was opened last year and its former home will potentially be the site of a new town library. Renovation projects for the Deer Hill and middle high schools are being studied by countless committees and architects, at costs ranging from $28 million to $41 million.

Meanwhile, many of the town's police officers and firefighters work in glorified offices which are actually converted broom closets. Police chief Brian Noonan and fire chief Roger Lincoln appeared before selectmen on Tuesday to request a $10,000 feasibility study that would look into ways to improve the current situation.

Noonan was only too happy to provide selectmen with pictures and anecdotal evidence to demonstrate the lack of space at the police station.

"We've got three people assigned to the cellar," he said. "The animal control officer, the PALS officer, who works with the schools, and the safety officer are all down there. We have two people assigned to the 911 equipment room, which is 10 feet long and only 5 1/2 feet wide. Officers have to eat in the conference room, which is also used for interviews and bailing prisoners. We are totally out of room."

"It's unfair to make people work in these conditions. The need is immediate."
— Police chief Brian Noonan

Without going into similar specifics, Lincoln indicated that the fire department must deal with a similar lack of space on a daily basis.

"The fire station was constructed in 1962 and was designed for 10 firefighters," he said. "We now have 20 firefighters in the same amount of space."

Town Manager Mark Haddad reminded selectmen that the number of firefighters will increase even more if the town authorizes $100,000 for the cost of four new firefighter/paramedics at the Dec. 6 special town meeting. That article has been recommended by selectmen.

"We'd have 24 firefighters in that building if the article passes the special town meeting," Haddad said.

Selectmen Merle Brown said he sympathized with the plight of officers in both departments, but said he would hesitate to spend $10,000 on a study to improve the police and fire stations until it is known for certain what will happen with the old Osgood school.

"I know these buildings are crowded," Brown said, "but we still don't know what will happen to the school up on Ripley Road."

Noonan argued that his officers don't have the time to wait until final plans for the use of the old Osgood school are resolved.

"It's unfair to make people work in these conditions," he said. "The need is immediate. It's a great are up there [Osgood] but even if the town wanted to use any or all of it as the new town police station, it would be a major construction project. We need to do something now."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris agreed with Noonan regarding the immediate need of the officers in both departments.

"We've ignored these two buildings while we've been looking at the schools and the library," she said. "These are deplorable working conditions and it seems to me that we have an immediate issue here that needs attention now."

Noonan said the feasibility study would look into the cost of putting an addition on to the police station.

"We're looking to add an addition to the police dispatch area that would ultimately serve as a communications center for both the police and fire departments," Noonan said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen that the $10,000 for the feasibility study would be money well spent.

"This is a good use of money in the short-term to make long-term plans," Haddad said.

Selectmen ultimately agreed with that assessment and will recommend the article at the Dec. 6 special town meeting.

"I think we need more information about what can be done to improve the situation," said selectman Fred Koed. "This money will give us that information."

AROUND TOWN

HATS OFF TO ROCKY

Kudos go to Rocco Laugelle this week; we are ever-so proud of him! Rocky has been named vice president of the Norfolk County Selectmen's Association, a group that is made up of all past and present selectmen from Norfolk County towns.

As Cohasset's selectman for 15 years, Rocky did an admirable job, so we know that they have the best there is!

Congratulations, Rocky!

SOMETHING SPECIAL FOR YOUNGSTERS

The South Shore Community Center has something truly unique to offer for ages Pre-K through grade 5 entitled "Coyote, Crow and Buffalo." Storyteller/puppeteer Pat Spalding tells Native American tales and introduces her show with Nootka, an 8-foot talking totem pole. Both welcome their audience to the "Potlatch" and invite everyone in the audience to share in a sparkling celebration of stories. Audience volunteers don glittering masks and costumes to assist in animating several Native American tales:

The coyote thinks himself quite clever but is outsmarted by a tribe of sharp-witted mice; Crow sacrifices her colorful feathers to bring fire to the earth and finds that her courage shines through; Buffalo, Yellow Corn Girl, Grasshopper and Horned Toad all play a part in this spirited program of Native American folklore.

This wonderful Potlatch will be held Saturday, Nov. 6, in the gymnasium of the South Shore Community Center. The cost is $7 per person at the door; the length of the show is 45 minutes

Sounds great, doesn't it? For more information, call the center at 383-0088.

ALL DRESSED UP FOR HALLOWEEN

PHOTOS/FRED ROBERTSON

At left, Elizabeth Baker is all dressed up for the annual Halloween fair on the common sponsored by the South Shore Community Center Nursery School. At right, Tori Litchfield came the fair dressed as an M&M. Hundreds of Cohasset youngsters attended the annual event on Sunday.

FOOTBALL AT NOBLES

Noble and Greenough School has announced their fall varsity football team roster and Peter Roy is a member of the team! Peter is the son of Susan Roy of Hingham and Peter Roy of Cohasset

Good luck with your season, Peter, we'll be cheering for you!

NEW ARRIVAL

Brian and Jackie Noonan are smiling ever so largely again — the reason is Rebecca Ann Dobson, who was born Sept. 23 at South Shore Hospital. She weighed in at 8 pounds 8 ounces and was 20-1/4 inches long.

Rebecca is the daughter of Troy and Diane Dobson of Plymouth and the baby sister of Kassandra Dobson.

Needless to say, her other maternal grandmother, Kathleen Noonan, and her paternal grandparents David and Jackie Dobson are every bit as thrilled as the rest!

Congratulations to all of you!

VARSITY GIRLS' SOCCER

Here's some more Noble and Greenough news for you to share — Kristen O'Connell, daughter of Michael and Rosemary O'Connell from Cohasset, has made the varsity girls' soccer team. Last year's team was the 1998 New England Preparatory School Athletic Conference Class B Co-Champion and had a season record of 9-5-3.

Here's to a grand season Kristen!

BACKPACKING, CANOEING

We applaud Abigail Davis Kornet, a freshman at Connecticut College — Abigail strapped on a backpack and confronted the challenges of an intensive outdoor program — Connecticut's Outdoor Orientation Program. This program enabled her to travel through New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut, and to participate in still- and white-water canoeing, technical rock climbing, high and low rope course elements, backpacking and caving.

Abigail is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Kornet of 67 Gamons Rd.

COMMUNITY SERVICE

Robert Vanderpool, son of Geraldine and John Vanderpool, is a member of the MOVE (Mobilization of Volunteer Efforts) leadership team, the Saint Michael's College community service organization. Robert is a sophomore engineering major at Saint Michael's and a Cohasset High School graduate.

Robert is a coordinator for the Habitat for Humanity program. Through construction and fund-raising efforts, student volunteers work towards eliminating poverty housing from the local community.

We are extremely proud of you and your efforts, Robert!

HALLOWEEN CURFEW

Finally, a word to all of you trick-or-treaters — you have a curfew! As in the past few years, all of the young children have the hours of 4-8 p.m. to gather up their goodies (more than enough time for most parents and grandparents to be knocking on doors, right?) So, go out early, be careful, then get home and start counting all of those Reeses!

The news of the week is done, hopefully you'll add your latest by giving me a call at 383-0560!

HAPPY HALLOWEEN!

If you hate cauliflower, you'll love this recipe

For the past few weeks cauliflower has been featured in all of the markets — it is so pretty, so fresh and oh-so-good for you! It is at the height of its season in the fall or winter and we are lucky!

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Look for firm, white compact flowerets without spots or bruises; crisp, green leaves.

Once you have found the perfect one, I hope that you will try this recipe — I promise you, even those who say they "hate cauliflower" will love this; the Swiss cheese sauce gives it an extra special taste!

CHRISTMAS CAULIFLOWER

1 large head cauliflower, broken into florets
1/4 diced green pepper
1 jar (7.3 ounces) sliced mushrooms, drained
1/4 cup butter or margarine
1/3 cup all-purpose flour
2 cups milk
1 cup (4 ounces) shredded Swiss cheese
2 tablespoons diced pimentos
1 teaspoon salt
Paprika optional

In a large saucepan, cook cauliflower in a small amount of water for 6-7 minutes or until crisp-tender; drain well. In a medium saucepan, sauté green pepper and mushrooms in butter for 2 minutes. Add flour; gradually stir in milk. Bring to a boil; boil for 2 minutes, stirring constantly Remove from heat; stir in cheese until melted. Add pimento and salt. Place half of the cauliflower in a greased 2-qt. baking dish; top with half of the sauce. Repeat layers. Bake, uncovered at 325 degrees for 25 minutes or until bubbly. Sprinkle with paprika if desired.

This recipe is supposed to serve eight to 10 people, but it goes so fast that I would say more like six to eight!

Hope that your family enjoys it as much as our family and friends do!

A reminder about Halloween safety

Chief Brian W. Noonan, Safety Officer Rick Yocum of the Cohasset Police Department, the drug & alcohol committee and the PSO remind Cohasset citizens that Sunday, Oct. 31, is Halloween.

According to Chief Noonan, every year there is the potential for a child to be struck by a motor vehicle as they are pursuing trick or treat fun. The children may get excited about Halloween and not observe the safety rules. Motorists are warned to be especially alert and careful on Halloween night.

The hours for "Trick or Treating," on Sunday, Oct. 31, in Cohasset are from 4 to 8 p.m. Chief Noonan and Officer Yocum recommend the following guidelines be followed.

- Younger children should be accompanied by a parent or older person.
- Children should stay in their own neighborhood.
- They should not cross the street between parked cars. Children should visit the houses on one side of the street and then cross at the corner to the other side.
- Avoid long dragging costumes and high heel shoes as they may cause falls. Flimsy materials and outfits with big, baggy sleeves or billowing skirts are to be avoided to minimize the risk of contact with candles or other sources of ignition.
- Makeup or painted faces are preferred to masks which may reduce visibility or make sure the mask eye holes are oversized. Costumes, masks, beards and wigs should be "flame resistant" or "flame retardant." Hats should be tied securely to prevent them from slipping over children's eyes. Make sure their vision is adequate.
- Costumes should have reflective tape strips on front and back to make them more visible to drivers. Trick or treat bags may be taped as well.
- All face paints, glues and glitters used should be non-toxic. Beware of allergic reactions. Read the ingredients statement.
- Children should travel in groups and at least one person should carry a flashlight.
- Trick-or-treaters should not eat any treats until they get home and their parents check them.
- Parents should disregard any treats that are not wrapped or have torn wrappers.
- Residents should leave outside lights on so that children can see where they are walking.
- Greet children at the door. Do not encourage them to come inside. Tell children they are to decline invitations to enter homes.
- Remove obstacles from steps, sidewalks and lawn, so children will not trip on them.
- Give children flashlights to carry. Never candles.
- Costume accessories such as swords, knives etc. should be pliable and have no sharp points.
- Warn children not to cut through yards, empty lots or deserted areas.
- Parents with small children should encourage home parties and celebrations in place of trick or treating.
- All fruit should be washed and cut open to check for foreign objects before eating. Any suspicious treats or harmful objects should be reported to the police immediately.
- Parents are reminded that the telephone number for the Massachusetts Poison Information Center is (800) 682-9211.
- Most importantly, especially for children who may be too old for trick-or-treating, parents should have a discussion with their children about respecting other people's property.

Following these guidelines should ensure you have a safe and Happy Halloween!

Daylight Saving Time

Just in time for Halloween, Sunday morning the clock "falls back" an hour and we say goodbye to Daylight Saving Time until spring.

It's a good idea to turn your clocks back an hour before you "turn in" on Saturday night, so you won't forget. We wouldn't want to get to church or other event an hour early! And you'll also want to take advantage of that "extra" hour of sleep that you lost last spring when Daylight Saving Time began.

Cohasset Trucks with Character

Fifth in a series of what makes Cohasset unique

You can often find Larry Shultz and his 1979 Ford around the school soccer fields. It has been used for transporting supplies for the South Shore Soccer Camp for the past ten years or so. Before that, the truck served as work horse for the prestigous construction company Lar-Ken until Larry bought the truck from his partner for, some say, small money and some baseball trading cards. Linda Shultz seems to get along quite well with the truck since it was she who sent us the picture.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Health Fair/Open House support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of Cohasset Elder Affairs and The South Shore Community Center, we would like to thank the following individuals and organizations for their continuing support and offer appreciative thanks for helping to make our First Open House/Wellness Fair a great success.

It is such a pleasure to look back on that Saturday and reflect on the beautiful weather and great attendance. Everyone enjoyed the wide range of activities from face painting and fire engines to the hot dogs and chowder, and commented on how much fun they had.

It was a fantastic day with hundreds of families from surrounding communities attending, and a great way to kick off the fall season!

We would like to thank the following individuals and organizations for their contributions:

Cohasset Fire Dept., Cohasset Police Dept., Glenn Pratt for the Antique Fire Truck, Dunkin' Donuts, Stop & Shop Corp., Smart Toys, Peter and Leah Roy, Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, Precious Petals and Lightkeepers Corporation.

And to all the other wonderful volunteers and contributors, too numerous to list, we say a big "Thank you" for all your time and effort in making this day so successful. We look forward to our next Open House.

Scituate 'cells out' its citizens

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to inform the citizens of Scituate and neighboring Cohasset that the Town of Scituate Planning Board has granted the special permit to allow a 196 ft. cell tower on 3A near the border of Scituate and Cohasset. This was the result of a federal court judgement dated Sept. 28, 1999 ordering the town to grant the special permit based upon the town's failure to properly explain its denial.

The selectmen and planning board have allowed this to happen, as they are unwilling to defend the planning board's original denial in June 1999.

To put this issue in perspective, this is not a case of "we don't want a tower in our backyard", but rather a logical choice of "where to put the tower". There are two choices before the community to place the cell tower:

1. On Property owned by Mark Winchester (located across the street from The Jack Conway Real Estate Office). This property borders a residential neighborhood consisting of approximately 50+homes.

2. The other property is the Scituate Rod & Gun Club who has 20+ acres to put the tower on.

For several reasons, logic would conclude that the 196 ft. tower would be located with the least minimal impact to the community that Scituate Town By-Laws require. Obviously, this location would be the Rod & Gun club as it would be hidden within 20+ acres.

Unfortunately, this logic does not prevail in the minds of the Scituate selectmen, town manager, town counsel, and the three members of the planning board who voted to approve the tower on Winchester's property.

With the tower located on the Rod & Gun Club property, little if any resident homes will be impacted with no visible siting from Rt. 3A. Another added benefit to the town of Scituate, would be the scholarships created by the revenue from the tower.

Citizens of Scituate still have a voice in deciding the location of the tower. They need to contact their town government and demand that town counsel petition the federal court to allow the town to decide through public hearing and vote on where to locate the tower. Remember, federal case law exists supporting towns faced with this same dilemma.

Unfortunately, if no appeal is filed by Nov. 5, our opportunity will be forever lost.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on two roll calls from House debate on a proposed $21 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. Following months of negotiations, the two branches have finally ironed out the differences in their versions of the budget. The final details of the new package are being worked on and a vote on it in the House and Senate is expected in a few days.
TEACHER PENSIONS(H 4400) House 148-0, approved an amendment adding two percent per year to the pension benefits of teachers for every year they serve beyond 24 years. The amendment also hikes the pension contributions of newly-hired teachers from 9 percent to 11 percent. Amendment supporters said this will allow more teachers to retire earlier and/or with the maximum 80 percent pension. They argued that under the current system, many teachers end up retiring with a small pension after many years of teaching our children. (A "Yea" vote is for the increased pensions). Although no representatives voted against the amendment, 52 of them had earlier voted to replace it with a study of the state's entire pension system (see next roll call).		Y
STUDY PENSION SYSTEM(H 4400) House 94-52, rejected an amendment to replace the proposal increasing teachers' pensions with a study of the state's entire pension system. Supporters of the study said the increased teacher pensions could cost the state millions of dollars and open the door to other public employees demanding the same benefits. They said an overall study is necessary prior to action on the proposal. Opponents of the study said it essentially kills the proposal and is unfair to teachers. They argued that the increased contributions of new teachers combined with the high rate of return on pension contributions will pay for the proposal without state funding. (A "Yea" vote is for the study. A "Nay" vote is against the study).		N
NOTES ON VOTES If a representative voted "present," he was present for the roll call vote but chose not to be recorded on it. Check with the legislator for his reason.

Just a little old-fashioned environmental justice

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As Chet Raymo wrote in his fascinating Boston Globe column "Science Musings" of Oct. 4, 1999, "Write Good Stories, Not Bad Laws," environmental education would be best served by our paying close attention to the world as a whole. "If we cultivate a prayerful attention to the world," he explains, "the stories make themselves heard.... Even atoms are stories we tell about the world." Raymo inspires us to believe that our observations can become meaningful stories. So this week it's time for a story of my own.

In the summers during my World War II adolescence, I attended Camp Burgess, the Quincy YMCA camp down in Sandwich, then a camp for boys only, where my dad was the activities director. Camp Burgess was fodder for lots of stories, lots of memories, but I recall one that is particularly relevant to this column.

It seems that at mail/store call, that high point of the day right after rest period when we all tore down to the camp store as fast as our moccasined feet would take us — moccasins we made for ourselves during arts and crafts. But actual mail was a side treat. The main attraction was our daily candy bar, obtainable by using one of the 5-cent slugs that the camp used for coinage in lieu of the real stuff. These were backed by our banked allowances duly registered by Karl Briggs, the very responsible worker-camper we all admired because he was old enough to drive the wondrous black Dodge camp truck.

Now the problem was, the massive littering that occurred when we feverishly unwrapped our Sky Bars or Charleston Chews or Milky Ways and blithely chucked the wrappers onto the pristine pine needles.

Now the problem was — can you guess it? — the massive littering that occurred when we feverishly unwrapped our Sky Bars or Charleston Chews or Milky Ways and blithely chucked the wrappers onto the pristine pine needles. Even with trash barrels nearby, the store area had been a regular disaster — but note the past perfect tense here.

One day my dad had a brainstorm [one of many as he was a most creative thinker]. From now on, any boy who observed another boy littering — and picked up the slob's discarded wrapper for him — could exchange that woebegone piece of litter for a free candy bar paid for out of the miscreant's account. The announcement was duly proclaimed and was deemed to be an exciting one indeed. The counselors stood by at mail/store call after that to enforce the new regulation. It not only worked, it created yet another high point of the day on top of an already high point.

In a camp where neatness was faithfully and bountifully rewarded — because of daily competition for neatest cabin and grounds — we were automatically attuned to doing our chores enthusiastically. We felt we had achieved an unbelievable prize when our cabin won inspection. We would then be given the whole day off from regular activities and instead were driven down to Hyannis in the camp truck and allowed to frolic on the fantastic salt-water beach, lunch provided, extra monetary allowance given for snacks. You can rest assured we had learned the habit of not littering.

See you next time.

Memorabilia collecting a costly hobby

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It's getting so that I'm afraid to throw anything away.

"Save that," I told my friend the other day as we sorted through the accumulated junk of a life time to see what could be thrown away. "It may be worth money someday."

"But it's only a hockey stick," she said, "and the blade is broken besides. Who wants a broken hockey stick?"

"You'd be surprised," I told her. "That's the stick I used to shut out the Quincy Point River Rats on Morrison's Pond in 1941. Collectors of sports memorabilia would kill to get something like that."

Think not?

Only the other day, the false dentures worn by baseball's Ty Cobb were auctioned off for $7,475 to Karen Shemonsky of Clark's Summit, Pa., a dentist's daughter who planned to start a museum.

"Maybe they'll start a hockey stick museum," said my friend, returning the stick, carefully as is its due, to a safe place under the eaves.

Only the other day, the false dentures worn by baseball's Ty Cobb were auctioned off for $7,475.

At the same auction at Sotheby's in New York, the place that sold Jackie O's belongings for $34.4 million, a glove once worn by Cy Young was sold for $71,250, including the buyers' premium.

The shirt off the back of the New York Yankees first baseman Lou Gehrig, worn in 1927, came off the block for $305,000 and a cap that Gehrig wore went for $151,000.

"A lot of the Boomers have more disposable income and they're buying things they remember," said William Sear of Atlanta, who spent $63,000 for a camera once owned by the old Sox catcher Moe Berg. "The stock market's been wonderful. Careers are in full swing."

They've got disposable income and they dispose of it in the darndest places on the darndest things.

Mel Gray Group, a firm in Edison, N.J., will be glad to sell you an Edmonton Oilers' hockey jersey actually worn by goaltender Grant Fuhr in the 1990 season for $3,995, sweat stains included.

Better hurry, though, because they've only got 31 of them. You can just see Fuhr changing jerseys between periods so they will have sufficient game-worn jerseys on hand. You'd hate to have to settle for an Andy Moog jersey for $1,995, wouldn't you?

The spending of huge sums on memorabilia got its start when the actor Charlie Sheene paid $92,000 for the baseball that went between Bill Buckner's leg in the 1986 World Series and the bidding for Mark McGwire's 70th home run ball last year that reached $3 million.

But the expensive hunt for memorabilia isn't confined to sports, either.

A week after the auction at Sotheby's, more than 2,000 objects once owned by Elvis Presley went under the auctioneer's hammer at the MGM Grand Hotel in, (where else?) Las Vegas..

The King's army uniform was expected to go for $80,000, his sixth grade report card for $20,000, two cases of bottled water for $15,000 and a signed Texaco credit card for $10,000.

Anyone know of a hockey stick museum that needs a goalie's stick with a broken blade?

Remembering the '80s at the Red Lion Inn

GUEST COLUMNIST

SAL GIARRATANI

Back in the early '80s I thought Weymouth was down by the Bourne Bridge, so you could just imagine where I thought Cohasset Village was on the map, eh? Hey, I had a good excuse, when you're over in Charlestown, anything across the Neponset Bridge is on the other side of the moon.

As I read the news on the renovations taking place at the Red Lion Inn down in Cohasset Village, at first from the headline, I thought it was good news. However, as I read on, I saw that it seemed as if it were going upscale, and upscale doesn't really sit well with this city boy.

I can still remember the first time I ate at the Red Lion Inn back in 1983. I was dating my future wife who lived on Brook Street, a stone's throw from the Red Lion Inn. It seemed such a beautiful restaurant filled with so much history dating back to the early 18th century. The food was always great, the folks who waited on us pleasant and courteous. The price was always right and they had great Irish coffee to boot.

My original stereotypes of folks who lived down the South Shore in places like Hingham Square and Cohasset Village were dispelled. Folks in Cohasset were no different than folks in Charlestown. I enjoyed making those long trips after work on Fridays for romantic dinners at the inn.

Once I remember trying another nearby French restaurant tucked away in a narrow alleyway. We ordered salmon and a team of 15 waiters rolled a cart over to our table carrying a 50-pound salmon. One waiter cut two slivers off it and placed it on my plate. Another waiter asked if I wanted green peas. I said yes and he gave me seven, yeah, that's right, seven peas. It was the one and only encounter with that restaurant. Nothing worse than condescending waiters and a silly pretentious attitude and bringing your Brinks truck along for the bill.

As I read the Red Lion Inn story, I became more and more nervous. The owner of the inn reportedly lives in Cohasset in July and August. The rest of the time his home is on the French Riviera or his yacht down in the Caribbean.

I grew up in Roxbury as a boy in the '50s. I lived in Charlestown from the '60s through the mid-'80s when I married and moved to Quincy. I have to be careful of not dissing people because of their money or my lack of it. Remembering jealousy is one of the seven deadly sins. However, my bottom line? I hope that the Red Lion Inn of the next millennium resembles the Red Lion Inn I discovered back in 1983. I would hate to know they plan to serve slivers of salmon... or counting their green peas.

Cohasset Village deserves a renovated Red Lion Inn but if it's too ostentatious, it will leave a bad taste in my mouth. The village is a beautiful spot. Real people live and shop there. I enjoyed those long trips from Main Street in Charlestown to South Main Street in Cohasset. Though miles apart, it never felt alien to me.

Citizens intervene in CHL landfill appeal of ZBA decision

Nine Cohasset residents have been accepted as intervenors in the pending appeal in the state Appeals Court by the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill of the Zoning Board of Appeals' 1998 ruling that the landfill's special permit was invalid.

"We have intervened to support the ZBA's decision and to ensure that the Town vigorously defends the ZBA decision," said John K. McNabb Jr., one of the intervenors. "The invalidity of the special permit was discovered by the citizens, not by the Town, so we deserve a role in defending the ZBA's decision against this appeal by CHL."

On Jan. 13, 1998, after McNabb discovered that the special permit had not been recorded in the Registry of Deeds as required by law, he and other Cohasset residents filed a complaint with the Building Inspector asking him to order the landfill to close because, without the required recording, the special permit was invalid. On Jan. 26, 1998, the building inspector ordered CHL to cease and desist operations.

CHL stayed open in defiance of the cease and desist order until July 2, 1998, when the landfill closed down because it reached its maximum permitted height (and because its vertical expansion application was denied because of the illegal dumping by CHL in Area IV-B, outside its site assigned area.) In a settlement with CHL, the Town received a $25,000 payment in lieu of a fine and in exchange for dismissing a criminal complaint filed by the Town for violation of the order.

CHL appealed to the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) which, after a hearing, upheld the cease and desist order on April 13, 1998. CHL appealed to the state Land Court, which on Feb. 18, 1999 upheld the ZBA decision. CHL then appealed to the state Appeals Court.

The intervenors are: John K. McNabb Jr., Kevin F. O'Donnell, Linda Keller, Mary O. Kelly, James C. Kinch, Peter G. Whittemore, Peter J. Pratt, William S. Hodgson and Margaret Chapman.

Editor's note: This is a press release from Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), a group opposed to the expansion of CHL.

SCARING UP A CROWD

The annual Halloween Fair on the town common attracted hundreds of youngsters and their families. The annual event is sponsored by the South Shore Community Center Nursery School.

Selectmen want to hear from you

Selectmen could not come to a decision Tuesday night on whether to recommend a citizens' petition article at the special town meeting which would allow businesses in town to open at 6 a.m.

As they debated the merits of the project, they came to the conclusion that they would like to hear the opinions of residents on the matter. The proposed bylaw change would allow businesses to open an hour earlier than is currently mandated under the town bylaws.

To contact the Board of selectmen with an opinion on the subject, call 383-4105.

A small engraving on the back of the memorial features an artist's rendering of the lighthouse crashing into the sea.

A smiling Jason, who just suffered a stroke three weeks ago, said that he felt a great deal of fulfillment as he watched his dream start to become reality.

"I'm so excited that this is really happening," he said. "I really started thinking seriously about this three years ago. I started with the idea of a bronze plaque, but that didn't seem sufficient to remember these two boys. I wanted something really special because these two boys were really special."

The polished black stone which serves as the focal point of the memorial was imported from India and cost roughly $20,000, according to Jason. It sits on a 2,000 pound circle of gray granite. Those stones sit in the middle of what will be a 12-foot diameter, circular compass rose.

"I'm so excited that this is really happening. I really started thinking seriously about this three years ago. I started with the idea of a bronze plaque, but that didn't seem sufficient to remember these two boys. I wanted something really special because these two boys were really special."

— Herb Jason

The letters N, S, E, and W on the compass rose will be made of polished black granite, while the letters NE, SW, SE, and NW will be fashioned from Canadian granite, which Small described as "gray with a pink hue to it." Diamonds of polished gray will sit in between the directional symbols.

Jason said that the compass itself will be fashioned out of expensive, tapestry brick and that the masonry work will be done by Anthony "Scout" Barbuto of Hingham.

"He's working on the bricks right now," Jason said. "They're going to be individually cut and fitted. It's going to be beautiful."

Jason's attention to detail regarding the project has been nothing short of extraordinary. He said he has spent hundreds of hours visiting quarries and doing drawings along with his brother, Kenneth Jason. And his grandson, John Small.

"If you want something done well, you have to do it the right way," he said. "We want this memorial to last forever."

L-R, George LaForest, Bill Donovan and Paul Hansen from W.D. Canniff and Sons in Quincy install the memorial to lightkeepers Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson on Government Island on Tuesday.

That passion for the project was demonstrated to W.C. Canniff and Sons sales representative Leo Cardarelli, whose company specializes in custom monuments.

"I always get people who come in and have tons of ideas for a project and then you never see them again," Cardarelli said. "I passed Herb off as one of those people when I met him for the first time. Even the second time he came in, I didn't really believe he was serious. The third time, he came in with all kinds of drawings and ideas and I thought I'd better start taking this guy seriously."

Jason said many have told him that he should include his own name on the memorial somewhere, as he was the driving force behind constructing it. He dismisses such talk, preferring to divert attention to Antoine and Wilson.

"I don't want my name anywhere on the memorial," he said. "Those two boys are the ones who gave their lives."

While he's not sure when the compass rose surrounding the engraved granite will be completed, Jason is already thinking about the dedication ceremony that will forever ensure the legacy of Antoine and Wilson.

"I can't wait for that day," he said. "The selectmen and [Town Manager] Mark Haddad have been supported this project 100 percent and I hope they come when it's finished. It's really going to be something when it's done."

Feral cat protectors must have a plan

"If the board gives us the go ahead, we're willing to give our time," Whitehouse said.

Theresa Buffum, president of the Daisy Humane Society in Rockland said the society has available space in one of its two mobile homes.

"I'm here as a last resort person," she said. "If you can't reconcile the problem, I would step in and rescue the animals.

"But I advocate the management program and I urge you to adopt it," Buffum said. "If you decide to go the kill route, I'm here to go the life route."

But Buffum added she would need $200-$300 a cat and would ask for Cohasset donations. She also said the Rockland board of health is concerned that Cohasset cats might take up shelter spaces for Rockland's feral cats. But that issue fades when life hangs in the balance, she said.

"Compassion knows no boundaries," Buffum said, adding that perhaps the Daisy Humane Society could work "in a joint venture" with the Cohasset group.

Miller said the group needs traps, funds and a place to house the cats. She suggested locating a cat shelter at the town dump off Cedar Street that she would be willing to direct and maintain.

But animal control officer Paul Murphy said DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield was "not warm to that proposal."

The health board said the group needed a plan and a budget by next week.

Creighton, who is a cat owner, urged the health board to keep after the problem.

"It's a public health problem that's not going away and can't be ignored," he said.

Lighthouse frights

Expert brings haunting tales to Scituate's Maritime museum

By Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITER

Lighthouses are mysterious and romantic. They can also be terrifying.

Imagine a new keeper who brings his young wife to the live at a lighthouse. There is no female company for her to keep, so the woman begins to get depressed and very lonely. To cheer her, her husband brings to the lighthouse, at great difficulty, a piano. She begins to play. The trouble is, she knows only one song.

She plays and plays until the keeper is about to lose his mind. He pleads with his wife to stop, but she won't. Hour after hour, day by day, she plays the same song until her husband can take it no longer.

Can you guess what happened?

On Sunday, lighthouse expert Doug Bingham will fill you in on this tale and dozens of other frightening stories concerning haunted lighthouses all over the country.

In his story of the ill-fated light keeper's wife at Seguin's Island, just two miles from Maine's Kennebec River, Bingham explains that no trace was ever found of the piano or the woman. Nothing was recorded in the log book. Years later, Bingham recounts two coastguard men staying at the lighthouse to gather what belongings are left there get spooked out of the lighthouse in the middle of the night when both bedroom doors are flung open and a man hollers at them. "Get out of my house and leave my belongings alone." According to Bingham, following the scare the two spent the rest of the night outside waiting for the morning boat to take them away.

Bingham, who co-founded the American Lighthouse Foundation, has been fascinated by lighthouses since the decade he spent living in South Carolina from 1978 to 1988.

"That's where it all really began," he said.

Bingham said he was enthralled by stories of friends whose fathers had been keepers. The state also has his favorite lighthouse in Charleston where the Massachusetts 54th regiment was slaughtered during the Civil War.

He said it's perfectly understandable why lighthouses evoke feelings of mystery and why they are a great setting for ghosts.

"It's a perfect environment for something like that to happen, for people's imaginations," he said. This is especially true of cast iron lighthouses which not only creak from the wind and waves but vibrate.

It was just such a lighthouse on Minot ledge that killed two assistant keepers when it toppled into the ocean during a terrible storm in April of 1851.

"There was an assistant keeper that was driven to madness from the incessant pounding of the waves," Bingham said. All that could be heard was the boom of the waves as they crashed over the lighthouse. "Hour after hour, the tower became coated with ice," and no relief crews were able to reach the men. Out of desperation one of the men flung the doors open and leapt out into the storm. To this day, the legend goes, during a storm or fog, there is an apparition of a man clinging to the ladder of the rebuilt stone lighthouse that stands today warning people away.

No one knows if it is Joseph Antoine or Joseph Wilson, the two assistant keepers who were killed when the lighthouse succumbed to the waves, Bingham said.

While the legends are thrilling to hear, even their teller is skeptical about some of them.

"I'm not really superstitious but I think there's something to the afterlife. I'd like to think there is an after life," Bingham said.

"I find it fascinating," said Bingham who lectures about lighthouses five to six times a year.

Although the ghost stories may be unnerving, the true stories can be truly terrifying, Bingham said.

"They aren't all ghost stories but there's a lot of fascinating things that happen," he said. This includes the wreck of the Mary O'Hara 10 miles east of Boston in January, 1941. As the boat sank, 24 crew members climbed the rigging to stay safe. Of those, only five survived. "Nineteen froze to death on the rigging," said Bingham. Because of the storm, fisherman and the lighthouse keeper could only look on in horror.

Lightkeepers were tightfisted when it came to running the lighthouse, often making the new man repeat the same duty over and over until he performed it exactly as the head lightkeeper did when he was a recruit. Many times "personality disputes" erupted, said Bingham. Such was the case at a lighthouse off the coast of Connecticut where one man chased another man around the outside of the lighthouse with a butcher knife until he grew tired. Then the man with the knife went inside and locked the other out in the winter cold. Hours later the man, ice covered, was finally rescued when people on land noticed him.

Violence is not reserved for the men, however, as Bingham tells the story of Mrs. George Kezer who was determined she was not going back to the lighthouse buoy depot in Boston harbor. When the family traveled to the Adams hotel in Boston for business, Mrs. Kezer shot her son as he slept. Shortly after, Mr. Kezer returned to his duties and Mrs. Kezer was confined to a sanitarium for a couple of years, said Bingham.

Although being isolated on an island for weeks or months at a time could lead to insanity, for many people lighthouses are alluring and romantic, Bingham notes.

"To a mariner after being out for days, or weeks, or months, there's something comforting in seeing that light," he said. You know someone is there working to keep you safe, he said.

The American Lighthouse Foundation works to preserve lighthouses and lightships around the world. Recently the foundation participated in efforts to re-light the Scituate lighthouse in 1995 which had been dark since 1860, he said.

Doug Bingham will be at the Scituate Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum from 1 - 4 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $4 for adults, $3 for senior citizens, $2 for children and children under 12 years-old are free. Stars of the Week

Maggie O'Connor, Sarah Kidder and Andi O'Shaughnessy were named to the South Shore League All-Star team enroute to leading the field hockey team back to the tournament. The all-star game will be Monday at Cohasset High at 5:30 p.m. See page 14

Growing pains for girls soccer squad

Team battles injuries, losses

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Even though the Cohasset High girl's soccer team bears a record consisting of 1-11-1, there is no cause for despair. Cohasset is improving every week, and that is all anyone can hope for.

The only freshman on the team, goalie Maura O'Brien, also seems optimistic about the squad.

"The season started out rough," she said. "But we get better each game. We just try to play our best."

"The season started out rough. But we get better each game. We just try to play our best."
Goalie Maura O'Brien

The soccer team has a strong leading core of seniors, highlighted by tri-captains Jessie Zerendow, Jenny Chastain, and Eileen Ridge. All three are considered the leaders both on and off the field, as they strive for a close team relationship.

As is the case with many sports teams, it takes more than just a nucleus of stars. This team has a great supporting cast, including a heavily anchored senior defensive staff. This defense showcases captains Zerendow and Chastain, whose physical and mental toughness are keys in protecting the goal.

Not only is the defense difficult to penetrate, the midfield of the lady Skippers is no picnic for opposing forwards to elude.

The midfield is led by captain Ridge, who also pitches in on the offensive side of the ball with numerous goals and assists. Junior middie Katherine Flaherty also has been doing tremendous work, including one of the season's highlights — a hat trick a few weeks ago.

In addition, the forwards have been a pain in the neck for the opposing defenses. Speedy sophomores Cara Foley and Kate Grimm have the passing game down to an art form. Senior forwards Alyssa Connolly and Jackie Kahn have been exceptional this year, as most of the veterans are.

The two most recent games for Cohasset have been a 6-0 loss to Carver and an offensive slugfest in Hull where the result was a draw, 5-5.

The tie to Hull was a great achievement for Cohasset, with everyone playing solidly. Ridge and sophomore Maggie O'Neill both had two goals while senior defenseman Maura Duffy pitched in the fifth.

This team has taken a beating this season on and off the field. Not only are the opponents Cohasset faces extremely talented, but the injuries the team has had to endure have made the battles even tougher.

Included on the list of plagued soccer players is Duffy, who has been sidelined due to a recent car accident. Everyone in the high school, not to mention her teammates, are all wishing her a quick recovery so she can get back onto the field where she belongs.

The team has had its share of ups and downs, but from the way the team has played as of late, it appears the downs are fewer and farther between. If they keep playing quality soccer, the only thing they will have to bear is compliments from their peers.

Skippers qualify for tourney

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

This year has been a magical one for the field hockey Lady Skippers, a team that has recorded seven wins for the first time this decade is set to begin the annual tournament.

There is a mandatory 18 points in order to qualify for the postseason, and Cohasset got its 18th and 19th with a 1-0 win over Notre Dame of Hingham this past Saturday.

The game against Notre Dame win was an especially sweet victory, coming less than two weeks after Cohasset fell to the Aces 3-0. The game's lone goal came from junior center forward Andi Shaughnessy.

"Everyone has made us come to this point. It is a 100 percent team effort."
Coach Debbie Bostwick

Shaughnessy also was named to this year's South Shore League all-star team for the second straight year, along with juniors Maggie O'Connor and Sarah Kidder. The all-star game will be held on Nov. 1, at 5:30 p.m.at Carver High school.

This is the fifth time this decade, all under coach Debbie Bostwick, and first time since 1997 that the team has made it to the playoffs. Making it in '90, '92, '94, '97, and now 1999, Cohasset has never been able to win the first game to advance beyond the preliminary round. However, this may have to do with the fact that Cohasset has been up against some heavy hitting opponents in playoffs past.

This whole season, Bostwick has relied on quick offensive strikes, and smart defensive play. It will require a high level of both in order to compete with other tournament-bound field hockey squads.

"Everyone has made us come to this point," said Bostwick. "It is a 100 percent team effort."

Not only will it take a tremendous effort from the entire team to succeed in the tournament, but it will also take consistency since Cohasset does not know who they will be playing.

The Skippers defeated Middleboro on Tuesday to end their season with a record of 8-5-5, the most wins since the field hockey program started. Also, and more importantly, the eighth win would give Cohasset a higher seed, and a much more winnable first game.

MacQuarrie earns NESCAC Player of the Week

Cohasset native Brett MacQuarrie had two assists in a 6-0 win over Eastern Connecticut State and scored both of Trinity's goals in a 2-1 victory overTufts to win the New England Small College Athletic Conference Player of the Week. His second goal against NESCAC rival Tufts was the game winner, five minutes into overtime

A junior forward, MacQuarrie is one of the Bantams top two scorers. The NESCAC is comprised of Amherst, Bates, Bowdoin, Colby, Connecticut College, Hamilton, Middlebury, Trinity, Tufts University, Wesleyan University, and Williams College.

Also playing for Trinity is freshman forward Morgan Sandell of Cohasset. Sandell registered a hat trick against the Vassar Brewers. At the time, that led the team in goals with six, MacQuarrie registered a goal and an assist in the 5-0 win

Hannah Beggan, also of Cohasset, is a sophomore midfielder for the St. Michael's College Lady Knights women's soccer team.

Beggan has played well throughout the season and scored her first collegiate goal. She also has an assist St. Michael's is 5-4-2 on the season and 2-2-1 in the Northeast-10 Conference thought the Skippers would fair at the tournament, Bostwick believed this year was as good as any to break out of the first round rut Cohasset has been mired in for the past 10 years.

"I think the girls have earned some bragging rights," Bostwick said. "We have really made a name for ourselves."

Bostwick has said all year that it is not about winning or losing, as long as you play your best. This still is her philosophy, but she would like much more to collect a win in the tournament more than any other time in the year.

The coach said she will be playing for the win, utilizing the best combinations of players on the field. As history has shown, better team chemistry makes for better teams.

Not only has this team possessed raw talent, great work habits, and a terrific team relationship, but it has been things off the field as well as on that have contributed to this season.

Cohasset came in second place for the annual sportsmanship award. Not only that, but everyone on the team has worked extremely hard to balance their academics with their field hockey schedule.

Bostwick summed it up nicely: "Everyone has worked so hard, I consider all the kids All-Stars."

Skippers look to finish Sandwich

Lack of second half production a problem for football team

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Football games are often decided on two or three big plays. That's what it came down to for the Cohasset High football team in Saturday's frustrating 23-18 loss to Nauset.

In a game where the Skippers moved the ball at will against Nauset in the first half, it was what Cohasset wasn't able to get done that proved to be the team's downfall.

"We just jumped all over them in the first half," said Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe. "We marched the ball all over the field."

The loss dropped Cohasset to 2-4 on the season with four games remaining.

Nauset never figured out how to contain Dan Trowers as the lightning-fast back rushed for a pair of touchdowns and packed in 170 yards of weaving and bobbing away from Nauset defenders. Paul Previte rushed for Cohasset's other touchdown.

But even Trowers' heroics and the Previte score were not enough for Cohasset on this day. The Skippers failed to get into the end zone on two rushes and a pass on their conversion plays following touchdowns.

Nauset headed to the locker room trailing 18-7 when it pounced on a Cohasset fumble in the Skippers' end zone and drilled the extra point.

Nauset roared back in the second half to take the lead, one that may not have been there if not for the missed conversion plays by the Skippers.

"We can give them two [big plays] not three," said Rolfe. "It's disappointing. What can you do."

What Rolfe is doing now is putting the Nauset game behind him and concentrating on preparing the Skippers for this weekend's game against a tough Sandwich team.

Rolfe believes Sandwich is on par with Carver High in the South Shore League. If that holds true, the Skippers will be in for a tough, physical game against a team that makes few mistakes.

Cohasset's schedule doesn't get any easier after Sandwich, either. The Skippers still have to play Hanover and Norwell High, the winner of the last two Division 4 Super Bowls. Hull High, which has been struggling all season long, meets Cohasset in Hull in the annual Thanksgiving Day game.

The Pirates have played several teams very tough this season, but have nothing to show for it yet. After last year's victory, Cohasset will be looking to make it two in a row against the Pirates.

This time, though, Cohasset will have to do it on the Pirates' home turf in front of a crowd eagerly looking to avenge last season's loss.

"We have to find a way to finish the games off," Rolfe said.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

MAKE A SPLASH!

A kitchen backsplash is the wall area at the back of the counter, behind the range, and at the back of the sink that is all too often treated with a 3- or 4-inch-tall band of plastic laminate. While this material does a good job of protecting the wall from splashes and splatters, it offers little in the way of aesthetics. Decorators, however, are likely to view the backsplash as a blank canvas to be used to introduce color, bold pattern, or subtle texture into kitchens filled with flat, smooth surfaces. To these ends, ceramic tile can be the perfect choice to add style and signature patterns that reflect the cook's personality. There is virtually no limit to the possibilities.

If properly decorated, a kitchen backsplash can add color and detail to the room. Entertain family and friends in the new millennium with a newly remodeled kitchen. THE DESIGNING WOMAN can create a detailed design plan that considers your personal tastes, function of the space in question, and budget. We order the supplies needed and coordinate the work of craftsmen. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient appointment.

HINT: Ceramic tile offers the greatest selection of colors, motifs, and hand-painted designs for creating a truly customized backsplash.

Heroin's deadly grip

State Police Sgt. Tony Thomas stands over a cache of the state's evidence under lock and key at the Middleboro barracks. Millions of dollars in pure heroin, "crack" cocaine and marijuana were recovered from busts on the South Shore.

"It's so pure and it's so inexpensive, that users aren't afraid of heroin anymore. But it's pretty safe to say that if you're a heroin user, you're going to overdose at some point."

Drug of choice gains in popularity, availability on South Shore

By Christopher A. Szechenyi
STAFF WRITER

It's inexpensive, purer than ever and delivered door to door just like pizza. Heroin has become a drug of choice on the South Shore — even though it has potentially deadly consequences.

The signs are everywhere.

The number of people seeking treatment for drug addiction has increased dramatically in every South Shore town during the past two years, according to the State Department of Public Health.

And among hundreds of South Shore residents, the most widely abused drug, after alcohol and marijuana, is heroin, the agency's data shows.

Even for non-users, heroin affects day-to-day facets of life.

Consider the fact that the Star Market in Marshfield has pulled powdered baby formula from its shelves. Large quantities kept disappearing, probably stolen by heroin addicts, and now certain brands of the powder are kept behind the customer service counter.

"One of the theories is that it's used to cut drugs," said Bernie Rogan, a spokesman for the store.

Look at the daily docket at Quincy District Court, which lists a steady stream of drug abusers from all over the South Shore committing crimes. The list of cases shows the heroin business is as brisk as ever.

For instance, police recently arrested a Weymouth woman, Rhonda Adams, and her 20-year-old son. As they entered the duo's apartment, the police reportedly confiscated 80 bags of cocaine and heroin as the drugs were swirling down the toilet.

Before the bust, Adams lived high on the hog, driving a Lexus and stocking their apartment with big-screen TVs, hundreds of DVD movies and first-class clothes. "She had quite a racket going on over there," said Weymouth police Chief Rod Rumble, who heads the South Shore Drug Task Force.

Heroin dealers and users, however, often pay dearly for their habit.

Meet Peter Brousaides, who was locked up in the Norfolk County House of Correction. He recalls a criminal career that has included robbing people at gunpoint, stealing his parents' TV and selling his grandfather's gold ring – all to pay for injections of heroin.

He has lived in four halfway houses and spent a total of four years in prison in three different states. And he's only 23.

"I robbed anyone and anything," he said. "I destroyed my whole life. I have to start all over again."

Others aren't so lucky.

A deadly legacy

Two Cohasset residents died recently from heroin overdoses. One was a landscaper who grew up in the seaside town and lived near a country club on a street with $500,000 houses. He was one of the 4,000 people in America who die annually from heroin overdoses, according to the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Despite Cohasset's posh reputation, it has assigned an undercover officer full time to ferret out drug crimes and in recent months, the agent has arrested six persons on heroin-related charges.

Among those arrested in June was a Hull resident, Dean G. Klucevsek, who was self employed as a landscaper and already had a criminal record with six heroin related charges, according to court records.

A Cohasset resident, Richard Emanuello, was arrested on the same day and charged with drug possession and resisting arrest after he fled an undercover officer on foot and attempted to throw away a cigarette pack that allegedly contained several glassine bags containing heroin.

"It's so pure and it's so inexpensive, that users aren't afraid of heroin anymore," said Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan. "But it's pretty safe to say that if you're a heroin user, 'you're going to overdose at some point."

In fact, about 70,000 people a year are treated in emergency rooms across the country for overdosing on heroin, the DEA says.

That's because heroin has been flooding the U.S. from Columbia, South America, a shift from the traditional sources in Southeast Asia. Heroin from Columbia is much purer, reaching levels as high as 92 percent on the streets of some cities compared with 2 percent in the past.

The purity of the drug turns casual users into addicts. It's no longer confined to ruining the lives of heroin-addicted musicians like Billie Holliday, Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin.

Heroin is here, among us, snorted, smoked and injected by some 2 million people nationwide, according to the National Household Survey on Drug Abuse.

Of the six tons of heroin produced annually in Columbia, the DEA estimates that nearly all of it is destined for the U.S. market. And the Boston area is one of the major targets for heroin dealers who deliver the drug in door-to-door sales at cut-rate prices.

Sold in bags that cost as little as $15 apiece, the white powder goes by different names on the South Shore, depending on its point of sale. The most popular brands — Hi Dragon and King Cobra – come from Brockton, one of the centers of the heroin trade in this region.

"We border Brockton, so we come into contact with Dominican delivery services," said Richard Franey, the police chief in Abington, where 59 drug-related arrests took place so far this year.

Who are the dealers?

"New England, as a whole, is now flooded with Dominican groups selling multiple kilogram lots of cocaine and smaller amounts of heroin," said DEA Agent Donnie Marshall in Congressional testimony last year. "Local police departments throughout the northeastern U.S. report that Dominican traffickers are moving into towns with populations of 60,000 to 70,000 people and inundating these areas with heroin and cocaine."

In a bid for new customers, the Columbian growers and Dominican dealers have been pushing high-grade heroin onto the streets of Boston and the South Shore at discount prices in a bid to wrest the market share from Middle Eastern and Mexican traffickers. Like the competition between Best Buy and Circuit City to sell TVs, there's a battle between dealers to sell heroin to new users.

First-time heroin users, fearful of dirty needles and AIDS, often snort it in the beginning. But as they gain tolerance of the drug, they're forced to turn to injections, which produce a more powerful, and sometimes, deadly rush.

A 27-year-old woman in rehabilitation at the High Point Treatment Center in Plymouth, for instance, nearly died one day from shooting up heroin. "I overdosed," she said. "My heart stopped and I wasn't breathing. My boyfriend had to give me CPR."

The most widely known heroin-related deaths often make the pages of national magazines – Shannon Hoon of the band, Blind Melon, Kurt Cobain of the rock group, Nirvana, and Jonathan Melvoin of the band, Smashing Pumpkins, are just a few of them. The list goes on and on.

As a DEA agent recently testified, "Heroin abuse is not restricted to the inner city poor and the Hollywood elite." Just check the obituaries in the local newspaper. Fatal heroin overdoses are often listed as seizures, according to an undercover officer in Scituate, and because the drug still carries a stigma, family members often are mum about it.

"On the surface it doesn't look like there is heroin in town," said Hingham police captain Steven Carlson. "But we know it's there."

Heroin, heroin everywhere

Heroin sometimes shows up in the public eye in strange ways.

Police said they recently discovered seven packets of heroin hidden in the undercarriage of a school van driven by Tom Murphy, the chairman of the health board in Braintree.

Murphy was arrested at gunpoint and charged with drug related offenses. He pleaded innocent and a judge later dismissed the charges because he said police didn't have reasonable grounds to stop Murphy and inspect his car.

Some suspect the heroin was planted.

After the charges were dismissed, Murphy resigned from his public post. "I feel the time has come for me to move on," he said in a resignation letter.

Nobody knows why heroin has become so pervasive. Some experts blame waif-like fashion models and the media for making it chic. Others say movie actors, like Robert Downey Jr., who have been arrested for using heroin, make it seem cool.

"It's cheap, it's available and it's promoted in every kids' magazine," said Karen Vernon, a rehabilitation director at the High Point Treatment Center. "Look at the men and the Danny Lopez is serving two years in prison for attempting to sell 250 bags of heroin and other drug-related crimes.

Coming to terms with addiction

By Seth Jacobson and Christopher Szechenyi
STAFF WRITERS

Behind a giant steel door inside the Norfolk County House of Correction in Dedham, a platoon of prisoners housed in Module 2B is recovering from drug addiction.

The giant door slowly slides open to allow visitors to enter for a few hours. Then it shuts with a heavy clang.

Among the 72 men behind the door is Danny Lopez, a 38-year-old man serving two years in prison for attempting to sell 250 bags of heroin, carrying a hypodermic needle, shoplifting and receiving a stolen car.

Lopez says he began using drugs at age 13. Since then, he's been in prison five times, serving more than seven years in total.

The same scene is played out in prisons throughout the commonwealth. Men from every walk of life serve time for crimes associated with drug addiction. They may be young or old, Black, Hispanic or white. Once they've taken a taste of heroin, it has controlled their lives.

In the Plymouth County House of Correction, for instance, Michael Barlow is serving 540 days for unarmed robbery associated with his heroin habit. Although he will be released in 14 months, he's already scared to get out.

"If they told me I could go home right now, I wouldn't do it," he said. "I want to put as much into my recovery as I did into getting high. Addiction has no conscience. You don't even realize what you're doing half the time."

Barlow has been arrested 44 times, mostly for drugs and doing anything he can to feed his heroin habit.

In both jails, dozens of men are coming to terms with their addiction, assisted by counselors who conduct one-on-one sessions and group therapy. The jails have become a home away from home, a place where they usually can't get drugs no matter how much they want them.

Shooting up at McDonald's

Michael Barlow slipped back into his habit as his parents were driving him to a halfway house.

They didn't know it, but he was carrying a pocket full of heroin.

Barlow asked his folks to stop at McDonald's so he could get something to eat before he checked in.

While his parents waited in the car, he went into the bathroom and shot up all the heroin he had in his possession.

The next thing his parents saw was an ambulance arrive and medics carrying their son out. Barlow had overdosed. "My parents didn't even know what was going on until they saw me coming out on the stretcher," he said.

Barlow grew up in Fall River as a pretty normal kid, but after he saw other teenagers making money by selling drugs in his neighborhood, he decided to get into the game. He says he started selling heroin at 15, then he started sniffing it.

By the age of 17, he was shooting it up.

Barlow would do anything to support his habit of 20 bags of heroin per day. "I started robbing people," he said. When he got an insurance settlement for $100,000 from a car accident he was in, he said he spent $5,000 in one day, all on heroin.

Now he's had enough. Barlow wants to quit for good, but he has said that before.

"In the past, I let my guard down. Now I know I can't let my guard down," he said. "If I don't keep working on my recovery, I'll probably be dead."

A costly mixup

Eric Hollis took heroin by accident. Now he's serving more than 10 years in prison for crimes related to his addiction.

Hollis started smoking pot at 14 years old, and quickly graduated to harder stuff. One day a friend passed him some powder. "Someone said it was cocaine," the Framingham resident said, "so I sniffed it."

It turned out to be heroin instead. He was 16 at the time. Five years later, Hollis was shooting up heroin.

"I started out with a half a bag a day," he said, "and it gradually moved to two, and then all the way up to about 15 bags a day."

Now Hollis is serving two sentences in the Plymouth House of Correction, one for 6 to 10 years which he is currently finishing and another sentence for 3 to 5 years

Hollis is afraid of leaving jail because heroin still has a grip on him.

"Anyone who tells you they're not scared in my situation, they're full of it," he said. "I've been in just about every county jail in the state at one time or another."

He's been arrested 30 times, most recently for armed burglary.

From the time he began to abuse heroin heavily, Hollis said his days consisted of "hustling" people for money in order to get the drug. "When you're a heroin addict you ain't holding a job, you're just chasing your addiction," he said.

He once woke up on the floor of a bathroom after shooting up, and despite his condition, all he could think about was getting more heroin.

"With this drug, you can overdose and not even remember," he said. "Drugs, especially heroin, don't discriminate."

Now Hollis wants to beat the drug.

"I'm participating in every substance abuse program I can," he said. "I feel more confident now than I ever did. There's so much in my life to look forward to. The dangerous word for me is 'denial.' I've been dealing with that since I was 25, and it's getting old."

Failure not an option

Lonnie Perry said he will beat his heroin addiction at all cost. He is in the Plymouth County House of Correction for less than a month, and then he is a free man.

Unlike the other inmates, he has few fears about getting hooked again.

"I don't worry about it," the 47-year-old said. "My recovery means everything to me. Failure is not an option."

His habit started when he was a child. "I was like any other kid," he said. "I went to school, that type of thing. My life changed when I started using marijuana."

He was expelled at 16. He got a part-time job delivering papers. Drug dealers in his neighborhood told him they liked the way he carried himself. "They approached me and showed me how to sell drugs, mainly heroin," he said.

At first, Perry never used heroin. But he eventually tried sniffing it. And by the age of 17, Perry was shooting it up. His addiction grew into a $250 a day habit, equivalent to 20 bags of heroin a day.

Selling the drugs provided him with enough money to use the drug regularly. He went into business for himself and found his own sources.

"I learned I could go to New York and get my own supply," he said. "I'd go there and then come back to Boston and sell it. That's what I would do. That's what I did."

When money got scarce, he would pick people's pockets and break into houses as a last resort. "I wasn't violent," he said, "unless someone did something to me."

When he gets out of jail, he plans to teach kids how to avoid making the same mistakes. "I'm going to talk to these kids about being in jail, drinking, drugs, and make them aware of the consequences," he said.

"If you live the life I led, you could be doing one thing, and then you'll be sitting in a place like this wondering how you got here."

He's determined never to return. "I don't want to be who I was before."

False courage, new hope

Danny Lopez began doing drugs at age 13. He eventually became a substance abuse counselor, but he couldn't stay away from heroin himself.

"It gave me that false sense of courage," he explained. "I was kind of shy. With heroin, I felt I was king of the world."

The feeling was short lived. He had to feed his addiction and stole clothes and shoes from Filene's Basement. He traded the goods for hits of heroin. When he lost his job, he got another at a computer store. From there, he stole $70,000 and used it all for heroin, he said.

Later in his criminal career, he held up a store at gun point and stole $8,000. But the police caught him after chasing him through the streets of Boston. He was sentenced to nearly five years in prison.

Looking back, he said heroin is like the devil.

"When you have a heroin habit, you need it. You'll steal from your mother," he said. "You'll take your kids' diaper money. You get so desperate, you'll do anything. You just can't stop."

But during his latest stint in jail, Lopez has stopped using drugs. He's convinced he has overcome his addiction.

"I feel good," he said. "When I do get out of here, I know I'm going to do good. I'm going to stay clean."

Heroin's deadly grip

women in the ads. They look like weathered junkies."

But most likely it's the nature of the drug that accounts for its popularity.

"Heroin is a problem prevalent in New England. As the purity increases, you can snort it and smoke it. That takes away the stigma of the needle and attracts a larger population of users," said Kevin Cloherty, chief of the drug task force in the U.S. Attorney's office in Boston.

And heroin is seductive. It produces a sense of well-being and a feeling of invincibility. But that cannot be sustained unless users boost the amount they take. And without those increasing daily doses, heroin addicts go through painful withdrawal, including vomiting and diarrhea.

"They can't get up in the morning until they get their drugs," Vernon said.

Whatever the reason for the increase in its popularity, heroin is flooding Boston, Brockton and other big cities. The drug trade is so brisk in Brockton, police say drivers can see deals being made in the street. It is also sweeping through the suburbs of the South Shore like a hurricane. Consider the troubling trend:

- In Pembroke and Scituate, the number of residents who sought treatment for heroin abuse doubled between 1997 and 1998.
- In Braintree, 129 residents were treated for heroin abuse in 1998, nearly a 50 percent increase over the previous year.

Michael Barlow's advice is to stay away from drugs because the abuse can only lead to more problems.

- In Hingham, 30 residents sought treatment for heroin abuse last year, nearly a 60 percent jump over the year before.
- And in Weymouth, 192 residents were treated for heroin abuse last year, compared with 134 the year before.

"You've got heroin addicts everywhere," said Vernon.

"Heroin use has been increasing every year," said Brian Sylvester, regional manager of the Bureau of Substance Abuse at the Department of Public Health, which tracks admissions to clinics and hospitals.

The majority of drug abusers on the South Shore fall between the ages of 30 and 49. But experts also are concerned about the growing popularity of heroin among younger people.

"Kids in the past didn't want to use heroin because they didn't want to use the needle," said Michael Mather, who heads the governor's Alliance Against Drugs. "But now it's so pure, they can snort it."

A statewide survey of 3,982 students in grades 9 through 12 in 1997 found that more than half had used some illegal drugs. The survey said "drug use is prevalent across all kinds of communities" and "teachers, school administrators and parents often grossly underestimate the magnitude of adolescent drug use."

It also said marijuana appeared to act as a "gateway" to other drugs. According to a study published last year in the journal Pediatrics, about two percent of the nation's 12th graders have used heroin, double the number just five years ago.

"Young high school students are using heroin," Vernon said. "It's socially acceptable to snort it. But before they know it, they get hooked and begin shooting it up."

Slowly committing suicide

The experience of heroin addicts like Peter Brousaides provides a window into the world of heroin.

A rebellious kid who grew up in Dedham, he began smoking marijuana at age 13. He first confined his habit to weekends and also devoted himself to playing hockey and baseball. But he started hanging around with other troublemakers and after several warnings, he was expelled from public school.

He began to use cocaine at 18 after a girlfriend introduced it to him, and his life went down hill from there.

Brousaides got high the first day he got out of a $15,000 rehabilitation program. Then when his supplier ran out of cocaine, he snorted heroin instead.

"I tried it and fell in love with it," the inmate at the Norfolk County jail recalls. "It took all my problems away. It made me feel complete."

Even after numerous arrests, Brousaides said he could not kick the heroin habit. Like other addicts, he started snorting it, then injecting heroin with a hypodermic needle. His appetite for the drug increased. He eventually used 20 bags a day.

He had a job in a warehouse at Sears, but he stole so many TVs to support his habit, he got fired. He snatched cartons of cigarettes from a convenience store in his neighborhood and robbed a house of jewelry. He was caught shoplifting at Home Depot. And he often robbed his parents' house.

Brousaides said he intended to stay clean from time to time, but the powerful pull of the drug overwhelmed him. His girlfriend will soon give birth to his baby, and he would like to be a part of their lives.

"I used to think it was cool being in here," he said, speaking inside the jail in Dedham before his release. "Now I feel like a shit bag. I left my girl and my kid on the street because of heroin. I've screwed my parents so many times in my life. But they haven't given up on me."

Clearly, he regrets his past. "I would not have a criminal record if it had not been for drugs. The game I was playing was life or death. I was slowly committing suicide on heroin. It was like putting a gun to my head."

And it's clear that his rehabilitation and reconnection to the community won't be easy. "When I come home, my mom will lock all the bedroom doors," he said. "I have to regain their trust."

Ironically, he will try to build a family with the woman who first introduced him to cocaine. "I want to be normal. I don't want to be an addict anymore. I want to be a father, and a family man."

"I want to walk down the street and not have to hide," he said. "I'm done running."

Task Force Fights South Shore Drug Trade

By Christopher A. Szechenyi and Jeanne M. Rideout

Weymouth Police Chief Rod Rumble heads the South Shore Drug Task Force, a combined effort of 11 towns devoted to fighting drug related crimes.

More than half a dozen detectives surrounded two apartments in Weymouth in the spring of last year to carry out the final step in a major undercover drug operation on the South Shore. The team belonged to the South Shore Drug Task Force, the agency on the front line of the region's drug war.

"Police!" the officers yelled, after knocking on the doors of apartment 309 and 203 at 35 Audubon Road. After no one answered, the officers rammed the doors down and inside 309, they found Ann E. Navarro, 250 bags of heroin and thousands of dollars in cash.

Navarro had a long history of drug addiction and several prior convictions for drug offenses. She was "a major distributor on the South Shore" who was charged with drug possession and trafficking in heroin, court records say.

The arrest that day was the culmination of months of work by the task force, a sophisticated group of 23 undercover detectives from 11 towns on the South Shore which have combined forces to fight the rising tide of drugs in the area.

Headed by Weymouth Police Chief Rod Rumble, the task force works with the FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) and other federal agencies. Its officers operate out of a hidden location, share leads and informants, and conduct surveillance and undercover operations together, including court-ordered wiretaps and drug buys.

"It's a cost-efficient way of fighting drug dealers," Rumble said. Added John Gartland, the special agent in charge of the DEA in New England: "We are trying to put together teams. We are concerned because we're seeing an increase in the purity and availability of heroin and cocaine."

The task force from 11 towns — including Abington, Braintree, Cohasset, Holbrook, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth – has chalked up impressive results. In just a three-month period last year, the task force confiscated 205 grams of cocaine, 4 grams of heroin, 30 doses of LSD and 72 ounces of marijuana.

It also seized $30,244 in property and currency from suspected drug dealers and arrested 22 persons, including 2 illegal aliens. "We take their cars. We take their property. We hit them in the pocketbook," Rumble said.

Nearly half of those arrested were caught during undercover drug stings, according to a report from the Massachusetts Executive Office of Public Safety, which funds the task force with a federal grant.

One major sting resulted in the arrest of two men whose case illustrates the nature of the drug trade on the South Shore. The case began to unfold December 9, when Weymouth Detective Warren P. Burke got a call from a source, nicknamed "Jimbo" in court documents.

The source told him about a major heroin and cocaine drug distribution network run by three men from the Dominican Republic out of an apartment at 605 Broad Street in Weymouth, an affidavit says. Jimbo said he had seen "large quantities of cocaine, wrapped in plastic baggies, and heroin in glassine containers" inscribed with the name, "Death Wish."

Jimbo also told Burke that he had seen one of the men in the apartment carrying a "pearl handled firearm" and said the men used a light blue station wagon to make deliveries of drugs, a pattern of door-to-door sales that have become a prevalent practice on the South Shore.

One of the frustrating problems for law enforcement officers is with the justice system itself. For a drug dealer to get a mandatory minimum sentence of 10 years in prison, police have to catch the person with 28 grams of heroin. Most dealers are clever enough to avoid getting caught with such large quantities.

At Burke's request, Jimbo went to apartment 9 and made a "controlled buy" of cocaine, using funds provided by police. During a second purchase, Jimbo saw "at least 500 bags of what he believed to be heroin" at the sparsely furnished apartment. During surveillance, Burke watched the men leave the apartment and tailed them as they drove to Hingham and Hull.

On December 18, Burke and several other armed officers made a "no knock" entry at the apartment, arrested three men and confiscated 69 bags of cocaine, three razor blades and $737 in cash. During the arrest, a customer walked into the apartment and identified Gullen Jimenez as his supplier.

The three men who were arrested – Jimenez, Antionio Riviera and Miguel Avale – were uncooperative when the police tried to take their fingerprints. They apparently wanted to hide their real identities.

In the past, Burke had arrested 10 other people from the Dominican Republic, who often "used false names" to protect their identity, avoid deportation for being in the U.S. illegally or dodge warrants for their arrest for other crimes, the affidavit says.

Jimenez was charged with several drug violations. On New Year's Eve, he posted $25,000 bond. After getting out of jail and posting bond, Jimenez never appeared again in court. He forfeited the bond payment and simply disappeared.

Despite the frustrations of the job, Chief Rumble thinks the task force is making progress. "We're taking these people off the street."

But Burke pointed out that drug dealers like the three men from the Dominican Republic are protected by a larger organization that controls the drug business on the South Shore. He calls the organization "the company."

"It is organized crime," Burke says.

The organization will bail its members out of jail and move them to another city when they get in trouble.

In fact, it's so well organized that when someone is arrested, "drug users get a call from another family member to fill in the gap. It's a family affair," Burke said. "They have routes like paper routes. It's a money making business."

And the organization moves its couriers throughout the Northeast, particularly New York, New Jersey , Connecticut and Massachusetts. For instance, Burke arrested a woman at the Harbor Light Mall on drug charges and later discovered she was wanted for murder in New York..

"We find a lot of people arrested here have a warrant for their arrest in other states," Burke said.

The couriers bring the drugs to the South Shore by plane and ship, hiding the material in an ever-changing assortment of ways. At one point, the authorities found drugs hidden in hollowed out lumber arriving from the Amazon. At other times, they found drugs packed among fish being imported from England.

One of the frustrating problems for law enforcement officers is with the justice system itself. For a drug dealer to get a mandatory minimum sentence of 10 years in prison, police have to catch the person with 28 grams of heroin. Most dealers are clever enough to avoid getting caught with such large quantities.

In the case of Gullen Jimenez, he defeated the system by simply vanishing. "I haven't heard from him," said Shawn Salter, one of the attorneys who represented Jimenez. And since Jimenez used several aliases such as Christain Rocka, it will be difficult for local police to ever find him again.

The road to recovery after 15 bags a day

By Christopher A. Szechenyi
STAFF WRITER

She's 27, homeless and a heroin addict.

She needed 15 bags of heroin a day. She started taking it when she woke up and continued to get high from sunrise to sunset. It controlled her life and destroyed it.

"I've lost everything to this drug," she says. "Everything."

Today her case illustrates how difficult it is for a heroin user to escape the addiction.

The young woman is recovering at Plymouth's High Point Treatment Center, a non-profit program where 32 out of the 52 patients from all over the South Shore are trying to break their obsession with heroin.

Karen Vernon, the rehabilitation director at the facility, said people as young as 18 who shoot five bags of heroin a day are treated at the facility. "It's still shocking to me," she said.

The patients often come back over and over again for help because it's so difficult to kick. "I can walk through the building at any time and I know most of our residents from their prior history," Vernon added.

The blond, blue-eyed woman going through her fourth round of treatment is a case in point. She looks like the girl next door. Her skin is clear and she has a ready smile. She laughs easily. But she's struggling inside.

She used to be an athlete. Skiing, jogging and roller skating were her favorite sports. "Now I'm exhausted just walking," she says. "My legs are killing me. They ache, ache, ache."

She began smoking pot at age 12, then graduated to crack. But she didn't like the way it made her feel. "I was a paranoid mess," she says.

So she tried heroin one day four years ago. She began snorting it, then jabbing a needle into her arms and legs, "popping it," as she says in the lexicon of drug users.

At first, she was afraid to inject it directly into her blood. "That didn't last long. My boyfriend found the vein," she recalls.

A nurse's aide, she stole needles from the hospital where she worked. She overdosed one day and stopped breathing. Her boyfriend revived her with CPR.

It scared her, but she still couldn't stop. "I love it and I hate it. I love the high. But it rapes you of everything."

In contrast with crack, heroin made her feel numb. "I didn't have a care in the world," she said.

But the drug made her "cheat, steal and lie." She's surprised she hasn't been arrested, especially during her heroin buys.

To get the drug, she called a dealer, met him at his car, hopped in and made the transaction. She tried to take the drug in moderate doses.

"But each day you want more and more and more," she said. "It got to the point where I was doing 15 to 20 bags a day."

She went into detox, but she still yearned for the drug. She started using it again for the fourth time nine months ago and lost 25 pounds.

Like other heroin addicts, she had no appetite. All she ate was a candy bar with a bottle of tonic water every day. "I'm just starting to get my appetite back."

She's finished with six days of detox during which time she took Darvon. And she's completed 10 more days of rehab – intensive group therapy, one on one with a counselor, medical attention and more.

But even now, she's unsure whether she can stay away from heroin. It has a pull many can't resist. She's going to a halfway house on the South Shore and will try to stay clean.

"I'm trying to take it one day at a time."

Exploring a world of religions

Glastonbury Abbey holding in-depth lecture series

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

From the time of the Crusades to today's tragic situation in the former Yugoslavia, the last thousand years have been witness to countless episodes of hatred and violence precipitated by religious intolerance. As we approach the next millennium, the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham are seeking to increase knowledge of other religions in an attempt to promote understanding of different faiths.

The Catholic monastery is sponsoring a series of lectures and conversations which will delve into the traditions of religions such as Judaism, Buddhism, and Islam. Fr. Timothy Joyce, prior of Glastonbury Abbey, said learning about different religions will not weaken Catholics' belief in their own faith, but may in fact serve to help them better understand it.

"Learning about others' religious practices helps to clarify one's own faith, and to realize its strengths and weaknesses as well," Joyce said. "Differences can bring about fears, but we're basically all one people. Hopefully, greater understanding of each other's traditions will reduce those fears."

Fr. John Mulvehill, pastor of St. Anthony's Catholic Church in Cohasset, agreed that knowledge of other religions does not detract from one's own faith.

"Anything that exposes Catholics to other religions is positive," he said. "Especially in a small town like Cohasset, you don't have too much of an opportunity to learn about other religions like Buddhism or Islam."

One of the lecture series' biggest proponents is Avis Goldstein of Hingham, who said that her Jewish faith does not preclude her from being enamored by the Glastonbury Abbey series.

"I am so impressed that a Catholic monastery is sponsoring these lectures on different faiths," she said. "No matter what their religion, many people grew up thinking their way was the only way. Programs like this are beginning to break that mold by appreciating each other's differences."

Joyce said this lecture series is not the first time that his order has sought understanding of different religions.

"Many Benedictine monasteries have been involved in dialogue with people like the Dalai Lama and Muslim groups as well. Many people have been looking to the East for spiritual guidance and this series will help enlighten people about those types of spirituality as well as our own."

The first lecture in the series occurred on Sept. 16, and was entitled 'Spirituality on the Eve of the New Millennium.' Fordham University theology professor Ewert Cousins, editor of the 25-volume "World Spirituality: An Encyclopedic History of the Religious Quest," was the guest speaker.

"When we decided to do this, we decided that we had to do it professionally," Joyce said. "We had a few sponsors who stepped forward to help us bring in these types of accomplished people."

Goldstein went to that lecture and plans on attending the five subsequent lectures.

"It's an interesting experience to have your own views stretched," she said. "You find that by learning about other people's traditions, one's own faith can be strengthened rather than threatened."

Each of the programs are an hour and a half long, with the first 45 minutes devoted to the speaker's presentation. After some time for personal reflection, those in the audience are able to ask questions of the presenter and discuss issues brought up during the presentation.

Joyce said that learning about others' religious traditions might be a first step toward reaching a greater cross-cultural understanding, a necessity in a country which becomes more ethnically mixed every day.

"As we're entering the new millennium, we've got to take a look at what it means to live in a pluralistic society," he said. "America is no longer home to a mostly European population. The numbers of Asians and Hispanics continue to grow. How we deal with that as a country will be vitally important."

"It's an interesting experience to have your own views stretched. You find that by learning about other people's traditions, one's own faith can be strengthened rather than threatened."
AVIS GOLDSTEIN, 12 S. PLEASANT ST. IN HINGHAM

Goldstein said it is the very awareness of past discrimination that makes her want to understand and appreciate the religious traditions of others.

"Part of my interest in this is being aware of past centuries of anti-Semitism," she said. "Given all that's gone on with religious intolerance, it's quite remarkable to have a series like this. It's more than just a couple of lectures. It make a statement that religious differences can be understood and appreciated rather than feared."

Joyce broke down the reason behind seeking to understand other religions into very simple terms.

"Almost all religions today believe in one God," he said. "We might have different conceptions of what that is, but we're all headed eventually to that God."

The Nov. 18 program will feature guest speaker Jane Redmont, and is entitled 'Holy is the Daily: Jewish Insights on a Christian Path.' All programs are on Thursday evenings from 7:30 p.m. to 9 p.m. and will be held at South Elementary School in Hingham. Reservations are strongly recommended and may be made by calling Glastonbury Abbey at 741-2155. Anyone interested in more information can visit the monastery's website at www.glastonburyabbey.org.

Community service for ninth-graders

Sunday evening, Oct. 24, St. Anthony's Parish Center was the site of a potluck supper for the ninth-grade confirmation class and their sponsors.

Bill Coleman, youth minister, spoke to the candidates for confirmation about the service component of their two-year preparation prior to receiving the sacrament. Students will consider service within the community and beyond. Some possibilities are serving at Fr. Bill's Place in Quincy, or helping out at a shelter...perhaps helping an elderly person do some chores which they cannot easily do themselves. Last year more than 60 students from St. Anthony's participated in the Appalachian Service Project under the supervision of Rev. Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church and many will plan to participate again this year.

Coleman works with the teachers of the confirmation class, Susan Carr, Kate Brady, Jane Fegreus and Cynthia Hill. The teachers, along with the parents of these students are planning to organize a bake sale after each Sunday Mass in order to fund these Youth Service Projects.

On Monday, Nov. 1 (All Saint's Day), the Moms, Pops and Tots playgroup will resume from 9 to 11 a.m. All are welcome. It will be held in the Desmond Room (upstairs in the church). Light refreshments of coffee, juice, and a snack will be provided. It is also a good time to welcome new parishioners. Organizers of the playgroup are Pat Steel with the help of her mother, Virginia Napolitano.

Managing seaside garden is a labor of love

Lightkeepers' grounds reflect ongoing effort

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The waves of beach grasses bending in the wind along the steep bank and wealth of other plants and flowers in front of the Lightkeepers' Residence look completely natural.

And the Community Garden Club — which is celebrating its 40th year — wouldn't have it any other way.

Dozens of club members work on their hands and knees from spring through fall to ensure the expansive seaside garden that winds along the slope from one end of the cottage to the other complements one of Cohasset's premier landmarks.

"After the initial planting in the spring, we come every other week for several hours to maintain the garden," said Barbara Dillon, who serves as co-chairman of the garden with Phyllis Peck.

The garden had its roots about seven years ago when the Lightkeepers' Corporation that oversees the residence approached the club about planting a garden at the house on Government Island. The Lightkeepers was in the process of completely renovating the cottage — turning a derelict building into a community showplace. Needless to say, the Community Garden Club agreed to adopt the garden and hired Duxbury's Peg Connors, a professional that specializes in seaside gardens, to design the garden and suggest the type of plants that would thrive there.

"It is a destination for people, a new part of town that wasn't nice before."
— Phyllis Peck, Community Garden Club

The club followed Connors' suggestions and over the years the garden has added to a beautiful setting that has attracted innumerable brides to book Bancroft Hall for their wedding receptions.

The club's efforts recently drew the attention the president of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society who presented the club with "The 1998 Garden Certificate" for the Lightkeepers' garden. The club shared the award with the Amateur Garden Club and Cohasset Garden Club that also manage gardens at the site.

The Community Garden Club — which has close to 200 members — also manages a large "native" garden near the Edward Young Parking Lot at the Lightkeepers' and recently designed the new harbor garden toward the sailing club just below the driveway at the residence.

Peck said gardens are hard work but the results are satisfying.

"Besides adding beauty," she said. "We gotten a lot of appreciation from people saying 'this is where I come to take my walk.'

"It is a destination for people, a new part of town that wasn't nice before."

Peck, who designed the new harbor garden for the Lightkeepers, explained there is a fair amount of homework that goes along with maintaining gardens.

There are horticulturists in the club that share their expertise, she said.

Amy Cutler cuts back some of the plants in the expansive garden along the bank in front of the Lightkeepers' Residence on Government Island.

For example, certain plants are put on a "no-no" list because they will crowd others out.

"A lot of thought has to go into it," she said.

But Dillon said gardening with club members is fun and develops camaraderie among members.

"We enjoy the companionship working in the garden," she said. "We have lunch afterwards even in our dirty clothes. It's a social thing in addition to getting something accomplished."

For information about joining the Community Garden Club, call Kathy Marcus at 383-3105 or Jill Covell at 383-0178. Annual dues for regular members are $30. The main fund-raiser for the club is the annual Christmas House Tour to be held Dec. 8. This year's theme is "Deck the Halls for a Very Merry House Tour." Each home will be decorated in the theme of a holiday song, according to club president Pam Pelletier. Stay tuned to the Cohasset Mariner for updates on the house tour in the weeks ahead.

Cohasset teens on Halloween rampage

Police hold parents responsible

By Mary Ford and Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITERS

Halloween was a nightmare for local police and residents.

Upwards of 100 unsupervised teens roamed the streets around the village in packs, causing a general melee that resulted in vandalism, underage drinking and even intimidation of young trick or treaters.

"We had a near riot between the kids on the Common and another group on James Lane," said police officer William Quigley, who was on duty Sunday night.

Quigley said police are so discouraged by the Sunday's events, that he wrote to the Mariner detailing to the community what the kids have done..

Police made one arrest but were too busy trying to control the situation to arrest more of the teens – who were described as high school age.

"We were outnumbered 40-to-one," Quigley said.

Businesses were spray painted and egged, cruisers were damaged by fireworks and eggs, and windows were broken at the high school and new Osgood School. Young trick or treaters were robbed of their candy and a one point a 16-year-old girl defecated on the Common, police said.

The vandals not only yelled obscenities at police but spray painted swear words and phrases such as "child raping sessions here everyday" on the playground behind the old Osgood School. DPW crews were out Tuesday morning cleaning it up.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that insurance would cover the costs of replacing broken windows, but only after the town pays its $5,000 deductible.

Leonora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, said at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting that the events of Halloween night were one of the lowest points in her years living in Cohasset.

"Sunday night was the first time I've ever felt uncomfortable driving downtown," she told selectmen. "There were swarms of teenagers running rampant. To have over 100 children in our town behaving like this is ridiculous. Something has to be done to prevent incidents like this in the future."

Police Chief Brian Noonan, who urges parents and other interested citizens to come down to the station to see the photographs of the graffiti, was discouraged by the events. For the past three years, at his request, selectmen have enacted a voluntary curfew giving parents guidelines. The curfew was prompted by a similar incident on Halloween in 1996 when dozens of egg-hurling teens attacked local officers.

Broadening horizons

METCO expands the worlds of Cohasset and Boston students

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset has many wonderful qualities, but racial diversity is not among them. The cultural exchanges that inevitably occur when members of different races interact are mostly absent in a town that is almost completely white.

Cohasset's public school students, however, are able to become friends with minority children from Boston who attend Cohasset's schools as part of a voluntary desegregation program called METCO (Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunities). Founded in 1966, METCO is a state-funded program which places minority students from Boston in suburban public schools.

"I think the kids from Boston benefit from the academics and some of the intangibles that Cohasset provides."
Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan

Currently, 49 METCO students are enrolled at Cohasset public schools. Those 49 students are evenly spread throughout the school system, with 12 at Osgood, 14 at Deer Hill, and 25 in the six grades at the middle high school, according to METCO coordinator Yvonne Jones.

Ideally, Jones likes to get the Boston students into the Cohasset school system in the early grades, allowing the kids to establish friendships with Cohasset students and feel comfortable in their new surroundings.

"I try to bring them in at the elementary level," she said. "METCO is the referring agency. I request from them the number of students we need at certain grade levels."

One Boston student who started early in the Cohasset school system is Marcina Boone, a senior at Cohasset High School who has been in the school system since first grade. A cheerleader and member of the tennis team, Marcina has been hosted by the Afshar family since her move-up day from kindergarten.

In critical condition

Tour gives firsthand look at school buildings

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

From the leak-stained ceilings with missing tiles to broken boilers, moldy window shades and smelly locker rooms — two Cohasset principals provided a no-holds-barred tour of their school buildings on Saturday.

About a dozen town officials took three hours out of their weekend to see the condition of the middle-high and Deer Hill schools firsthand.

"We're not up to code on virtually anything here."
— Curtis Collins, middle-high school principal

And it wasn't a pretty picture.

"I don't see that there was much maintenance going on during the last 50 years," Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said Monday after he'd had 48 hours to digest what he'd seen. "The high school is deplorable, especially the locker rooms."

The locker rooms were the low point of the tour. Lacking proper ventilation and maintenance, the stench was overpowering, prompting some on the tour to cover their noses and mouths.

Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins said the locker rooms have a reputation that goes beyond Cohasset.

"We can't host the field hockey state tournament," he said during the tour. "The (opposing) teams said they do not want to use our locker rooms and bathrooms."

All five selectmen joined a majority of the school and advisory committees for the tours conducted by Collins and Paul Callahan, principal of the Deer Hill School.

Voters at the special town meeting Dec. 6 will be asked to set the stage for renovating and expanding the two 50-year-old school buildings by appropriating money to pay for construction drawings. The school committee is considering building options that hover around $15 million after state reimbursement of 60 percent of the total cost is taken into account.

Maintenance and building problems were widespread at both schools. Mechanical and wiring problems mean the fire alarm, sprinkler, telephone, bell and public announcement systems at the middle-high school are either out-dated, in disrepair or both.

"We're not up to code on virtually anything here," Collins pointed out at the start of the tour.

The middle-high school tour wound its way from the main office through the guidance and nurse's offices into language, computer and science labs, gymnasiums, locker rooms, boiler rooms, library and cafeteria.

At one point, members of the tour looked out on top of the roof, on which strips of grass had poked their way through the roofing material.

Nearly all the lockers that line the corridors needed repair.

"I've had locker restoration in four consecutive budgets," Collins said. "But it gets removed as the process unfolds."

At the Deer Hill School, Callahan talked about cramped conditions, especially in the teachers' room,

State provides build-out analysis for Cohasset

By Jeanne M. Rideout

What will neighboring Cohasset be like if every buildable acre of land is developed according to current zoning?

The population will be 10,769. That's 3,196 more people than today.

There will be 459 additional students in the town's public schools.

If Cohasset is built up according to current zoning, how will the town's handle the additional 459 pupils?

If Cohasset is built up according to current zoning, how will the town's handle the additional 459 pupils?

There will be 1,274 more households and water consumption will rise to 932,212 gallons per day, an increase approaching 50 percent

How will the town cope with the additional traffic generated by thousands of more cars and the rivers of asphalt poured to convey them? Buildout means 15 more miles of roads.

How will the open space, the watershed and the shoreline of coastal communities like Cohasset and Hingham be preserved?

These were some of the issues addressed at the Community Preservation Summit hosted by Bob Durand, secretary of the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA) on Oct. 29 at Hajjar's Restaurant in East Weymouth.

Durand presented a "buildout analysis" for Cohasset and Weymouth demonstrating what each town would look like if every buildable acre of land were actually developed according to the town's current zoning.

"Buildout analyses are a major tool EOEA is using to help communities preserve their natural resources

Hedlund loses bid for mayor

Will he be vulnerable in 2000?

Robert Hedlund's defeat in Weymouth mayoral election temporarily puts the brakes on for those candidates eyeing his state senate seat

The Republican state senator lost in his bid Tuesday to become Weymouth's first mayor, losing out to Weymouth Fire Chief David Madden by a vote of 9,844 to 8,256.

In accepting his defeat, Hedlund said Madden had his work cut out for him.

"David Madden has a monumental task ahead of himself to implement the transition and make this whole process work for the citizens of Weymouth," Hedlund said. "I am ready to assist Mayor Madden in making the transition work and to continue to work hard for the residents of Weymouth at the state level."

A number of candidates had been waiting in the wings in the event Hedlund won. An election to fill that seat likely would have been scheduled for January, but now the candidates will have to wait until next fall when Hedlund is up for re-election.

At least five candidates had expressed early interest in the senate seat. They included former Marshfield selectmen and

Override revisited

$1.3M warrant article reduced to $390,000

The talk of grade configuration changes in the Cohasset school district will remain just that for a while longer.

Even with the Dec. 6 special town meeting fast approaching, at which funds for architectural drawings could be appropriated for the project, the school committee declined last Wednesday to pick an option for the renovations of Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle High School.

"This is an issue taken extremely seriously by this committee," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "We've been reading, studying, and talking to people in

$8,750 for teen center coordinator

Selectmen voted 3-2 on Tuesday night to recommend an $8,750 article at the special town meeting to hire a teen center coordinator for the remainder of the fiscal year.

Selectmen Merle Brown and Thomas Callahan were opposed to recommending the article, which members of the youth resources committee have said is necessary for the viability of the new teen "garage".

Selectman Fred Koed spoke for the majority, saying that the hard work of many in town would be wasted without a town contribution.

"A lot of teenagers and adults have worked incredibly hard to make the new teen center a reality," he said. "I think they've done a tremendous job and deserve some support from the town."

School renovation article okayed

On the heels of a tour of Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle High School that one selectman termed 'disgusting,' selectmen unanimously voted on Tuesday to recommend a $390,000 warrant article that pay for schematic drawings for the school renovation project.

Passage of the article will be contingent on a debt-exclusion override election, to be held Dec. 11. The schematic drawings, which are to be done by architects from the Hingham firm Strekalovsky and Hoit, will allow the project to stay on course for submission to the state on June 1.

State reimbursement of 60 percent would likely lower the overall cost to Cohasset to between $14 and $15 million.

Town history article

Selectmen voted unanimously on Tuesday to recommend a $30,000 warrant article at special town meeting to pay for the production of a third volume of the town history.

The third volume of the town's history will cover the years from 1950 to 2000.

Conservation article not recommended

Saying that other expenditures presented a greater need, selectmen voted unanimously to not recommend a $5,000 appropriation to the conservation fund at special town meeting.

"I think the police and fire studies and the senior housing survey are more valuable right now, said selectman Ronnie McMorris.

Before recommending removal of the article from the warrant completely, selectman Fred Koed suggested that fairness dictates hearing the opinion of the conservation commission.

Senior housing survey sought

A $5,500 senior housing survey is to be conducted by the McCormack Institute at UMass-Boston if the article is approved at special town meeting.

Selectmen voted unanimously to recommend the survey as part of a larger article at that meeting, despite concerns from selectman Diane Sullivan that a survey will simply document a need that the community already knows is there.

"I'd like to see us get to work on a solution rather than spend money on another study," she said.

Barbara Anglin, who served as chairman of the housing committee of the council of elder affairs, said the survey is needed to quantify the need that exists for senior housing.

"The survey will provide us with recommendations for solutions," she said. "We designed a survey tool but we don't have the ability to do the cross-analysis. UMass-Boston will provide that for us."

Town hall hours change next week

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced that Town Hall hours will change, effective next week. Town Hall will now be open until 7 p.m. on Tuesday instead of Thursday.

Red Lion Inn unveils future plans

Owner hopes for March opening for revamped village landmark

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset Village has been home to its own mini-Big Dig in recent months while the Red Lion Inn undergoes a $4 million renovation. The sights and sounds of construction have been omnipresent and some residents have wondered if the revamped inn will be too upscale for the village.

Owner Gerd Ordelheide said he is cognizant of those concerns and ensured that the Red Lion will only add to a hometown village atmosphere. He intends for the inn's 94-seat restaurant, Les Roches, to be a village meeting place for Cohasset residents.

"I wanted a family restaurant from the start," said the 57 year-old Ordelheide. "I want the people who have grown up here and used to eat here to come back again. I want to make it a common place, not something upscale."

The restaurant is only one part of Ordelheide's plans for the renovated inn. Located on the second and third floors of the Red Lion, originally built in 1704, will be 15 luxury suites. The rooms will be priced from $225 to $375 a night, but Ordelheide said the amenities will be worth the price.

"There will be a fireplace and jacuzzi in every room," he said. "The ceilings are high and will feature exposed wooden beams. They'll really be beautiful."

The Lion's Den bar will share the first floor with the restaurant, Les Roches. The bar retains its previous name, but the name Les Roches was a marriage of town history and coincidence.

"Les Roches means 'the rocks' in French," explained executive chef Brendan Noble. "The name originally given to the town by the Algonquin Indians was Quonahasset, meaning 'the long, rocky place.' Also, the chef du cuisine will be Emmanuel DuBois, who is coming from a restaurant in France also called Les Roches. Everything pointed to using that name."

Below the restaurant and bar will be a spa, jazz club, and wine cellar. Ordelheide has special plans for each.

"The jazz club will be open on Friday and Saturday nights, but we'll have security to make sure everything is under control," he said. "The spa will have a sauna and whirlpool, while the wine cellar will feature an archway of granite fieldstones."

The Lilac House, adjacent to the Red Lion Inn on South Main Street, will serve as a function area for parties of up to 80 people. A covered walkway is planned between the second floor of the Lilac House, where functions will be held, to the second floor of the Red Lion Inn, allowing guests of the Inn to walk to their function without fear of the elements.

"The spa will have a sauna and whirlpool, while the wine cellar will feature an archway of granite fieldstones."
— Gerde Ordelheide, owner

The first floor of the Lilac House will be home to a bakery, bistro, and old-fashioned retail store.

"I think all three of those uses will really add to the character of the village," Ordelheide said.

The back of the Red Lion Inn will feature an outdoor eating area, from which those dining will be able to see guests swimming in the 18' x 38' open pool.

"We're going to have flowing water cascading into the pool from the rocks above," Ordelheide said.

A proposed two-story function barn is planned adjacent to the pool. The post and beam structure could house functions of up to 160 as well as act as a lounge area for guests of the inn, Ordelheide said.

Despite not opening for at least five months, phones at the Red Lion Inn have been ringing busily with people reserving function dates.

Those planning a function at the Inn can choose between menus ranging from $35 to $75 per person, or build their own customized menu.

"There are a few different ways people can choose their menu," Noble said. "The preset menus get more sophisticated as you go along, so the entrees on the $35 menu might be salmon or chicken, while the $75 menu would feature lobster. They get more sophisticated as you go along.

"People can also plan their own menu, and can choose added features like a raw oyster bar or a caviar station. People can really let it all hang out."

The menu at The Lion's Den will be a definite departure from the function menu, as Noble sought to achieve simplicity in the food at the bar.

"We wanted the bar food to be scaled down," he said. "We'll have items like eight-ounce burgers, dim sum, grilled tuna sandwiches, and club sandwiches. We want people to be able to pick the food up with their hands, for the most part."

Les Roches will feature a more extensive menu than The Lion's Den in an atmosphere which Noble described as sophisticated. Guests of the restaurant will be able to see the chefs at work, as the kitchen will be completely open. The walls will be of paneled wood, which Ordelheide said would help the restaurant maintain some of the old-world feel of the building.

"The paneling will allow us to blend in the old with the new," he said. "We're keeping a few parts of the original building, including the post which says '1704.' The wood paneling is elegant but keeps the older look."

As for the restaurant's menu, Noble said he tried to incorporate traditional favorites with a bit of added flair.

"We have braised pork ribs on the menu," for instance. "I thought ribs would be great for the menu, but I couldn't just make some baby back ribs and serve them with barbecue sauce. I had to think of a different way to do it. So we put a bunch of Asian spices in and slow roast the ribs, so they literally pop right off the bone."

Other main course items include a veal t-bone and venison, as well as seafood, beef, and chicken dishes. Noble said the menu will vary with the seasons.

"The menu will change with what's available and what's good," he said. "We want to keep the restaurant in tune with what's going on outside its walls."

Ordelheide said he also wants to ensure that the restaurant becomes a familiar gathering place for residents in town.

"We're keeping the price level down ($14-24 for entrees) because I don't want it to be fancy," he said. "I don't want any barriers between the rich people in town and the fishermen who have been here for years. I want everyone to come. In the winter, I'd like to have an outdoor Christmas market. I want it to be part of life in the village."

The Red Lion Inn's original fireplace and stove will be restored.

Cohasset teens go on Halloween rampage ents," Noonan said. "They have to take responsibility for what their kids do.

"We can't lock everyone up," he said about the fact police made just one arrest. "We don't get any support from parents. It's an impossible situation."

Selectman Thomas Callahan agreed with Noonan that parents must be held accountable for the actions of their minor children.

"This all comes down to the personal responsibility of children and their parents. Parents have to know where there children are and what the kids are doing."

Police put two extra officers on for Halloween and the overtime costs the taxpayers, Noonan said.

"It was nasty," he said. "Next year, no matter what the cost, we'll have 10 people out there."

Sgt. Robert Jackson said police arrested Kenneth D. Portanova, Jr., age 17, of 50 Elm Court and charged him with being a disorderly person, resisting arrest and minor transporting an alcoholic beverage. he was arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court with a further court date set for Dec. 28.

Reached by telephone, the teen's mother Christine Portanova, said it was an unfortunate incident.

"Things escalated out of control so quickly," she said. "There were 100 kids roaming down there.

"Unfortunately my son is paying the price for what other kids did."

Quigley said teens, who know the names of those involved with vandalism, should call the anonymous tip line at 383-9406.

"Give us a call," he said. "And we'll have the detective go visit some people."

State provides build-out analyses for Cohasset and unique characteristics," Durand said.

Buildout analyses provide information to towns so they can make sound choices about growth before uncontrolled development makes those choices for them, according to Durand.

The community preservation summits tell towns, "This is what will happen, and this is how we can help," Durand said.

EOEA has a grant program that provides funds to communities to help them develop growth plans that balance environmental protection and economic development and many other resources.

Cohasset now has 67,595,687 sq. ft. of developable land. Buildout under current zoning means 1,004 additional residential lots and 1,140,728 sq. ft. of commercial/industrial floor area.

Weymouth has taken a major step forward in beginning to control what the town will look like when buildout occurs. The planning board in August awarded an $80,000 contract to the Cecil Group, a Boston consulting firm, to create a master plan guiding the town's growth over the next 20 years. The plan will deal with issues such as traffic, the restoration of Old Colony's Greenbush line, and redevelopment of the decommissioned naval air station in South Weymouth, historic preservation, and protection of open space and waterfront areas. Weymouth's last master plan was drawn up in the late 1960s and led to a townwide zoning overhaul in 1969.

The new master plan will probably trigger some zoning changes, according to Jim Clarke, the town's director of planning and community development. It is difficult to say how comprehensive the changes will be.

What these changes will be is in the hands of the new mayor.

Friday's summit in Weymouth, the 11th in a series of meetings across the state, was for rivershed and coastal communities Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Duxbury, and Weymouth. Buildout analyses for all these coastal towns are currently in the works, according to Durand, and the analyses of Weymouth and Cohasset are completed.

Citizens and town officials from these communities filled the dining room at Hajjar's for the presentation co-hosted by Director of Housing and community Development Jane Gumble, Director of Economic Affairs Carolyn Bouviard, state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Reps. Paul R. Haley, Frank M. Hynes, Ronald Mariano, Francis L. Marini and Mary Jeanette Murray. Also co-hosting were the Back River Committee, Fore River Watershed Association, Gulf Association, North and South River Watershed Association, and Weir River Watershed Association.

EOEA urges support of the Community Preservation Act currently before the legislature that would provide $195 million to local towns and cities to develop master plans and open space plans.

"For many of us, the treasured open spaces of our childhood have disappeared and historic landmarks have been replaced or destroyed. Urban sprawl has crept into communities without warning. Our landscapes have been dismantled before our eyes," Durand said.

Since 1980, the amount of developed land in Massachusetts has increased by 36 percent, while population has increased by only 6 percent.

After the presentation, a representative from each community came up to the microphone and told EOEA about their town's concerns.

Some concerns are shared by all. These include preserving historic town squares, protecting and preserving coastal areas, protecting the watershed, dealing with car "stack-ups" and reconnecting children to the natural world.

Some towns have unique issues, such as "boat sprawl" in Hingham and the "mansion-ization" of cottages in Duxbury.

Planning growth is a delicate balance among the environment, the economy, and the needs of the people.

The tension is apparent between the right to development by a few and the right to enjoy a community's natural resources by many.

One representative from Hull spoke eloquently about how a pending apartment development along the beach would affect residents.

"When I drive along the beach on my way to work early in the morning, I see a pink sun rising over Nantasket. Everybody wants to be near the beach, but if you construct an apartment building on the shore, a few people will have a view of the ocean at the expense of many," she said.

Hingham's representatives expressed the town's concerns about protecting open space, such as at World's End, and placed great importance on preserving Hingham's neighborhood characteristics and sense of community. Potential additional traffic from redevelopment of the naval air station is another major issue.

Hingham's buildout analysis is expected to be completed by June, 2000.

Weymouth is already dealing with shores made invisible by wood frame, brick and concrete block.

"It is very easy to drive through Weymouth and not realize it is a coastal community," Jeff Thayer of the Fore River Water Association said.

Hedlund loses bid for mayor of Weymouth current Weymouth resident and Democrat Jim Cantwell; Democrat Timothy White of Hingham; Democrat Philip Edmundson of Hingham; Democrat Ted LeClair of Marshfield; and Hingham selectman and Republican Martin Crane.

Political pundits on the South Shore say they believe interest in the seat will remain high as Hedlund, a seven-year state senator, could be potentially vulnerable. But several also caution that a year is a lot of time and voters' memories tend to be short.

Following the September primary in which Madden came in first with Hedlund trailing by 500 votes, Hedlund acknowledged he was the underdog. He said he had an uphill battle against Madden. Hedlund said Madden had extensive family ties in Weymouth and that worked to the fire chief's advantage.

Asked Tuesday night at his campaign headquarters whether he would run for the state senate again, Hedlund said, "This isn't the time to be thinking about that."

Reached at his campaign office on Wednesday, Hedlund "it's most likely" he will run for a fourth term when his current term expires next year. He said he felt he's at the "top of my game at the State House." Because of that he made the decision he could benefit the town by serving as its first mayor, he said.

On Tuesday, Sen. Hedlund had kudos for his volunteers.

"It was a great effort," Hedlund said. "After the primary, the cavalry came in from other campaigns."

Hedlund pledged his support of the new government and continued support of the town.

Madden will be a "strong mayor." He will appoint, subject to a review by town council, all town officers, department heads and committees, with the exception of school committee and town council itself. His appointments will include the directors of the department of public works, municipal finance, planning and community development, human resources, and municipal licensees and inspectors. The mayor will also submit the proposed operating budget to the town council, which has the power to delete funding but no power to increase the budget or add programs.

Selectmen reject Haddad's proposal for finance director

Town Manager removes article from warrant

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Town Manager Mark Haddad saved discussion of his proposal for a new finance director for last at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, seeming to sense impending doom for the initiative.

That sense became reality as his plan of reorganizing the finance department fell by the wayside when selectmen voted 3-2 not to recommend his proposal for the creation of a finance director position. The position was to be filled by current town accountant Michael Buckley who would add the duties of finance director to his current responsibilities.

In voting against the proposal, selectman Merle Brown said any expenditure for the proposal seemed unnecessary. Haddad had asked that Buckley receive a $1,500 increase in salary for the rest of the fiscal year as part of the proposal.

"The town is working great the way it is," Brown said. "There aren't major financial problems here."

Haddad's proposal was to consolidate the town's three financial departments under one person, Buckley, who would then report to Haddad.

"What I'd like to do is similar to the DPW consolidation several years ago," Haddad explained to selectmen last Tuesday. "The town used to have separate highway, tree, park, cemetery, and refuse departments. These have now been consolidated under one department, headed by the DPW superintendent. It has worked very well and has allowed for shared resources and better accountability."

"My concern is who appoints the position. I'd like to have an individual who is solely responsible to the Board of Selectmen."
— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

Haddad said a senior-level financial officer would help ensure similar accountability in the financial department. Currently, that department is made up of three individual departments: the treasurer/collector's department, the assessors' department, and the town accountant's department. The heads of those three departments each report to Haddad individually.

A finance director would be in charge of all three departments, allowing for flexibility to deal with turnover or the extended absence of an employee as well as allowing for shared resources. Haddad said the benefits of a finance director go beyond simply enhanced accountability within the finance department.

"During the course of our annual town audit, the auditor suggested that we evaluate the cost/benefit of appointing a senior-level financial officer," he said. "Right now, we rely too heavily on banks to do our reconciliation. Also, no one person has responsibility over our debt process. The director of finance would be responsible for those and we'll be better off. We might even be able to improve our already strong bond rating."

Because Haddad requested the authority of appointing a financial director, selectman Ronnie McMorris thought the proposal would put too much power in the hands of the town manager.

"My concern is who appoints the position," she said. "I'd like to have an individual who is solely responsible to the Board of Selectmen."

Haddad, who had a similar debate with McMorris at last week's selectmen's meeting, seemed frustrated by her insistence on the selectmen having appointing authority over the position.

"I am your voice," he told McMorris. "I am the chief financial officer of the town and I am directly responsible to the Board of Selectmen. If you don't think a town manager is doing a good job, you can fire him."

Haddad also doubted whether his appointing authority would inhibit town department heads from voicing an opinion different than his own.

"I appointed the Fire Chief [Roger Lincoln]," he said. "That didn't stop him from coming up here and saying I was wrong to want to cut back shifts at the fire department."

McMorris and Brown remained unmoved by Haddad's protestations and were joined by selectman Fred Koed in voting not to recommend the proposal.

Even though the proposed article could still have been included on the warrant for the special town meeting, Haddad asked that it be removed.

"I don't want to do this unless we have unanimous support among the selectmen," he said.

$430K for fire dept. vehicles recommended

Town's insurance rating may be at risk without purchase

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Without three operational pumping fire engines, Cohasset homeowners could see an increase in the cost of their homeowners insurance. While the relationship between the number of fire engines in the town and the cost of homeowners insurance might seem curious at first glance, an inadequate supply of fire engines could hurt the town's insurance rating.

"The Insurance Service Organization (ISO) looks at all parts of a town's infrastructure," explained Town Manager Mark Haddad. "They look at things like the fire department, crime rate, and building codes. They then give the town a rating based on that information. If the rating goes down, as it could with only two pumping engines, the cost of homeowners insurance could go up as a result."

In arguing for a $430,000 warrant article at the Dec. 6 special town meeting for a new pumping fire engine and a multi-service vehicle, fire chief Roger Lincoln said the town's insurance rating was a concern.

"We cannot meet ISO ratings for insurance purposes with two pumping engines," he said. "We've got to have three."

The $430,000 would be borrowed but would fit under the town's debt cap, according to town accountant Michael Buckley.

"We've had old bond issues that are now paid off, such as work on the old Osgood school and sewer projects," he said.

"We cannot meet ISO ratings for insurance purposes with two pumping engines. We've got to have three."
— Fire chief Roger Lincoln

Lincoln would like to replace the oldest of the three pumping engines in the department, a 1979 model currently out of service, with a new, $300,000 pumper.

"Our mechanic, Bill Protulis, has already welded together one leak in the water tank, and another one developed in September that he couldn't fix," Lincoln said. "It's time to replace this engine. It's 20 years old."

If approved by the special town meeting, the new pumper would be pressed into service immediately.

"This will become the new front-line pumper," Haddad said. "That will allow us to get more life out of the two other pumping engines."

The other truck on the $430,000 warrant article is the $130,000 multi-service vehicle, although Haddad thinks the town will be able to purchase it for significantly less than that amount.

"We're looking to buy the chassis off the state bid list for $41,000 and we've gotten an estimate on the custom-made body of $60,000," Haddad said. "We can probably get this truck for around $100,000."

The current truck used for forest fires has been out of service since mid-April. The multi-service truck is small enough that it can get to places, such as forests, that the large engines cannot, but it is also equipped with a large enough water tank to put out most fires.

"The big pumpers might get stuck at some point trying to reach certain areas," Lincoln said. "The multi-service vehicle can reach those areas. It also has a 400-gallon tank, so it can put out a large percentage of fires."

Selectmen voted 4-1 at their Tuesday meeting to recommend the article at special town meeting. Selectman Fred Koed explained his reasoning in voting to recommend the article.

"This is a public safety issue," he said. "I think we need these trucks. Also, a negative change in the town's ISO rating would adversely affect homeowners."

COHASSET'S WEEK

Pooper-scooper regulation passed

The health board passed a regulation last week requiring all dog owners to pick up after their pets or face fines.

The regulation becomes effective on Jan. 1.

Animal control officer Paul Murphy said he receives the most complaints about dog feces on the town common, ball fields and private property.

He admits that the law will be difficult to enforce.

"It's hard to enforce any law 24 hours a day," he said. "But at least the regulation is a tool we can use to address the problem.

"If we see a flagrant violation, we can go after (the dog owner)," he said.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Nov. 16.

Deadline for community copy

The deadline for submitting community copy for the Cohasset Mariner is 8 a.m., Friday for the following week's issue. Letters and obituaries will be accepted until noon, Tuesday. THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

RECOGNIZING A PATTERN

Patterned carpet is often preferred for use in dining rooms and high-traffic areas, where it camouflages spots and spills. The most popular of carpet patterns are "organics" such as leaves, swirls and waves; however, the uniformity of geometrics, such as plaids, remains a popular option. When choosing patterned carpeting, bear in mind that it is good to have at least eight to ten repeats of the motif to establish its rhythm. Remember that solid furniture will hide much of the design, while leggy furniture will be more revealing. Also be sure to vary the scale of pattern on your carpet, upholstery, and draperies so that each of the individual elements stands out.

The interior design specialists of THE DESIGNING WOMAN can take the mystery out of the carpet selection process. Our objective is to help create beautiful rooms that add comfort to your life and value to your home. Our services include creating a thoughtful and individualized design plan and coordinating colors, patterns and fabrics. Often, we can improve the look and feel of any environment by working with your existing furniture and accessories. Call us at 383-6411 to learn more about our services or to arrange a convenient consultation.

Hint: Textured carpet enables homeowners to choose neutral colors and still add to a room's interest with sculpted effects.

AROUND TOWN

VOLUNTEER OF THE YEAR

Guess who is sporting a brand new award? Jessica MacDonald! Jessica, a 1993 CHS grad and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe MacDonald, received her plaque for being the Volunteer of the Year — outdoor explorations is her claim to fame.

Congratulations go to you, Jessica, keep up your good work!

NEW OCTOGENARIAN!

Let's begin this week with a special wish for a very special lady — Florence Protulis just celebrated her birthday last week; she turned 80 years young! We'll bet that the party at the Barker Tavern was a happy one indeed! Hugs and kisses to you!

ON THE MEND

I'm happy to report that Dennis Kuntz is okay after being in a car accident recently — he's up and around, but has a very sore arm. Hope it's all better real soon, Dennis!

FUNDRAISER FOR CTA

The Cohasset Teachers Association is selling Entertainment Books as a fundraiser for their scholarships. The cost is $20, the benefits are many — there are coupons for everything from restaurants to dry cleaning! Just use two or three and you have your money back! They are available at all three schools, purchase yours today!

OFF TO HARVARD

Benjamin Littauer has enrolled at Harvard College this fall as a member of the Class of 2003. The 1,650 first-year students were selected from a pool of more than 18,000 applicants in a rigorous admissions process.

Benjamin is the son of Thomas and Theresa Littauer and a 1999 graduate of Cohasset High School; in high school he wrestled for a Division III state finalist wrestling team and played varsity soccer. He was also a member of the National Honor Society

BRANDNEW GRANDPARENTS

Russ and Jean Lennon are delighted — they are grandparents! Their daughter, Therese, and her husband, Rob, presented them with Harrison Shorey Joslin Aug. 22; Harrison weighed 9 pounds seven ounces, a bouncing baby boy indeed! Therese (CHS grad, class of 1984) and Rob live in Matinecock, N.Y.

Harrison's paternal grandparents are Bob and Marilu Joslin of Manchester, Conn.

Congrats to all of you, we cannot wait to see that beautiful baby!

HIGH FIVES TO ATHLETES

A High Five goes to two Cohasset gentlemen — both play at Trinity College, both are on the soccer team.

Freshman forward Morgan Sandell registered a hat trick against the Vassar Brewers to raise his team-leading total to six goals; junior Brett MacQuarrie had one goal and one assist in the same game!

We are sure to hear more about these two in the future.

NEW ARRIVAL

Give a huge Cohasset welcome to Chase Alexander Bomeisler, who was born Oct. 14. He weighed 7 pounds 15 ounces and was 22 inches long. He is the son of Melissa and Stuart Bomeisler and the brother to Dylan Bomeisler, all of Cohasset.

Chase's grandparents are Carolyn and Armstrong Forman of Gates Mills, Ohio, and Anne and Douglass Bomeisler of New York, N.Y.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, HARRY!

Let's hear it for Harry E. Barber of Westborough who turns a very spry 97 on Friday.

Harry has a Cohasset connection. He is Martha Gjesteby's dad! Martha, who lives on Old Pasture Road, called us with the news.

Harry has two children, eight grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

Have a super day and best wishes for many more happy birthdays!

DREAM COME TRUE

As many people know, our very special athletic director has had a wish for some time — a golf cart to aid the fields in case of injury, "lugging equipment, helping the handicapped etc." Well, thanks to Rob Gledhill and Missy Hobson, his wish came true! And what a surprise it was!

Clark was at a soccer game and they told him to open the Underground for something, and there it was — a brand new cart! Words cannot express how happy he was (and is); what thoughtful people and what a wonderful gift, both to the town and to Clark!

Kudos to you both and hearty thanks from all of us!

ROUND OF APPLAUSE

Finally, let us all give a round of applause to John Atkinson, Cohasset's own Marine who is in North Carolina helping relieve the effects of Hurricane Floyd — you are a very special person, John, and we are so proud of you and your efforts!!

That's it for this week; hopefully I will hear from you next time! Give me a jingle (383-0560) and it will be in print — it's as simple as that! Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street or sent by fax to 741-2931, attn. Sallyann.

Cohasset Village Fair is back

Planning for the Dec. 4 Cohasset Village Fair is well under way. The event is a collaboration of five of the village church communities and has a long history. This year there will be food, crafts and second-hand goodies for all.

The Appalachia Service Project, a Second Congregational Church youth program for community teenagers, will raise money for its annual trip by sponsoring Santa on the common with photo opportunities from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. In addition, a secret room where children can buy and wrap their parents' holiday gifts can be found at St. Stephen's. ASP will sell crafts as well.

First Parish Youth Group will sell first quality poinsettias at the fair. Look for fresh, fragrant Christmas trees (from First Parish) and artful boxwood trees and wreaths (from the Greek Orthodox Church, whose fair location will be Town Hall).

This year, St. Stephen's annual book sale will include CDs and videos, and live piano music played throughout the fair. A general store will feature yummy baked goods, homemade candy and an herbal pantry.

Second Congregational Church will sponsor a handcraft boutique as well as a spot to enjoy New England clam chowder, more yummy baked goods or even a grilled cheese sandwich.

Parishioners of the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church will be offering Greek pastries, jewelry and a White Elephant booth at their Town Hall location, in addition to the boxwood items.

You'll find the aromatic favorite Swedish Coffee Shop and the funky Annual Jumble Sale at First Parish, while Town Criers roam the common to remind you of all that's available. So, don't start your shopping yet. Wait for the bargains at the Village Town Fair to check off all the names on your list!

OPINION

An eye-opener

As advisory committee member Galt Grant says, you have to see it to believe it. While there are bright spots, the middle-high and Deer Hill schools — both of which are bumping up to 50 years old — are in appalling condition.

No one denies the fact that decisions have been made over the years by the school department to take the money set aside for maintenance and use it for other things — whether those were teacher salaries or textbooks.

But looking ahead that part can be fixed. The school committee needs to vote to allow the "town" side of Cohasset government to set up an umbrella maintenance department that includes all town buildings.

Without that vote — which would set the stage for an ongoing maintenance plan — the schools will have a tough time selling the some $28 million in repairs, expansion and renovations at the two schools to Cohasset taxpayers.

The good news is the projects will qualify for about 60 percent reimbursement from the state. That means that Cohasset would be able to get two "like new" schools for about $15 million.

But the bad news is the cost will be on top of other infrastructure improvements such as the installation of sewers and the new Osgood School, which have added to the tax rate.

But all that aside, there is no doubt the school buildings are in dire need of a complete overhaul.

On a no-holds-barred tour Saturday town officials and the Mariner got a firsthand look at how badly the schools need repairs and upgrades.

Cohasset isn't alone in having run-down and in some instances, deplorable school conditions. And over the years, the school committees here have behaved no differently than their counterparts in other towns when it comes to deferring maintenance projects.

Marshfield, Scituate, Norwell, Hingham and now, Hull, have either faced or are about to tackle major school building projects.

But nevertheless, bearing the cost of the school projects will be a bitter pill — but one Cohasset taxpayers should swallow. We don't see an alternative. According to a town facilities study conducted last year, just repairing the buildings alone would cost $15 million — and that's not reimbursable. To qualify for state money, the projects must accommodate increased enrollment or enhanced programs and have useful lives of 50 years.

As we go through this process, it's important to remember that the demographics of 50 years ago were quite different. The era heralded the onset of the baby-boomer generation. Young families with numerous children dominated the local landscape as towns built schools to accommodate them. The old schools, which they replaced, for the most part were wooden structures dating back to the 19th century.

Now after nearly half a century, we've come full circle. But today, families with children only amount to about 25 percent of the voting block. Education has changed. Buildings must be fully handicap accessible and accommodate the needs of the "information age."

But whether we have school-age children or not, we should care about the condition of our schools. Our school buildings are also "town" buildings. They reflect how we feel about our community. It's a matter of civic pride.

Being turned down as host for the state field hockey tournament due to the appalling condition of the high school locker rooms is unacceptable for any town never mind one like Cohasset.

Veteran diplomas bill passes Senate

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund announced the unanimous passage of a bill he co-sponsored to provide World War II veterans with high school diplomas. This bill is officially known as Senate Bill 1972.

Many young men were attending high school in the 1940's when the United States became involved in World War II. Whether drafted or as volunteers, many boys left school early to protect the honor of their country by fighting in the war. These cadets left the United States as high school boys and returned as wartime veterans. After facing the horrors of war, many did not return to the classroom and never received their high school diploma. In an effort to recognize the contributions and sacrifices of these brave individuals, Hedlund joined in petitioning the Legislature to pass a bill that would recognize World War II veterans in a way that most of them never thought possible.

Specifically, the legislation enables any school committee throughout Massachusetts to provide high school diplomas to any veteran who left high school for the primary purpose of enlisting in the military during World War II and who was honorably discharged when their service was complete. This bill received overwhelming bipartisan support of the Massachusetts Senate. The Department of Veterans Services, several veterans' organizations, and individual World War II veterans have also endorsed this bill, which will now advance to the House of Representatives for consideration. Supporters of this initiative are urged to contact their State Representatives to encourage their support of Senate Bill 1972.

QUESTIONS
THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on six roll calls and local representatives' votes on three roll calls from the week of October 25-29.
HOME INSPECTORS(S 1949) House 154-0, gave initial approval to a bill creating a new state board to license and oversee home inspectors doing business in the state. The proposal requires home inspectors to pass a written test in order to be licensed and to carry at least $250,000 in "error insurance." Supporters said currently anyone can call himself a home inspector because the industry is completely unregulated. They noted the measure will prevent homebuyers from being victims of the mistakes of incompetent inspectors. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).		Y
15 DAY TEMPORARY BUDGET(H 4843) House 139-16, rejected an amendment replacing the proposed 30 day $1.58 billion interim budget for November 1-30 with a 15 day $790 million one for November 1-15. The legislature has yet to approve a full fiscal 2000 state budget and has already approved four interim 30 day budgets. Supporters of the 15 day budget noted the legislature ends its formal sessions on November 17 and argued the 15 day budget will ensure the House is in formal session and can plan full budget and veto actions when the temporary budget expires. Opponents of the 15 day budget said it is an irresponsible gimmick which threatens the operation of state government and frightens the people of Massachusetts. They noted the legislature can call itself into special session to act on the full budget and vetoes. (A "Yea" vote is for the 15 day budget. A "Nay" vote is against it).		N
HMO INSOLVENCY(H 4848) House 154-0, gave initial approval to a bill designed to protect consumers in the event of the insolvency of their Health Maintenance Organization (HMO). Supporters said Massachusetts is the only state in the Northeast without HMO insolvency legislation. They noted the measure will regulate replacement insurance coverage and ensure that members cannot be billed for more than their co-pays and deductibles. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).		Y
RESTRAINING ORDERS(S 1889) Senate 36-1, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill repealing the current law which allows judges to dismiss assault and battery charges in domestic violence cases if the batterer and victim sign an "accord and satisfaction" agreement in which the victim agrees not to press charges. The bill also increases penalties for second violations of restraining orders and for carrying a dangerous weapon while violating one. Supporters argued that this current loophole in the law has resulted in judges dismissing serious domestic violence charges, despite the objections of prosecutors, because defendants have been able to manipulate their victims into signing a document to drop the charges. Opponents offered no arguments. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).	Y
TEMPORARY BUDGET(H 4843) Senate 37-0, approved a $1.58 billion temporary budget to keep the state operating through November 30 while a conference committee works out a compromise version of a $20.8 billion budget for the fiscal year which began July 1. Supporters said this fifth in a series of temporary monthly budgets is the only alternative to shutting down state government. (A "Yea" vote is for the temporary budget).	Y	Y
HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMAS FOR VETERANS(S 1972) Senate 37-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill allowing local high schools to award diplomas to any honorably discharged World War II veteran who left high school in order to serve in the armed forces. Supporters said it is time we honored these WWII vets who did not graduate from their high schools because they were overseas defending our nation. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y	Y
INCREASE CHARTER SCHOOLS(S 2027) Senate 21-17, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill increasing the allowable number of charter schools in the state from 50 to 120. The measure also increases the limit on a school district's total tuition payments for its students who attend charter schools from 6 percent to 9 percent of the district's net school spending. Supporters said these innovative schools have performed well and renewed many students' interest in learning. They noted thousands of children are on waiting lists to enter these schools. Opponents said it is too early to determine whether these schools are worthwhile and effective or are just a failed experiment which drains money from regular public schools. They noted these schools have already cost the state and local communities millions of dollars. (A "Yea" vote is for increasing the cap to 120. A "Nay" vote is against the increase).	N	N
FREEZE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE(S 2028) Senate 36-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill freezing unemployment insurance premiums paid by employers at this year's level instead of allowing an automatic scheduled increase from an average of $308 to $356 per employee to take effect in January. The payments go into a fund which pays benefits to laid off workers. Supporters said the fund is solvent because of low unemployment and noted the freeze will save employers some $119 million and ensure that the state remains business friendly. (A "Yea" vote is for the freeze).	Y	Y
MENTAL HEALTH PARITY(S 2029) Senate 37-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill requiring health insurance plans to provide mental health benefits for biologically based disorders like major depression and schizophrenia at the same level as other medical conditions. The plans would also be required to cover 24 outpatient visits and 60 days of inpatient treatment for all other mental disorders. Supporters said the bill will ensure that illnesses above the neck are treated the same as ones below the neck. They noted that current coverage for mental health benefits in many insurance plans is very low and often only covers $500 per year. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y	Y

When it comes to school buildings, seeing is believing

We ask you to see for yourself the poor physical condition of Cohasset's Middle-High and Deer Hill schools. For some time now we have been looking at the needs in these two buildings. Maintenance issues at the M-H School have been discussed for years, and the work has been approved by the town. Several years ago, the School Building Committee brought forward a renovation plan for the Deer Hill, but the town voted it down.

EDUCATION MATTERS

KATHY OFSTHUN

How bad is it? We met with a state inspector two weeks ago to tour the facilities. It did not take him long to make his determination. When we had finished with the Middle-High school tour, we sat around a conference table and waited for his assessment. He looked around, paused further, then stated, "This is a gut job. There is nothing in this building worth saving." He had the same message following the Deer Hill tour. Though we would like to think the state inspector was overstating things, he is very experienced and has nothing to gain. His interest is simply in saving money and making wise, long-term investments.

Many anecdotal reports confirm the inadequacy of our buildings:

• You've heard the locker rooms are atrocious, and they are. Visiting teams have refused to use them. And that's not all. There is a hose permanently coming into the boys' locker room from the roof which drains off the excess water above the gym.

• You see, the gym roof sags if there is a heavy rain or snowfall. So much so that, if it is forecast, we won't pull across the room divider because it cannot be pushed back when the roof sags under the weight of the water/snow.

• A student wearing mittens told me that the heating is so erratic that once in a biology lab the class could not perform an experiment because the organisms had frozen.

It is fair to ask, How could things have gotten so bad? There were several factors at work. We've been through years of tight fiscal management and budgets have not always been set where they need to be, e.g. this past spring the town voted in the lowest budget request, which required cutting custodians at all schools. This situation has been exacerbated by a tapping of maintenance to pay for more pressing, unexpected increases in other areas, most often Special Education - a state mandated expense. For years the school covered the large overages in Special Education rather than ask the town to find the money. Although Town Meeting has allowed some improvements along the way, e.g. accessible bathrooms and partial roof repairs, many projects were accomplished long after they first appeared on the capital budget plan. The schools have often been asked to postpone capital requests. The replacement of rusted, inefficient windows at the Deer Hill was turned down in the fall of 1998. This year, for the second year in a row, we have been asked to postpone technology. Lastly, the life expectancy of a school is not the same as a home or a library or a town hall. Daily, for 45 years, these buildings have been well used by hundreds of students and visiting teams. They have lived full, useful lives.

This situation has been exacerbated by a tapping of maintenance to pay for more pressing, unexpected increase in other areas, most often Special Education — a state mandated expense.

Attending a recent meeting of the School Building Committee were the School Committee, Superintendent, three Selectmen and the Town Manager. There was unanimous support for a December 6th, Town Meeting request for funds to keep the architects working through March. The funds would be used to prepare bid specifications for renovation of the two schools and keep us on a timetable that would put Cohasset on the June 2000 list. Construction bidding would likely follow in the late summer/early fall.

Options regarding grade configuration and new versus renovated are still being discussed, but the cost will be significant in any case. The very best thing for you to do is to see the buildings for yourself. I think every citizen needs to know firsthand just what is being discussed. The Selectmen, Advisory Board, PSO and Elder Affairs group have already taken or scheduled a tour. Please call the office for a group tour, e.g. you and a dozen neighbors, or join us in one of the upcoming public tours offered by our principals, Curt Collins at the Middle-High School and Paul Callahan at the Deer Hill:

M-High (ph. 383-6100):
Nov. 13	9: am, 10:30 am & 12 pm
Deer Hill (ph. 383-6115):
Nov. 19	10: am
Nov. 20	8: am

Your participation will help to increase understanding. As one tour participant said, "Imagine how far these kids could go if they had a great facility coupled with the academics they're already getting."

Cohasset police union responds to Halloween mayhem

Let me start off by saying that this letter is not designed to offend any parents who legitimately knew where their adolescent child was on Halloween. To those parents I offer my thanks and gratitude. To those who didn't, I offer you my condolences and the following information that you may or may not want to hear.

COMMENTARY

WILLIAM QUIGLEY

This Halloween, like many others, was a night of destruction and lawlessness. The scene in the village was one that would turn anyone's stomach. In place of young children trick-or-treating with their parents, the area was filled with an unruly mob of teenagers, Cohasset teenagers, committing senseless acts of vandalism and violence. Some of the night's highlights include:

• Thousands of dollars in damage to the new Osgood School and High School in the form of broken windows.

• Graffiti spray-painted all over the children's play park behind the old Osgood School. I would relate to you what they wrote, but it's not suitable for print in a newspaper. I encourage you to come to the Police Station and I'll show you the evidence photos.

• Personal property and businesses spray-painted and egged.

• Children beat-up and robbed of their Halloween candy.

• Police cruisers dented and damaged by teens throwing eggs and fireworks.

• Under-aged drinking

And my personal favorite, a 16-year-old Cohasset female, with her pants at her ankles, relieving herself on the Town Common in front of 100 by-standers.

If any of this seems shocking to the conscience, it should be. If your child left the house on Halloween dressed like "GI Joe" or a "Ninja" in full black garb with a back-pack, and is of high school age, I can assure you he/she was not trick or treating. He/she was amongst the pack of kids that participated in this ugly scene.

As Police Officers in your community, we try to do our best to keep this town safe, however, we can't do it alone. We need your help, support and cooperation. Children with no destination and no supervision equal a recipe for disaster. The Police Department does what it can with the limited resources that we have. We can't impose sanctions at a teenager's home, so we react the only way we can, and that's by turning the offender over to the courts. It's not a path that we enjoy taking, but it's all we have. There are far too many kids around to start calling parents when a senseless act of vandalism or other offense has occurred. Unfortunately the call you will get will be to bail out your child.

A quick trip or telephone call to the location where your child says he or she will be to confirm their presence may save you a trip to the Police Station and ultimately a trip to Quincy District Court. Please be reminded that we are not babysitters. We are here to help you and enforce the laws fairly and consistently and that is what we will do. Please know where your children are and whom they are with. Confirm their plans and network with other parents.

Again, my apologies to the parents who knew where their kids were that night, and thank you for caring. On behalf of the men and women of the Cohasset Police Department, Officer William P. Quigley is president of the Cohasset Police Association IBPO Local 641.

Margy Charles named Democrat of the Year

By Susan Kent
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee has named Margy Charles as this year's "Outstanding Democrat." This award is bestowed upon the individual whose life and works best represent the goals and fundamental beliefs of the Democratic Party.

Each of the members of "Co-Op 8," an association of democratic town committees from Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Marshfield, Scituate and Weymouth has chosen an "Outstanding Democrat" to be honored at a dinner dance and silent auction, sponsored by the Hull Town Committee, to be held Friday, Nov. 5, at the Red Parrot in Hull.

Give a job to a busy person and watch it get done. Give a task to Margy Charles and she will not only accomplish it, she will organize it and inspire others to join her. While maintaining an active career as a successful real estate broker at Hunneman/Caldwell Banker, Margy has time for everyone. She is presently the head registrar for the Town of Cohasset and sits on the Council on Elder Affairs. A proud Democrat, Margy is a long-time member of the Cohasset Town Committee. She has held many positions with the committee and is the current secretary. She is also very active in her church and serves as eucharistic minister at St. Anthony's in Cohasset. Margy assists at services and delivers communion to shut-ins and others who cannot attend.

Margy has spent her life in service to her home and her community. A list of elective and appointed offices does not come close to describing the amount of dedication and enthusiasm that Margy brings to every activity. Quietly, and in her own way, Margy has always made a difference.

When her children were still in school, Margy returned to college and earned a master's degree in Urban

Margy Charles

Education from Simmons College. She taught grammar school for several years in Roxbury, but her job was not over when the school bell rang. She brought her students to Cohasset in the summer for swimming and in the winter for ice skating. Not long ago, she had a call from a former student. This young man, who is now married with a child, hadn't seen Margy since he was in the second grade. He found himself on the South Shore and called, hoping she would remember him. Of course, she did. He told her that she was one of the most influential persons in his life. He remembers the swimming and his first introduction to lobster, but most important, he remembers that Margy listened and was the first to show him that many things were possible.

As the definition of grassroots activist, Margy is always concerned and always involved. She is the one holding the sign, collecting canned goods, opening her home to exchange students and encouraging young people to take an interest. While marching on Washington against the Vietnam War, picketing in support of farm workers, walking for hunger or taking on the school committee to prove that due process and individual liberty are not just vague concepts, but rights to be protected, Margy's energy and dedication are sincere and always from the heart. She is presently involved in the fight for campaign finance reform in order to make the political process more equitable and open to everyone.

Margy was raised in Canton and spent her summers at her family's vacation home in Hull. It was here that she learned to sail, met her future husband, and knew that she would make her life on the South Shore. In 1958, the family moved to Margy's present home on Linden Drive in Cohasset. A good friend and a strong competitor, Margy continues to sail and is an avid bridge player. She is also the first one to "bring soup," bake a pie or do whatever it takes to help someone in need. Margy is the proud mother of two, her daughter Anne Craig is a veterinarian in Newbury and her son Fran Charles lives in Marshfield and is the sailing coach at MIT. Margy is also the very young, very active grandmother of eight, all sailors.

There are tickets still available for the Co-Op 8 Dinner Nov. 5. For information and tickets, call Agnes McCann at 383-0222.

Are you ready for Y2K?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Are you ready for Y2K, the turn of the millenium, the grandmother of all New Year's Eves, one that you may never see again if you live to be a hundred?

(Have you learned that there are two "n's" in millennium? I just did.)

Have you laid in the supply of canned sardines and bottled Evian water in case the food chain breaks down at your kitchen door? Is your generator in working order so you can play games of Mortal Combat on the TV to while away the apocalypse?

Remember, it's not possible to think of everything with Y2K less than a month away as the state of Maine learned just after it spent millions of dollars to convince its computer system that the year 2000 wasn't 1900 in drag.

Owners of about 800 passenger cars and 1,200 tractor-trailers of the model year 2000 got titles designating their vehicles as ":horseless carriages" just as they were called in 1900. Everything else was okay.

"You've got to be prepared for some event that's absolutely unexpected," said Irene Dec, the Y2K coordinator for Prudential, the insurance company.

Prudential has already set up a plan to keep 700 workers at their posts for the New Millennium Weekend, feeding them lobster and providing cots for them to rest. But no booze.

Of course, Y2K may come and go with all the excitement of a submarine race. One test of what could happen in the opening moments of Jan. 1, 2000, has already been taken and passed successfully by the computer industry.

Of course, Y2K may come and go with all the excitement of a submarine race.

There were fears that when Sept. 9, 1999 arrived the computers might read it as 9-9-99, one of the symbols used to shut down systems. Fortunately, Sept. 10 dawned to dusked with Western Civilization intact.

About the only thing left for most of us to do is decide how we are going to spend the wildest New Years Eve in 1,000 years. This is important because, after all, many of us will not have another chance.

The makers of the corks that go pop from champagne bottles as the band plays "Auld Lang Syne" have manufactured one billion this year, twice as many as a normal year, in anticipation of the rush on the carbonated grape juice.

We could, I suppose, greet Y2K in Times Square, New York, but we'll have to hurry before that nearby one-bedroom apartment that's renting for $85,000 for two weeks, is snapped up. (So help me, I saw that on television.)

And what will we be wearing to what Robert Rutkauskas, fashion director at Filene's, calls "the last great party of the century?"

Mia Antognini of Hampstead, N. H., is planning to wear a "decadent" red dress with bare back and sleeveless arms when she takes that New Millenium Eve cruise through the Panama Canal, booked last January.

Me? I'll be wearing moccasins, dungarees, the T-shirt from the Black Dog in Vineyard Haven and the splattered cap that warns "I'm going to kill all them damned sea gulls." I'll probably cruise to Haddad's Ocean Cafe.

And I'll be driving my '00 horseless carriage.

Early detection of Alzheimer's

Dr. Robert C. Green, M.D. will be the featured speaker at the Wednesday, Nov. 17, meeting of the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore. Dr. Green's topic will be "Early Detection and Prevention of Alzheimer's Disease: Methods, Markers and Misgivings." The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. at the Hingham Senior Center, located at the Hingham Town Hall, 224 Central St.

Dr. Green, who is associate professor of neurology at Boston University School of Medicine, has been a national leader in research projects involving Alzheimer's Disease and has been cited numerous times in Woodward and White's "Best Doctors in America" for Behavioral Neurology. He recently established an Alzheimer Disease Program at Georgia State University and co-founded the Georgia Alzheimer's Disease Consortium among the medical colleges and universities of Georgia.

For more information, call Joe Willard at 749-0795 or JoAnn Mitchell at 749-5417.

Respite care for an Alzheimer patient so that the family may attend this lecture is available at Harbor House. Reservations for respite care must be made in advance by calling Gervaise Haley at 749-4774 by 3 p.m. Nov. 17.

Residents urge Scituate selectmen to appeal cell tower ruling

By Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITER

Residents from Scituate and Cohasset urged Scituate selectmen to take action and appeal a court order allowing a cell tower on a site near the town line.

Torin Sweeney of Gannett Pasture Lane appeared before Scituate selectmen Tuesday night to plead for action on a federal court judge's order to grant a variance allowing the controversial cell tower be erected on property off Rt. 3A across from Jack Conway Real Estate Company.

The denial of the variance came as a result of one dissention, planning board member Jonathan Warner at a summer hearing. State law required an affirmative vote of four out of the five board members to push a special permit through. A possible four to one vote was precluded when David Nellis, the board's junior member, was forced to step down from the discussion and vote because he was elected after the tower's initial hearing, said planning board chairman William Limbacher.

Tower Ventures, Inc. of Providence, R.I. plans to construct the tower on a 40 by 70 foot easement located on a one-acre parcel of land adjacent to the Cohasset Collision Center. Tower Ventures refused to comment for this story.

The company appealed to federal court and in September, a judge overturned the denial.

Sweeney presented board members with a packet during the walk-in period at the selectmen's meeting, which was filled to capacity. The packet outlined four federal cases, one as recently as March 1999, in which similar cell tower variances were denied.

He urged selectmen to appeal the federal court's decision. Friday is the deadline to file an appeal.

"I don't think there's adequate time," said selectman Richard W. Lane.

"Cohasset will lose hundreds of thousands in tax abatements over the years due to the cell tower. Tell the Scituate Board of Selectmen that case law supports their right to appeal this decision."
Randy Patterson, 12 Ledgewood Farm Dr, to Cohasset selectmen

"It was a unanimous decision on the part of the planning board and selectmen to not go forward," said selectman Joseph P. Norton, referring to a joint executive session where town counsel apparently advised the groups the appeal would be unwinnable.

"The difficult thing for us is we're precluded from discussing a lot of the things that happened in executive session," said selectman Ralph Crossen.

But town counsel could file the appeal Friday and if, after further review, the consensus of opinion is still that the case can't be won, the town may drop the appeal, countered Sweeney.

Selectmen agreed to send Sweeney's packet to town counsel, if hesitantly.

"We zoned this strip of land an area that's an overlay district," said Crossen, that means cell towers are permissible.

"It's location is within the approved established district," said Lane.

Voters at Scituate's 1998 annual town meeting approved a wireless communication overlay district which runs form the Cohasset line to Tack Factory Pond on Route 3A.

"The district is clear. It shows on the maps but I don't think people knew a cell tower was going to go up in their back yard," said Sweeney.

"It's important to understand the tower bylaw was not held in a vacuum," said planning board chairman Limbacher.

Again Sweeney urged selectmen to reconsider their decision to not appeal the ruling. He questioned why the town never asked the plans be changed. "I contend the town of Scituate never pursued [the course of action] for a lower pole or an alternate site," said Sweeney.

"The planning board's obligation is to act on that application," said Limbacher. They don't go "running around" seeking alternate sites.

He then said the appeal process may cost up to $10,000 but the town should worry more about lost revenues from the many tax abatements it would have to issue from residents in the cell tower area.

"Given the exact same two houses, which will you buy? The one with the tower or the one without," asked Sweeney stating his property value will be diminished.

"I am very tired of fighting against this tower," he said adding common sense would tell you a 180-foot tower is unacceptable.

"Please do not turn your backs on the people you chose to represent when you ran for election," Sweeney told selectmen. "If we roll over on this I don't know what else we will roll over on," he said.

"I didn't pay to have a cell tower in my view," said Randy Patterson of Cohasset, who has been an outspoken opponent to the cell tower. In a letter to the editor, Patterson suggested the tower be moved to the Scituate Rod and Gun Club, out of site of the neighbors and residents.

"There's never been an application from the Rod and Gun Club," said Limbacher. The planning board can only act on applications before it and decide if the application complies or doesn't comply with current bylaws, he said.

"It's not that we don't want the tower," said Patterson. "Damn it, the telecommunications act also says you can put them where it's best for the residents." Patterson will be able to see the tower from every room in the front of his house, he said. He expects his property value to decrease between 10 to 25 percent.

"It's cheaper to fight this and get a conclusion," said Patterson. "Then cave in and have to give everyone a tax abatement."

A handful of the residents who attended the Scituate selectmen's meeting also appeared at the Cohasset selectmen's meeting later Tuesday evening to ask Cohasset selectmen to take action as well.

"Cohasset will lose hundreds of thousands in tax abatements over the years due to the cell tower. Tell the Scituate Board of Selectmen that case law supports their right to appeal this decision," urged Patterson.

Cohasset town manager Mark Haddad asked Patterson to bring him a copy of the federal decision first thing Wednesday morning. He will also write a letter to selectmen in Scituate urging an appeal of the federal decision, he said.

Tour gives firsthand look at school buildings

music room and cafeteria as he led the tour of his school. He pointed to numerous leaks on the stained ceilings and the outdated wiring in the classrooms, which have only two outlets. Numerous extension cords in the rooms were used to compensate.

In the boys' bathroom an outdated sink with a broken floor pedal meant that often the boys couldn't wash their hands when the pedal isn't positioned just right.

Callahan investigated the origin of some leaks when he came on board as principal about three years ago. He discovered leaves from a nearby tree by the cafeteria caused the roof drain to clog exacerbating the leaks there and a drainage pipe from the basement was also stopped up with debris. He had the tree taken down. The basement, which was constructed as the town's fallout shelter back in the 1950s, had flooded for years until the pipe was cleared.

Callahan took the tour group outside on the playground to get a better look at one exterior door at Deer Hill that is so rotted and damaged that there's a hole big enough for a small animal to crawl through.

The stains on one of 44-year-old classroom window shades still hanging at Deer Hill, prompted one tour-goer to wonder if it were actually a map.

Galt Grant, who sits on the advisory committee, said in a telephone interview Monday that the public needs to see the condition of the schools "to see how bad it is."

Both he and Brown, the selectmen chairman, agree that something has to be done.

"Looking ahead, money must be tied into the maintenance," Grant said. "It is so easy to just let it go and put money into education and to say 'we'll do that work next year.'

"The problem is next year never comes," he said.

Dan Evans of the advisory committee said town officials need to determine how best to approach the repairs.

"The town needs to carefully analyze the cost project by project," Evans said Tuesday. "And compare that with wholesale renovations with state help."

Evans said that regardless of which approach the town takes — project by project or wholesale repairs — the money will have to be borrowed with the debt spread out over 20 years, so there is no point in putting the projects off.

"We ought to think about how it should be done and sit down to do it," he said.

Evans, who described the condition of the buildings as something one would expect in a "depressed area," said maintenance of the school buildings needs to be turned over to the town.

"Cleaning and repair is a distraction for school administrators who need to be focused full-time on education," he said, adding that the high school could use some volunteer help.

"A corps of parent volunteers need to get involved at the high school to tackle the minor, more aesthetic projects, the way they have at Deer Hill," Evans said.

"The Deer Hill courtyard is very attractive and it was done with parent and student efforts," he said. "I think parents would be happy to pitch in if they were aware of some of the conditions that their kids have at school."

Despite the areas in need of upgrades and repair, there were bright spots in both schools.

Thanks to parents, the walls in many classrooms and corridors at Deer Hill were brightly painted. Art work and student displays filled the halls of the elementary school.

At the middle-high school, student murals, an art gallery, the renovated library and auditorium and the new computer labs were high points on the tour.

Collins, the middle-high school principal, will conduct tours for residents at 9 a.m., 10:30 a.m. and noon on Saturday, Nov. 13. For more information, call Collins at 383-6100.

Deer Hill tours are slated for 8 a.m., Nov. 19 and 10 a.m., Nov. 20. Callahan can be reached at 383-6115. *

Land could become part of Whitney and Thayer Woods

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

For sale: 8.3 acres of land on two parcels in Cohasset valued at the extremely reasonable price of $25,200. What's the catch? The land is in the middle of Whitney and Thayer Woods and unsuitable for building.

Technically, the property isn't for sale. The town seized the land a few years ago when the owners failed to pay their property taxes for an extended period. The land isn't really worth anything because conservation restrictions prevent anyone from building on the land. With that in mind, the selectmen voted at their Oct. 26 meeting to transfer the land to the control of the conservation commission.

"The land isn't worth anything, so the selectmen transferred it to the conservation commission so it could enter into a deal with the Trustees of Reservations to manage the property," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

The Trustees proposed the deal on Oct. 5. Land Protection Specialist Becky Siebens said the next step is for the members of conservation commission to contact the Trustees and indicate whether they are interested in the management proposal.

"In our view, conveying these properties to the conservation commission carries strong public benefits," Siebens said. "We believe this action by the Board of Selectmen presents a genuine win-win opportunity, benefiting the town, the visitor's enjoyment of Whitney and Thayer Woods, and the Trustees' mission to help preserve and protect for public use the special places in Massachusetts, of which Whitney and Thayer Woods is surely one. By helping to protect these two parcels from future development, the Board of Selectmen's action will also safeguard the ecological integrity of Whitney and Thayer Woods and the quality of each visitor's experience there for years to come."

"This is a wonderful opportunity to preserve this land, and we hope the conservation commission will accept our proposal."
—Becky Siebens,
Trustees of Reservations

Siebens said the Trustees are in a good position to manage the property for the conservation commission. The Trustees already manage Turkey Hill for Cohasset and Hingham. Several employees for the Trustees currently live in the area, and could easily extend their territory to include the new property. The conservation commission's land already lies in the heart of Whitney and Thayer Woods. The larger six acre parcel is near Bigelow Boulder, and the smaller 2.3 acre lot is near Ode's Den.

"Visitors to Whitney and Thayer Woods might not even notice that they are walking on the town's conservation land because there is no demarcation," Siebens said. "The land looks just like rest of Whitney and Thayer Woods."

If the conservation commission approves the management plan, the Trustees would clear trails through the land, keep out invasive species, and try to strike a balance between public use and ecological protection.

"This is a wonderful opportunity to preserve this land, and we hope the conservation commission will accept our proposal," Siebens said.

Whitney Thayer Woods offers people more than 12 miles of public trails, as well as hundreds of acres of natural woods and forest.

Selectmen are disgusted by condition of schools

Want maintenance of buildings taken over by the town

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Members of the school and school facilities committees succeeded at the Oct. 26 selectmen's meeting in convincing members of the advisory committee and the board of selectmen to attend Saturday's tour of Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle High School, to see for themselves the need for immediate repairs to those schools.

And see they did.

Selectmen assailed the state of the schools at their Tuesday meeting, arguing for the need of an immediate cleaning and for the town to take over the maintenance of the schools from the school department.

"I was absolutely appalled," said selectman Diane Sullivan. "The lack of cleanliness was disgusting. I don't think any children should be using bathrooms and locker rooms that don't look like they've been cleaned for years. I know these buildings are old, but there's no excuse for filth. Get some soap, water, disinfectant, and a steam cleaner and get in there. I think there should be an emergency cleaning of these schools."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said taxpayers deserve better maintenance of the buildings that they pay to keep running.

"These schools belong to the community," she said. "Taxpayers should be able to have an expectation that these buildings be kept clean. We need to get somebody into the schools whose main focus is maintenance."

Selectman Thomas Callahan said the visit cemented his belief that a major renovation project is a necessity, but said a lack of simple maintenance has made the problem worse.

"The trip was an eye-opener," Callahan said. "There's no doubt in my mind that we'll have to spend a lot of money to fix these schools. The high school was absolutely horrendous, but that's understandable because it's the oldest of the three. I understand that the buildings are just old and need to be fixed.

"At the same time, I saw a number of problems caused by a simple lack of routine maintenance. I saw holes that should be spackled, bathrooms that should be painted, and tile floors in the locker rooms that should be cleaned. There were lots of little things that I think were inexcusable and it shouldn't have been allowed to get to this point. We need to get the maintenance out of the school department."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said he would love for the town to take over the maintenance of the schools. He cautioned, however, that the transition may be problematic.

"We want to focus on education, not maintenance," he said of the school committee. "But it's not as easy as simply handing the maintenance over to the town. There are labor issues with the custodians and it takes a lot of money. The town will have to make a substantial commitment if you want the buildings maintained in the manner we'd all like them to be."

In fiscal year 1998, the school department spent $122,000 on maintenance and over $300,000 on custodians, according to figures read by school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo at the selectmen's meeting. The $122,000 spent on maintenance was well over $95,300 budgeted for maintenance that year.

In fiscal year 1999, the school department spent only $76,000 of a budgeted $112,000 on maintenance due to costs incurred in funding special education.

Still, DeGiacomo said the numbers should rebut a perception held by many that the school committee spend little to no money on maintenance.

"We've spent a lot of money on maintenance, but the schools are so old that it just isn't enough," he said.

Callahan had doubts as to whether the money for maintenance was being used properly.

"You're assuming that money was well spent," he told DeGiacomo.

School facilities committee chairman Rob Spofford said he was encouraged that selectmen fully realized the extent of the disrepair at Deer Hill and the middle high school.

"I think we're united that the work has to be done," Spofford said. "It's going to cost a significant amount of money and I hope that when it comes down to it, we'll all stand behind the $390,000 warrant article at the special town meeting."

That warrant article is to fund schematic drawings for a renovation option chosen by the school committee, who has yet to make that decision.

Spofford said the dilapidated state of the schools is evidence that funding for education is woefully inadequate.

"I hope we're finally coming to grips with the fact that there are serious deficiencies in the educational budget," he said. "There isn't enough money to go around.

"We know there are problems but what we need now are solutions. [Town Manager] Mark Haddad and the school committee are looking for a solution to the maintenance the problem."

Sullivan insisted that action must be taken immediately.

"All the talk in the world doesn't mean a hill of beans until the schools are cleaned," she said.

Connie Afshar, who has hosted two other METCO students in addition to Marcina over 12 years, says the experience has been completely positive.

"Cohasset doesn't offer that much in terms of racial diversity, and I saw hosting these kids as a great opportunity for my whole family," she said. "My daughter Amy and Marcina are the same age and they're almost like sisters now. Marcina is just a great kid from a great family. We've had only fantastic experiences."

The METCO committee of the PSO starts recruiting host families for the Boston students once the children are placed in Cohasset. Afshar said host families are essential to the success of the overall METCO program.

"It's really important to make the kids feel welcome," she said. "A lot of these kids will be in Cohasset five days a week for 12 years. If the kids feel welcomed, they'll be less defensive initially and do better in school."

Afshar said that those hosting METCO students are not and should not be expected to act as parents to those students.

"We're not a surrogate family for the students we've hosted," she said. "They have families. What we are is a wonderful resource for the Boston parents who have typical questions about teachers or classes."

Allison Moskow, a member of the PSO's METCO committee, said that Cohasset students and Boston students both benefit by learning from each other.

"What better time to expose all of these kids to worldly issues," she said. "The worlds that the Cohasset kids and the Boston kids grow up in are very different, and they're both sheltered in a way. The METCO committee would like to create more of an opportunity in the four schools to promote more social awareness between the Boston and Cohasset kids about each other's communities."

Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan said he has witnessed how both Boston and Cohasset students have benefited from the METCO program.

"I think the kids from Boston benefit from the academics and some of the intangibles that Cohasset provides," he said. "At the same time, the kids from Cohasset are able to interact with students of a different background and color. That's the real world."

"I also want to point out that I consider the Boston residents as Cohasset students, not Boston students. Once they enter these schools, they're the same as every other student."

The families of METCO students will gather with host families for the annual METCO dinner on Sunday. Nov. 7, from 3 to 6 p.m. at the Cohasset High school cafeteria.

Moskow said it's a valuable opportunity for the families of METCO students to spend time with host families and share some of the same interaction that the students do in school.

"Most of the METCO families come from Hyde Park, Dorchester, Mattapan, and South Boston," she said. "It's often difficult for the families to meet. This event is put on by the Cohasset families and it's a great time to just get together and talk."

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Annual METCO dinner is Nov. 7

The Cohasset METCO Committee will host the annual fall METCO Host Family Dinner. The event will be held on Sunday, Nov. 7, from 3 to 6 p.m. at the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

This event is a fun-filled get together that is one of the few opportunities for Cohasset METCO host families and school personnel to meet or become reacquainted with the Boston METCO families. This year's meal will be a harvest-themed dinner of roast turkey, shepherd's pie, macaroni and cheese, garden vegetables, bread, salad and a dessert buffet.

Please RSVP to PSO METCO representatives Olivia Baldwin (383-1866) or Allison Moskow (383-9242) or the METCO coordinator Yvonne Jones (383-2059).

Make a Difference Day rescheduled

Attention parents, neighbors and friends of the Cohasset Osgood School. Here is an opportunity to show your children another way you can make a difference.

Saturday, Nov. 6, at 9 a.m. Make a Difference Day will be in full swing at the Joseph Osgood School. Make a Difference Day is a national event sponsored by USA Weekend Magazine in partnership with the Points of Light Foundation in an effort to show the power of one person to make a difference.

This year there will be plenty of opportunities for parents and students to help out at the Osgood School. Efforts will be focused on playground cleanup and clearing the path for the new nature trail.

Any time you can give toward these worthwhile projects will be appreciated. To volunteer call Osgood at 383-6117.

AP scholars at CHS

Eleven students at Cohasset High School have been named AP Scholars by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement (AP) Examinations. Approximately 23 percent of America's graduating seniors have taken one or more AP Examinations. Only about 13 percent of the more than 635,000 students who took AP Examinations in May 1999 performed at a sufficiently high level to merit such recognition.

The College Board recognizes several levels of achievement based on the number of year-long courses and exams (or their equivalent semester-long courses and exams).

At Cohasset High School:

Two students qualified for the AP Scholar with Honor Award by earning an average grade of at least 3.5 on all AP Exams taken, and grades of 3 or higher on four or more of these exams. These students are Catherine Brister and Steven Sceery.

Five students qualified for the AP Scholar Award by completing three or more AP Examinations, with grade of 3 or higher. The AP Scholars are Anthony Bramblett, Justin Golden, Karyn Gray, Stephen Reynolds and Ryan Steel.

Four students qualified for the AP Scholar with Distinction Award by earning an average grade of at least 3.5 on all AP Examinations, and grades of 3 or higher on 5 or more of these exams. These students are: Luke Caldwell, Susana Candia, Benjamin Littauer and James O'Sullivan.

AP Examinations, which students take in May after completing challenging college-level courses at their high school, are graded on a 5-point scale (5 is the highest). Most of the nation's colleges and universities award credit and/or placement for grades of 3 or higher, and more than 1,400 institutions award a year of credit (sophomore standing) to students with a sufficient number of qualifying grades. There are 32 AP Examinations offered in 18 subject areas, each consisting of multiple-choice and free-response (essay or problem-solving) questions.

A win, and the boys are in!

STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High boys soccer team entered the season finale against Mashpee in a do or die situation.

A win, and they advance to the post-season. A loss, and it's wait 'til next year.

With their backs to the wall, the Skippers came out flying, scoring three goals in the first 10 minutes en route to an 8-1 blowout.

"Three goals in the first 10 minutes will help reduce the amount of stress on the coach," joked Juan Ramos.

Greg O'Connell and Tim Baird each registered a hat trick, while Matt Bilodeau added the other two.

"After the game, there was a parent sort of hanging around, and I was loading up the car," said Ramos. "I told him that people don't understand why we (coaches) do this, and it's because the kids did something today that they are never going to forget, and I had a small part in it."

The fact that they were even in a position to clinch shows how strong the Skippers resolve is. They beat Abington in a tough 1-0 game on a long shot by Peter Maitlin.

"That was an important game, because I knew we still had Hanover," said Ramos. "It was a tough game because it was played on their football field, and it affected us."

Even when they are losing, the team has looked good, as in the 4-0 loss to Hanover.

"We did ok," said Ramos. "They didn't dominate us like they did the first game. We had some chances."

Cohasset followed that up with a 3-0 win over Randolph.

"Before the game, I was very nervous," said Ramos. "We did not have practice the day before, but then I saw them in warm-ups, and I knew they were ready to play. Everybody played really well. The guys were just unbelievable."

Doug O'Brien scored the first goal, followed by O'Connell and Baird scores for the win.

The Skippers had a chance to wrap up a spot with two games left, but lost to Chatham 2-0.

"We played well, we just couldn't score," said Ramos.

That set up the dramatics for the Mashpee game. Now the Skippers are setting their sights on getting ready for the tournament.

"I saw them in warm-ups, and I knew they were ready to play. Everybody played really well. The guys were just unbelievable."
Cohasset coach Juan Ramos.

"There's some stuff we need to improve upon," said Ramos. "We have to play quicker and work on handling the balls in the air. That's what everyone seems to do in the tournament."

Ramos is concerned that his squad might not be ready tournament play.

"This week I had to raise my voice more than I used to," said Ramos. "The intensity isn't there that the other team's going to have. These kids have never been in a do or die game for both teams. They're not there, and I'm worried about that."

Having squeaked into the tournament, the Skippers will most likely have to play their first tourney game on the road.

"We've played well in road games, and you can't judge a team by its record," said Ramos, who is hoping his team will be around for a while. "I'd like to get in for a few games," said Ramos. "I don't want to just make it and get knocked out."

The Skippers should find out today who they'll be playing. The game could be on Friday or over the weekend.

Skippers host all stars, prepare for Wildcats

By Andrew Mahoney

It can be a stressful time to be a field hockey player.

The regular season is over, and that means the end of the season for some teams. For others, it means its time to get ready for the tournament and find out as much as you can about your opponent in the first round.

All of that was put on hold on Monday night as the all star game between the Patriot League and South Shore League was played at Cohasset High.

"It was so much fun," said Hanover coach Judy Schneider, whose team captured first place in the South Shore, allowing Schneider to coach the all stars.

Meehan, Pyfrom lead the way for Skippers

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

This outstanding season for the Varsity Field Hockey team has had many memorable highlights, including being the first Cohasset field hockey squad in history to record eight wins, qualifying for the tournament before the last game for the first time ever, and hosting the All-Star game, for which three of Cohasset's own suited up.

However, one the greatest accomplishments was the leadership from senior co-captains Jennifer Meehan and Melissa Pyfrom.

The two contrast greatly in some aspects of leading the team, but complement one another in other aspects.

For starters, the two captains' personalities are about as different as soccer and football.

Meehan is friendly and outgoing, and is the one any spectator will often see doing cartwheels on the sidelines and cheering for her teammates when she is not playing. Many of her teammates view Meehan as a big sister on and off the field, someone who is just fun to chat with.

"She is a fun loving kid with a heart of gold," said coach Debbie Bostwick, who has been extremely proud of the jobs both of her captains have done this year.

On the other hand, Pyfrom exhibits her leadership qualities more through her actions than words, always being early to practice and the last one to leave. Bostwick described her as the quiet type, who leads by example with strong play on the field, and good work habits off the field.

Though Pyfrom may not be as vocal as Meehan, she can get her message across just fine. She does not fool around at practices, and her all around consistency gives underclassmen something to model themselves after.

It is not just personality that can lead a sports team, though, because among the few things they share, both captains are very talented players with a tremendous devotion to the sport of field hockey.

Both girls were mentioned at the all-star conference, in which the year's all-stars are named, but were just beaten out by the stiff competi-

Golf cart donated

The Cohasset High athletic department has seen various improvements and additions in the last few years. A new weight room, a new track, a new scoreboard in the gym.

And now, a golf cart?

"I've wanted one for a few years," said Cohasset High athletic director Clark Chatterton. "It's mainly for transporting injured athletes."

The cart can also be used for moving equipment as the field is prepared for different events. A bigger bed will be put on the back.

"The gridiron club is going to take care of that. They're going to paint it the school colors, navy blue and white," said Chatterton. "The art department is going to work on it."

It was donated by Clark and Meredith Gedhill, as well as Missy Browne and Ron Hobson.

"We're going to put their names on it," said Chatterton.

"There was no pressure. They're all good kids."

The South Shore squad was loaded, and it showed early. Lauren Glaven from Hull scored midway through the first half with an assist by Lynne Matheny of Hanover for a 1-0 lead.

The Indians, seeded second in the Division 2 South tournament, had four other representatives in addition to Matheny on the squad - Marissa Norkus, Marisa Hourihan. Two of the Hanover stars combined to score the next goal, as Matheny notched another assist on a Norkus goal with eight minutes left in the half.

Norwell's Kristina Tedeschi scored with five minutes left in the first half with an assist from Glaven. The Clippers did not qualify for the tournament, so this was in effect the last game Tedeschi's high school career.

Both teams made some adjustments in the second half, but there would be no more scoring. Goalies Jenny Grieco of Hull and Angela Buffington of Carver combined for the shutout.

"It's tough because I don't know the players," said Schneider. "It's different from knowing them as an opponent. You just don't know what they're like. I thought the South Shore did a good job."

Another team in the tournament is Cohasset. The Skippers, who went 8-5-5, were represented by Andi Shaughnessy, Sarah Kidder and Maggie O'Connor in the all star game. They will host Milton, which plays in the very competitive Bay State League.

Should the Skippers advance, they will play at Hanover (14-0-3) on Friday.

"Hopefully the weather will hold up, and they'll be able to get the game in on Wednesday," said Schneider. "If not, our game might get pushed back."

tion from neighboring towns.

Meehan, a defender, has been attracting attention from all over the league because of her instincts only a veteran has, and the strong drives she uses to clear the ball up the field.

At the other end of the field, Pyfrom, the left forward, utilizes her deceivingly long arms and legs to freeze opposing defenses, and feed the ball to a scorer. Pyfrom chipped in with four goals this year and countless assists.

Both girls devotion to the sport and team has not gone unnoticed by the league. Cohasset came in second place this year for the sportsmanship award, and Bostwick attributed that to the captains.

All season, Pyfrom and Meehan have organized pasta dinners, called all thirty kids on varsity and junior varsity about schedule changes, and have kept the team as close knit as any on the South Shore. Bostwick has said that there have been no conflicts between players this year, largely because of the example set by the captains.

Though they might not do things the same way, both girls have led the team to its great success this year.

"I give them so much credit," Bostwick said of her senior captains. "They've had a lot on their shoulders, but both girls give 110 percent."

Basketball registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department/Booster's basketball registrations will be held for girls and boys in grades 1 through 8 at the Town Hall Saturday, Nov. 13, from 9 to 11 a.m.

The fee for the program is $50. Checks should be made payable to: Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club, (CBBC), shirt charge is included in the fee.

Details on the basketball program will be available at registration. Games are played Saturdays, but not during any vacation periods in order to avoid conflicts.

The Recreational Basketball Program is made available via the joint efforts of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club and the Recreation Department, providing youngsters with a teaching and recreational opportunity.

Evaluations will be Saturday, Dec. 4. The CBBC will also register parents, who wish to coach, and sponsors at the 11/13 registration.

This year, two levels of sponsorship are available. Team Sponsor, $75 and Team and Program book sponsors $100.

A new store in Cohasset

A new craft gallery has opened in Cohasset. Barefoot Rugs and Country Furnishings carries handmade hooked rugs, country-style furniture, and crafts made by artisans throughout the country. The emphasis is on hooked rugs but a selection of complimentary home furnishings effectively caters to both traditional and contemporary tastes.

Owner Susan Buswell said the store will not only carry work by local artisans but she will display works by craftsmen located in other regions of the country not readily available locally.

other towns. We're not fully prepared yet to vote on what will be an extremely important decision to the future of our schools.

"We are cognizant that we are further reducing a limited amount of time to educate the town on reconfiguration. However, we feel such an important decision should not be rushed."

Both options still under consideration by the school committee involve renovations and additions at both Deer Hill and the middle high school. The difference between the two is that one would involve moving the sixth grade from Deer Hill to the middle high school as well as moving the third grade from Osgood to Deer Hill. The other option would leave the current grade configurations as they are.

The school committee had planned to vote on a preferred renovation option to be brought before the special town meeting, when voters would consider whether to appropriate $1.3 million for architectural drawings based on that preferred option.

To achieve success at the ballot box, however, the school committee decided to seek a lower override figure for the construction drawings at the special town meeting. Instead of the $1.3 million override it was planning to bring before the town, the school committee will now include an article on the warrant for $390,000.

"I think this override vote [for $1.3 million] is dead on arrival," said school facilities committee chairman Rob Spofford in arguing for a lower figure. "A loss on this project could be burying it for years. I don't want to rush into this and get a loss on the project. When things lose in this town, they tend to go away for a while."

Fellow school facilities committee member David Chase agreed that prudence dictates a measured, step-by-step approach.

"My feeling is that we should inch into this thing," he said. "We'll have a better chance than blasting it all at once. We don't want a flat turndown in December."

DeGiacomo suggested moving the special town meeting to January, which would allow the school committee more time to educate the town on a possible grade reconfiguration. Others, however, disagreed with the notion that a significant number of people could be convinced within a month.

"I think you'll run into some problems no matter when you go for the vote," said selectman Merle Brown. "The people who are against the project aren't going to change their minds."

Fellow selectman Thomas Callahan added that the grade configuration issues are not a deciding factor for many people in forming their opinion on the project.

"You have people that will object to the overall project costs and will vote against the override for that reason," he said. "What's the problem in being ready for Dec. 6?"

School committee member Stephanie Noble said moving the special town meeting to January would be of little help in providing information to the public about grade configurations or the disrepair of the schools.

"You haven't bought yourself very good time," she said of a month which includes Christmas and Hanukkah. "The holidays are not a good time to try to get people in to look at these schools. A lot of the people we need to convince will be on vacation."

To be eligible for 60 percent state reimbursement for the renovation projects, the town must submit formalized drawings to the state my June 1. Following state approval, the project could be put out to bid by September.

"A loss on this project could be burying it for years. I don't want to rush into this and get a loss on the project. When things lose in this town, they tend to go away for a while."

— Rob Spofford, building committee

By pushing a special town meeting vote to January, Town Manager Mark Haddad said the school committee would be jeopardizing that timeline for state reimbursement.

"There's no question in my mind that something has to be done now," Haddad said. "Can these buildings risk waiting another year?"

Architects for Strekalovsky and Hoit, the Hingham firm working on the school renovation project, agreed that their timeframe for producing an application to the state is extremely tight.

"For the meeting with the state on June 1, we need to have between 75 and 100 percent of the plans completed," said architect Gene Raymond. "We wanted to get the schematic drawings done by the end of January, which would have given us four months to work on the final drawings. We need to get 50 percent of the drawings done by the end of March."

To get those drawings done by March, the architects will need more money. The school committee had been prepared to seek $1.3 million for those drawings at the special town meeting, which would have paid for the architects' work through the June state application process.

Facing an override vote, however, the school committee decided to seek a lesser figure to get the architects through March. At the annual town meeting that month, the remaining architect fees will be included in the overall project cost.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a lesser figure would be workable because there is money left over from Strekalovsky and Hoit's initial study.

"We got $250,000 from the town last March for the original feasibility study," Haddad said. "The work only ended up costing $100,000, so we have $150,000 left over from that. We'll need an additional $390,000 in December. That should get us to March. The $1.3 million was to do a lot more work between March and June."

School committee member Pat Martin stressed that the town must understand the need for the renovations, regardless of what grade configuration is ultimately chosen.

"We're selling the need for renovations, not the final option," she said. "There's a third of the people in the town who will vote for the project because they understand the need for the work to be done. There's another third who will vote against it because they don't want to spend the money. We've got to get that third who are still on the fence and convince them that we have to do something with these buildings."

According to architect Donald Walter, the school committee will have to decide on a renovation option by January. That decision will allow the architects to develop schematic and final drawings for that option by the June 1 state submission deadline for reimbursed projects.

Architecturally, the two remaining renovation options are similar except for changes which would be necessary if the sixth grade is moved to the middle high school. Moving sixth-graders to the middle high school would require a larger addition than leaving them at Deer Hill.

"Both are the same for Deer Hill," Walter said. "The difference at the middle high school is a single-story addition versus a two-story addition."

Moving the sixth grade to the middle high school would necessitate the larger addition because of the increase in students. The larger addition is estimated to make that option $1.2 million more expensive than the option of maintaining the current grade configurations.

School administrators have been unanimous in their desire for a 6-8 middle school, which also would include the third-grade move to Deer Hill. Former school committee member JoAnne Chittick wondered why the advice of the town's educational leaders wasn't enough for the school committee to make its decision.

"I don't understand the hesitation," she said. "We pay our school administrators to do what's best for our kids. I think they feel very strongly that this [6-7-8 grade configuration] is what you should do."

Despite the advice of school administrators, school committee member Kathy Oftshun said she still needed more information to make an informed decision.

"Curt and Ruth are top notch," she said of high school principal Curtis Collins and K-12 curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey. "But their opinion is not the only one. I don't feel we've fully explored the third grade move to Deer Hill yet. So much attention has been focused on the sixth grade possibly going to the middle school. I hope people realize that this should not be taken lightly. We haven't really looked at the third grade yet."

Discussions about grade configurations may be fruitless if the Dec. 11 override fails. Although the school committee could go back for funds for the entire project at the March town meeting, the progress of the architects in meeting the June 1 state deadline would be essentially halted if the override failed. School officials said there will be definite repercussions if renovations are put off for another year.

Both Deer Hill and the middle school are not in compliance with standards set by the American Disabilities Act (ADA). Should progress not be made toward renovations that would include handicapped-accessible bathrooms and elevators, DeGiacomo said legal action could result.

"I've been assured that there will be an ADA lawsuit almost immediately," he said.

Supt. of Schools Dr. Edward Malvey said the school's accreditation will also be at risk if renovations are put off for another year.

"I can guarantee that we'll be cited," he said. "We'll be under sanctions from the New England School Accreditation Council. They don't play games."

Man faces additional pornography charges

Alleged incident involved children at Nantasket Beach

By Cory Tromblee
STAFF WRITER

Mark R. Sullivan of Pembroke is facing additional child pornography charges, this time for allegedly possessing photographs of naked children bathing at Nantasket Beach in Hull.

The charges stem from Sullivan's arrest in August for allegedly taking similar photographs at Walden Pond in Concord.

Sullivan, 32, of 164 Oak St., pleaded innocent Monday in Plymouth Superior Court to charges of two counts of possession of child pornography and one count of exhibiting a child in a state of nudity. He was released on $100 personal recognizance following the arraignment and is scheduled to return to court Nov. 9 for a bail hearing and pre-trial conference.

In addition, he likely will face charges from the town of Cohasset for alleged possession of similar pictures of children at Sandy Beach.

Sullivan also was ordered by the court to stay away from minors and the Internet.

In addition, he likely will face charges from the town of Cohasset for alleged possession of similar pictures of children at Sandy Beach. Sgt. Robert Jackson of the Cohasset Police Department said he expects charges to be filed at some point this week, but would not elaborate.

"I'm not at the liberty to go into the nature of those charges at this time," said Jackson.

Jackson noted that he wasn't sure if the Cohasset police or the state police would be handling the case.

Sullivan's attorney, Plymouth-based Jack Atwood, was in court at press time and could not be reached for comment.

Sullivan initially was arrested in August after he was allegedly seen taking pictures of young children swimming naked in Walden Pond. He was later released on $1,500 cash bail and has been free since.

Middlesex County Assistant District Attorney Erin Duggan said during the August arraignment that despite Sullivan's plea of innocence, the suspect had confessed to photographing children at Nantasket Beach and Sandy Beach. She said he cited psychological problems as the reason for his attraction to young children.

Following the arrest at Walden Pond, police conducted a search of Sullivan's home in Pembroke, where they found a wealth of "material," according to Detective David Hurley of the Pembroke Police Department.

Hurley confirmed that most of the pictures depicted young children bathing and being changed at local area beaches. Many of them were taken at Nantasket and Sandy beaches, he said.

He added that many of the photographs that were impounded had been downloaded off the Internet.

Despite the findings in August, Hurley said, "We have no information that would lead us to believe he ever harmed a child other than taking photographs."

When Sullivan was arrested in August, he was carrying a camera, binoculars, a fake Boston Police Department badge and pornographic images of children.

Angelspeake talk at Second Congregational

The Task Force on Spirituality and Healing presents Angelspeake with Trudy Diane Griswold on Wednesday, Nov. 17, at 7:30 p.m. at Second Congregational Church, next to town hall in Cohasset.

Trudy Griswold, author and co-founder of Angelspeake, believes that people are spiritual beings experiencing a physical life and incorporates that belief in her personal work with clients, whether they come to develop greater self-awareness or self-esteem, understand their God-given abilities, enlarge their life dream or to develop healthy relationships.

Angelspeake, a national organization, was formed by Trudy and her sister, Barbara Mark of San Diego, to teach individuals about their angelic guides, the ministry performed by such divine beings and how to communicate with their own angels at any time they choose.

Good Morning, America (ABC-TV) was the first network to feature an actual Angelspeake workshop during a week-long television series titled "Spirituality in America." Trudy and Barbara appeared on The Leeza Show (CBS-TV), and the Public Broadcasting System (PBS) purchased the rights to produce and air a new hour-long video of the sister's most recent workshop, "Speaking With Your Angels: A Guide."

Town reacts to teen frenzy

Those working with youth seek answers

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

As people in town became aware of the vandalism, lewd acts, and underage drinking that were perpetrated by teens on Halloween night, questions arose in the minds of those committed to working with the youth of Cohasset.

Why did this happen? Was it an isolated incident, or a sign of deeper problems among the youth of Cohasset? What has to be done to prevent such events from happening again?

Police have estimated that about 100 teenagers were involved in some way in the unfortunate events of Halloween night, which included lewd graffiti at the playground behind the old Osgood school, broken windows at the new Osgood school, middle high school, and Deer Hill, and even included some young trick-or-treaters being robbed of their Halloween candy.

"What's most disturbing is the lack of respect being shown to little kids and property," said the Rev. Gary Ritts of Second Congregational Church, who works with Cohasset teens on the Appalachia Service project. "I feel for the police force. They were so outnumbered and they shouldn't have to put up with things like this."

Ritts wondered how many of the 100 or so teens that have been reported as congregating near the common were actually involved in illegal activity.

"My guess is there were smaller groups doing the property damage," he said. "We need to find out what the real issues are. Is it five kids doing everything? But we also don't want to keep our heads in the sand. If there were really a large number of kids participating in that damage, we need to take steps to help them."

The Rev. Cliff Cutler of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church serves as chairman of the town's Drug and Alcohol Committee, and was disheartened to hear the stories of underage drinking on Halloween night.

"It wasn't all of the teenagers in town, but it was a pretty good percentage of them, wasn't it?" he said. "There are no simple answers to the problems of underage drinking. The problem is deep enough that we'll be working at this for the long haul. Drugs and alcohol are glorified in advertising and their representation by the media. The teens also don't have a lot to do on town. Everything is interrelated. It's not a simple problem."

"The first assumption I heard from parents is that these must have been kids from other towns who were doing this. It wasn't. Parents have to take responsibility for the actions of their kids and know where those kids are."
— Police chief Brian Noonan

Susan Jaffee, vice-president of the PSO, said she was approached about a PSO response to the situation. After thinking about it, she decided that no one group in town can formulate an effective response to the situation.

"It isn't fair to lump this on one group in town, whether it be the schools, selectmen, or the churches," she said. "There needs to be a community-wide effort."

Ritts said the clergy of the town would discuss the issue at their monthly meeting this week. He said that any kind of community-wide forum should include teens.

"We're trying to get a group together to talk about what happened," he said. "I think it's important that any discussion or forum

Musical comedy continues at town hall

PLAY REVIEW

You may not recognize the Cohasset Town Hall, for it seems the lighter side of the Roman Empire has invaded. Last Friday, The Cohasset Dramatic Club opened its season with the hilarious musical comedy, "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum."

Before a full house, the entire cast hooked the audience with the spirited and rousing opening number, "A Comedy Tonight." What follows is a series of mistaken identities, star-crossed romances, and clever schemes that leaves the audience laughing throughout the evening. Stephen Sondheim's "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" follows a day in the life of three Roman houses: the house of Senex, a wealthy Patrician; the house of Marcus Lycus, the proprietor of the fetching Courtesans; and the house of Erronius, a man fated to wander endlessly in search of his missing children (who have just happened to be kidnapped by pirates.)

Ray Byrne, who portrays Senex, says that it is the humor that makes this show stand out.

"It's a silly, fast-paced, comedic farce. — a lot of fun," he says.

Byrne, who has acted professionally and semi-professionally throughout his life, comes to the South Shore via New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. He now lives in Scituate where he has run a consulting firm for the past seven years. He joins a cast of 21 strong from communities throughout the South Shore.

— Ray Byrne

The cast, however, is just one facet of this community theater's success. With a membership that numbers well over 100, the dramatic club puts on three different shows a season. The success of this particular group lies in both its veteran membership and the number of fresh faces that join each year.

Jean DiGiacomandrea, of Scituate, who is club president, says that it is the energy in the new cast members' faces that makes the experience even more rewarding.

"It's so exciting to see it through them," says DiGiacomandrea, who acts as a Courtesan in the show. Now in its 79th year, the organization will produce two more shows this season, "Arsenic and Old Lace" in February, and the "Music Man" in May.

Opening night marked the sixth night in a row the cast and crew had been together, rehearsing and now performing.

"I love the creative talent. You are working together each night, meeting many people. It's what it is all about. You get hooked," says Bruce Wilson, who serves as both technical director and percussionist.

"It's so magical when the show goes up," he adds.

Sewer project at a temporary standstill

Contaminated soil found near old gas station

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Leaks underground near former Cohasset gas stations are becoming a recurring problem for contractors attempting to improve the town's infrastructure.

Contractors for the water department found gasoline underneath Depot Court when they opened up the street in 1996. The Brown's Auto Repair site, a former gas station, is the source of that contamination. A similar situation occurred on Oct. 28, when a contractor for the sewer department was excavating a section of South Main Street between St. Anthony's Catholic Church and the Cohasset Service Center, a former gas station.

"Workers for the contractor, J. D'Amico Inc., smelled gasoline in a trench they were digging," said Dan Coughlin, project engineer for the town sewer project. "Any time that you have any type of old gas station, there's always a chance that you'll find contamination. We were hoping we wouldn't find any, but we did."

In a report to Coughlin, J. D'Amico vice president Michael Lenihan explained what his workers found when digging the trench.

"Our crew noticed an odor in the soil that we were excavating and a slight sheen on the groundwater," Lenihan wrote. "Upon encountering this condition, our crew stopped pipelaying activities."

The purpose of the work being done is to install sanitary sewer pipes

Future of feral cats in limbo

Volunteers reject health board plan

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The health board thought it had a solution to the feral cat colony on James Lane last week.

But the women who would volunteer to carry out the plan say they want no part of it.

Instead, Elsa Miller — who has formed CATS (Cats Around Town Society) —said the volunteers are willing to "manage" the colony in the woods near James Lane where the cats live but refuse to assist in the effort of capturing and quarantining the animals as the health board wished.

"Once they are moved off James Lane, it's a town issue not a volunteer issue and we can't support that," Miller said. "We don't support moving the cats. It's an ineffective method.

"Our goal is to do something permanent and proven that will work."

Last week the health board offered about $500 in town funds to jumpstart a program of trapping, testing, treating, neutering or spaying, tagging and quarantining all the cats.

The board said it would try to find town land where the estimated 17 cats could be held in cages for 30 days until a suitable alternative for the animals could be found. The plan was contingent on a corps of volunteers who would help capture the Steps down from committee

Diana D. Kornet has resigned from the Government Structure Committee due to increased job responsibilities and needs of her family.

"The committee deserves to have members who can attend meetings regularly and shoulder their share of the workload when there are issues to be researched and reviewed," Kornet wrote in her letter of resignation. "I can no longer offer such support on a consistent basis."

For information on serving on the committee, call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Stephen Bobo will represent the board of health on the Water Resources Protection Committee.

Vo-Tech bill is due

Cohasset's share of district expenses for South Shore Regional Vocational Technical High School is $86,079. The town makes quarterly payments of $21,519.75 to the district.

In other Vo-Tech news, David M. Kneeland, 60 Doane St., stepped down effective Nov. 1 as the town's representative on the regional school committee.

"I have enjoyed my 3-1/2 years on the committee and believe that Cohasset's ability to offer its students a strong alternative to the traditional high school is an advantage to both the community and students," Kneeland wrote in his letter of resignation.

He said he would talk with anyone interested in taking on this role for Cohasset.

Anthony Sestito will serve as acting DPW superintendent while DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield is out on sick leave due to knee surgery later this month.

Mendel Rd. residents make their case

Explain their septic dilemma to advisory committee

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The sewer commission remains unconvinced of the need for Mendel Road residents to connect to the town sewer, but that didn't stop those residents from putting a citizen petition article on the warrant for the Dec.6 special town meeting that would include them in the central sewer district.

For the five residences of Mendel Road to be included in the central sewer district, boundaries of the district must be redrawn. That redistricting requires the approval of a bylaw change at special town meeting. In an attempt to gain the recommendation of the advisory committee for that bylaw change, Mendel Road residents Mark Brennan, Susan Kent, and Leslie Goyens appeared at their Tuesday meeting to explain their situation.

"The contention of the sewer commission is that we have alternatives, but experts have told us that we don't," said Brennan. "Right now, there is effluent leaking out the side of the septic tank and the leaching field. The system has never worked properly. We've got a public health emergency, and that's the bottom line."

The five homes on Mendel Road that make up the Olde Farms Hills Estates condominiums share a joint septic system. That system failed a Title 5 inspection in Feb. 1998. Title 5 is the state environmental code regulating septic systems.

Mendel Road residents would like to connect to the town sewer through the private treatment plant at 100 Pond St., which will be connected to the town sewer by virtue of its location in the central sewer district.

"We abut them," Brennan said of the distance from 100 Pond St. to Mendel Road. "From our tank, it's only 150-200 feet to hook into the town pipe. We're willing to pay all of the connection costs. It won't cost the town one red cent. The alternative is a $50,000-$75,000 system that probably won't work."

Sewer commissioners do not deny the proximity of Mendel Road to 100 Pond St. but insist that capacity is available only for the central sewer district, which includes vacant lots.

"The central district included the lots and the treatment center at 100 Pond St. from the get-go," said sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil to selectmen last month. "The streets in the district were established through a wide open forum. We got as much capacity as we could."

The difficulty with the septic system on Mendel Road is due in large part to the rocky soil, making it nearly impossible for a leaching field to operate successfully.

"It seems to me that the problem is finding a discharge field, and it's hard to leach through stone," said advisory committee chairman Dick Avery.

Sewer commissioners have contended that Mendel Road residents could build a successful septic system, though such a system would likely be expensive.

"Right now, there is effluent leaking out the side of the septic tank and the leaching field. The system has never worked properly. We've got a public health emergency, and that's the bottom line."
—Mark Brennan, 2 Mendel Road

Kent said that cost would not be an issue if Mendel Road residents could be assured that a septic system would work correctly for an extended period of time.

"There's a way that some massive thing could be constructed, but we don't want to take the chance on the system failing again in two years," she said. "We haven't found anyone willing to guarantee that they can build a system that won't fail in a couple of years.

"There was a new system in 1990 as well. This would be the third time in 10 years that the system had to be replaced"

Brennan agreed that the residents want a solution rather than cost effectiveness.

"If someone came and told us that they could guarantee a system that would work, we would pay for it, no problem," he said. "No one can make us that promise."

The advisory committee did not vote on a recommendation for the Mendel Road warrant article at Tuesday's meeting. Selectmen have recommended it.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a special town meeting vote to approve the warrant article could turn out to be inconsequential.

"According to Town Counsel, this article has no bearing on the sewer project," Haddad said. "The decision of the sewer commissioners is final."

Chief Feola was a 'classic'

Passes away in Florida at 84

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There's no doubt that when Randolph A. "Randy" Feola retired as Cohasset police chief in 1980, it was the end of an era.

Feola — known for the stogie tucked behind his ear and his little dog, a Chihuahua, who road with him in the police cruiser — had his own way of conducting business.

Feola, who moved to Florida some years ago, passed away Monday at Naples Community Hospital after a brief illness. He was 84.

Police Chief Brian Noonan recalls his interview with Feola after he'd been hired as a patrolman.

"He asked me what my goals were now that I'd been appointed to the police department," Noonan recalled. "I said, 'one of my main goals is to attain your position.'

"Chief Feola said, 'Sounds great' and told me to report to the midnight to 8 shift," Noonan said with a laugh. "I stayed there for two years."

Clark Chatterton of Red Gate Lane, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, helped coordinate Feola's retirement party attended by 350 friends and family members in September 1980 at Hugo's Lighthouse, where Atlantica is now located.

"People say you can hold retirement parties in a phone booth," Chatterton said. "But this was the fastest retirement I ever had to sell."

Chatterton, who is athletic director at the high school, described Feola as "an institution."

"I knew him my whole life," he said. "When I grew up he was a policeman."

Chatterton said highlights of the party included skits and a cake featuring the "three blind mice," a nickname Feola gave to the three selectmen at the time, Henry Ainslie, Arthur Clarke and Rocky Laugelle.

Randy Feola, with his familiar stogie, at his desk on his last day as chief in 1980.

Chatterton, who has cancer, said Feola had a big heart.

"When I was sick last year, he called me from Florida one Saturday night and talked to me for half an hour," he said.

Feola was hired as a patrolman in April, 1946 and was appointed chief in 1967.

"He was a good chief and a good guy."
— former selectman, Rocky Laugelle

Laugelle said although Feola was "rough and gruff," he was fair but firm with kids.

"If they did any damage, he'd have them come down on a Sunday and clean it up," he said. "Outside he was a really rough character but deep down he was really good with kids. He'd give kids rides home to Beechwood if needed."

Laugelle remembers selectmen being called the "three blind mices" but said it was all in fun.

"He would come up and tell us what he thought and all," Laugelle said. "But he was a good chief and a good guy."

Chief Noonan recalls that Feola always kept a little black book full of notes in his desk.

"When someone would come in to complain about another person or a police officer, he'd pull out his little black book and remind them of an indiscretion they'd had years before. They left satisfied," he said.

Noonan described Feola as a "classic."

"He ruled more by fear but I never knew anyone who had a bigger heart."

A World War II veteran, Feola was a life member of the George H. Mealy American Legion Post in Cohasset and the Scituate VFW Post.

Feola leaves his wife Marie A. (Dyson) Feola; two sons, Randolph A. Feola Jr. of Old Town, Fla. and Ralph L. Feola of Lakeland, Fla.; and two daughters, Ruthanne Semel of Lancaster, Ca. and Suzanne Ross of Cohasset. He also leaves a sister Ruth Rautiala of Cohasset and two grandchildren.

Visiting hours are from 2-4 and 7-9 p.m., Sunday at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St. A funeral mass will be conducted at 10 a.m., Monday in St. Anthony's Church. Interment will be in Woodside Cemetery.

can include teens. To really make a significant change, it has to be built from within."

Recreation director Jack Worley, chairman of the youth resources committee, said that the teen center could be a viable option for the teens on future Halloween nights.

"This is one of those unfortunate things that happen sometimes when teens have a lack of options," he said. "Hopefully this will be the last time these kids won't have somewhere else to go. When we get the center open, which we're hoping to do by the end of November, we'll be able to have dances and Halloween parties. The kids won't be out roaming the streets."

Worley warned that a teen center will not serve as a cure-all in preventing future law breaking activities by the youth in town.

"Even with Halloween parties and dances for the kids to attend, you run the risk of a few bad apples. Hopefully, we'll get the kids who would have followed those bad apples. Instead of having 100 kids roaming around, you might only have five or 10. Then the police would have a manageable job instead of being so outnumbered."

Police chief Brian Noonan said the department is still working on the case. He added that more police detail will be on duty next Halloween.

"We'll have more police out next year," Noonan said. "You can count on that."

Noonan said that the incident may serve as a wake-up call to parents in town that Cohasset kids are indeed capable of breaking the law.

"The first assumption I heard from parents is that these must have been kids from other towns who were doing this," he said. "It wasn't. Parents have to take responsibility for the actions of their kids and know where those kids are."

Whether response to the event involves a community-wide forum or takes the form of separate groups meeting to discuss the subject, Fr. John Mulvehill, pastor of St. Anthony's Catholic Church, said parents must be involved.

"If parents don't support it, nothing will work," he said.

Future of feral cats in limbo

animals and be willing to feed the cats and change the litter during the holding period.

The health board was trying to answer complaints from a handful of James Lane neighbors that the cats are causing foul odors, property damage and potential health problems.

Chairman Alix White made it clear at the meeting that without volunteer help the animals would be put down.

"If you want the animals to live, volunteers are needed to feed, water and change the litter," White told Gail Whitehouse, who advocates the "managed" colony approach.

"I'm not agreeing to that," Whitehouse replied. She said James Lane is near her Ash Street home and is therefore, more convenient. Another location like the town dump would not be acceptable.

Whitehouse also questioned whether the animals would be safe if caged up in a public place.

"They could be poisoned or shot at with bb guns, they could be sitting ducks," she said. Whitehouse also worried that 30 days is too long to hold a wild animal and if the animals were kept inside they wouldn't develop their winter coats.

Nevertheless, health board member Robin Lawrence — who offered the 30-day plan that was voted on last week — was surprised that it wasn't moving forward.

Reached by telephone Tuesday, he said without the volunteers, the board would have to "rethink the entire approach."

He said the board was trying to strike a middle ground by doing the right thing for the neighborhood as well as giving those who want the cats saved the opportunity.

Miller, who founded the non-profit CATS, said she has talked to several of the neighbors that signed a petition complaining about the cats. She said they have agreed to give the managed-care plan a try. She was unable to attend the health board meeting last week due to another commitment.

So far, Miller said, volunteers have captured a total of 11 cats. One, a kitten, died of malnutrition and 10 have been altered. Two kittens have been adopted and two others that are young enough to tame have been removed from the area. The others have been released. She advocates a "managed colony" of about 10 cats because they would prevent other cats from moving in.

Miller, who explained that killing or poisoning the cats would violate state laws, said homeowners can put citrus or mothballs in their gardens as an innocuous way to keep the cats away.

Jack Creighton, 48 James Lane, is a vocal opponent of the "managed-care" approach.

"They are proposing a trial at someone else's expense and that's not fair or right," said Creighton, adding he's seen the colony grow in the five years he's lived in that part of town.

"The fact of the matter is that a managed colony is a euphemism for doing nothing," he said. "They've been given the opportunity to use town land, a cage and to get (financial) assistance and now they are offering euphemisms."

Creighton, who has two cats, said the health issues are being overlooked. Although there have been no documented cases of rabies in feral cats in town, the specter of rabies and other feline diseases can't be dismissed.

"The overwhelming concern is health," he said. "You know a child who sees a sick kitty will pick it up."

Creighton claimed that there are shelters that would take the animals if euthanasia were the only alternative left to the town.

Miller disputes the cats are a danger in any way.

"These are clean, healthy animals," she said.

Miller said the focus of CATS would be to educate the public about the need to test, inoculate and alter cats and to raise funds to alter and treat cats.

"The intent is not to be a shelter but to raise adequate awareness and funds to try and eliminate the need for shelters where kittens quickly become adult cats and are not so cute and are therefore harder to find a home for," she said.

Miller also wants to work toward controlling the ever-growing population of cats that are dropped off and left to care for themselves, breeding and producing feral kittens.

"Thus the cycle of the problem at hand — too many cats without proper management causing a nuisance," she said. "It's not the cats' fault, it is the fault of irresponsible pet owners."

Second lawsuit is filed on Route 3A tower

Residents' appeal says public wasn't heard on issue

By Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITER

Scituate town officials who decided late last week an appeal to reverse a court order allowing the installation of a 180-foot cell tower on Route 3A was "unwinnable" aren't talking this week.

As a result of their decision, a group of residents, most of them from Cohasset's Ledgewood Drive, have taken matters into their own hands. The abutters have filed a law suit — the second one concerning the project — against the town, the planning board and Omnipoint Communications, Inc., the company looking to build the tower.

Cohasset resident Randall Patterson, an outspoken opponent of the cell tower, said he wasn't surprised that Scituate selectmen did not reconsider their earlier decision.

"No, they've given us no indication in their history that they would do otherwise on the first permit," said Patterson. Cohasset selectmen backed residents by sending a letter which also requested the decision be appealed.

Torin Sweeney of Gannett Pasture Lane, who spoke before selectmen at their last meeting, criticized the town's decision.

"It's a shame, such a shame," he said, noting the town would choose not to back residents who do not want the tower. "I do not know what is motivating the town to act the way it has."

According to Scituate town administrator Richard Agnew, there was no reason for the town to reconsider its original unanimous decision to not appeal a Sept. 28 ruling by the federal court. According to several town officials, town counsel advised both boards in executive session the case was "unwinnable."

The suit, filed Monday in U.S. District Court in Boston, alleges the town violated local, state and federal laws. Town officials said they could not comment on the case because it involves litigation.

First, the suit claims that when the town followed the court order and decided to grant the permit for the 180-foot telecommunications tower another public meeting should have been held for residents to voice their concerns.

Secondly, the suit alleges the company should have filed a new application after the court ruling and the whole matter should have been treated as a new case.

In June, the special permit application to erect the tower was denied when one of the four planning board members eligible to vote on the matter, voted against it. According to state law, an affirmative vote by four of the five planning board members was required to grant the permit. Planning board member David Nellis was unable to vote because he was elected after the tower applicant's initial hearing with the board. Jonathan Warner's lone no vote toppled the tower application.

Tower Ventures appealed the board's decision. Following the Sept. 28 court order to allow the tower — which maintained the planning board did not file its decision appropriately and in enough detail — the town had until Nov. 5 to appeal.

"We gave them every opportunity, we didn't have to appear before selectmen," said Patterson. "It didn't have to come to this."

The residents' suit is the second filed against the town, planning board and tower applicants. On Nov. 4, the Chief Justice Cushing Highway Corporation also filed a lawsuit in Plymouth County Superior Court, appealing the town's Oct. 15 decision to grant the special permit and allow construction as directed in the court order. The corporation occupies land at 850 and 860 Chief Justice Cushing Highway and borders the property on which the tower is to be built. Donald Staszko, president of the corporation, could not be reached for comment.

Like the residents' appeal, the Chief Justice Cushing Highway lawsuit alleges the decision to grant the permit was illegal and also claims the tower would have a negative visual impact on the area.

Selectmen want KEDS fees raised by January

School committee members would like to wait until next year

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The issue of benefits being paid by the town for employees of the school district's day care program known as KEDS will not go away. At the Oct. 26 selectmen's meeting, Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers chairman Leonora Jenkins said the school department should start paying the benefit costs of the program immediately.

"We're talking about $25,000 and that's the equivalent of the tax bill of five homes at $5,000 each," Jenkins said. I would like the selectmen to send a letter to the superintendent stipulating that the town will no longer pay these benefit costs."

The school committee had previously agreed to increase fees in the KEDS program that would allow it to cover its own benefits beginning next September.

Selectman Diane Sullivan agreed with Jenkins, saying the town should not have to wait until next September to get the KEDS benefits off of its balance sheet.

"I think it should be done now," she said. "What is being suggested is to make the program self-supporting, which the school committee has agreed to. Why should we wait?"

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo was present at the selectmen's meeting and argued that increasing the fees before next year would be unfair.

"This is not a reasonable request," he told selectmen. "Fee schedules have gone out and families have made their plans. They've made employment plans, financial plans, and life plans. We share the view that the program should be self-supporting, but our goal was next school year, Sept. 2000."

Despite DeGiacomo's protestations, selectmen urged him to talk with the school committee about the possibility of increasing the fees for the second half of the school year.

"Selectmen have suggested a Jan. 1 date to increase the fees to cover $13,000 in benefits for the second half of the school year," DeGiacomo told the school committee at a subsequent meeting.

"I think it should be done now. What is being suggested is to make the program self-supporting, which the school committee has agreed to. Why should we wait?"
Selectman Diane Sullivan

School committee member Pat Martin worried that the program's cost might become prohibitively expensive.

"I think we need to talk to parents right away and tell them this is a possibility," she said. "What happens if people can't afford it and drop out. That's just going to make the costs rise even more for everyone else."

DeGiacomo said that scholarships could be established to cover partial costs of the program if parents do face financial difficulties due to the increased rates.

The amount that fees would have to be raised is difficult to determine, because rates vary based on the number of days per week a child attends and the number of programs they attend as well. Programs include the breakfast club, which is held before school, an after school program, and a kindergarten program. Morning kindergarten students go to the afternoon day care program and vice versa.

According to a fee schedule provided by KEDS director Elizabeth Alpert, the cost of day care for a child who goes only to the breakfast club five days a week is $98 a month. If that same child attends the breakfast club and the after school program five days a week, the cost rises to $263 a month. If the child goes to both programs three days a week, the cost is $220 a month. Figuring out how to raise the costs to cover $13,000 in benefits will not involve a simple equation.

"We're no simply charging everyone a flat increase," said school committee member Kathy Oftshun.

Alpert said she doesn't understand all the furor surrounding the benefits for her program, but added that the increase in fees should not be significant.

"I don't think the rates will have to go up a tremendous amount, though I haven't run any numbers," she said. "I don't know what all the hype is about," she said. "No one has said anything attacking the quality of the program. It's all a financial issue. The town pays the benefits of all school employees. I don't see why we're any different."

Selectmen and the school committee do see it differently, however. The day care program's rates will go up to cover the benefit costs. The only remaining question is if it will be sooner rather than later.

HOLIDAY HOUSE TOUR

Here is a "secret" that you will want to mark down on your calendar right now — the Community Garden Club of Cohasset and its members are getting ready to decorate houses in Cohasset for their biennial Holiday House Tour! The date to circle is Wednesday, Dec. 8, so make your plans now!

BEECHWOOD RECEPTION

The Beechwood Congregational Church of Cohasset invites you to attend a reception in honor of their pastor, Dr. Branson Roberts, Sunday, Nov. 14, at 2 p.m.! The reception will be held at the Beechwood Congregational Church in Merritt Hall. Refreshments will be served. All of Dr. Roberts' friends are welcome!

VI WILL BE MISSED

One of Cohasset's finest ladies has passed away, and I would love you to take a moment to remember her — think of Vi Tuthill as she walked the "route" around town — or think of her at Sandy Beach, soaking up "the rays" — or think of her with that wonderful smile and kind word for all who met her — or, think of her as the loving Mom and "Nonny" that she was! A friend, a lady, a true inspiration to all who knew and loved her.

The next time you go to Sandy Beach, think of Vi and send her a kind word — I know I will!

VETERANS HONORED

Cohasset Elder Affairs honored veterans in Cohasset at a benefit held at the South Shore Community Center last week. They shared pictures and memorabilia with all. Breakfast was prepared by the Gourmet Club, and the speaker was past National Vice Commander VFWD John Mulkern, who is also State Chairman of the World War II Memorial. It is so nice to honor our veterans!

UPCOMING SENIOR TRIPS

Speaking of Cohasset Elder Affairs, there are two trips coming up you should not miss! On Wednesday, Nov. 17, there will be a trip to the John F. Kennedy Library. On Saturday, Dec. 11, you can go to the Christmas Pops for $50 (bus included) — this trip fills up very quickly, so sign up ASAP!

JINGLE BELL WALK

Another circle for your calendar — The Jingle Bell Walk! It will be held Friday, Nov. 26. First comes Santa at Cohasset Harbor (with his elves) arriving by boat! Santa passes out bells, then Santa and elves proceed by fire truck to the Community Center where there are lots of things for the young kiddos to do (i.e. hayrides, turkey trot, lighting of the luminaria and lighting of the tree). Mark Nov. 26 on your calendar right now; it is so much fun for young and old! And, it is the fifth year, so you know that everyone enjoys it! See you there!

MEMORY TREE

Finally, did you know that the Memory Tree will once again be on the lawn of the South Shore Community Center? This tree is a tangible way of remembering our loved ones and the commemorative lights will shine! The names of donors and those whom they remembered will be published in this very paper (The Mariner) and is tax deductible — so join the community tradition and light the tree!

The participation options are: individual $5 gift; angel: $15 gift; an archangel: $50 gift .

Colder weather means it's time to cook

As I write this it is cold! Although we all complain about the cold it does make time for good cooking! Do you remember when your grandmother made those wonderful breads, popovers and muffins? Remember the smell as you walked through the door? Do yourself and your family a favor and make them some popovers!

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

These are sure to impress; they are gorgeous and big giants!

POPOVERS

You will need
2 eggs
1 cup milk
1 cup flour and
1/2 teaspoon salt.

First preheat oven to 400 degrees. Beat eggs with a whisk or rotary beater, then beat in the remaining ingredients. Beat until just smooth — if you beat too long, popovers won't pop! Fill well-greased custard cups half full and bake 35-45 minutes, until puffy and brown.

This makes eight popovers, at 85 calories each.

Two tips for you — you may reduce calories if you bake popovers in a muffin tin with a non-stick finish, but they will be more lopsided and not as high. If you do use a muffin tin, fill every other cup only, and fill two-thirds full.

Also many recipes suggest that you pierce popovers about 10 minutes before they are finished baking. This process allows steam to escape and dries out the insides. However, these popovers taste just as good and you'll need less butter or margarine with the slightly damper centers.

I guarantee, everyone will want more than one, and that you will have to make them often! Please try as soon as you can!

Fright night in Cohasset

It's time to wake up to the fact that old-fashioned Halloweens — the way most parents remember them — are a thing of the past.

Many recall as teenagers having what could be described as good, clean fun on Halloween — even if that included a little mischievous activity. Soaping a few windows and stringing a little toilet paper was probably as wild as it got.

But, sadly, times have changed and judging from last week's teen rampage, it's very unlikely we'll be able to go back to the days when smashing pumpkins was the worst of it.

We suspect that many parents of the 100-or-so teens that wreaked havoc in the village area on Halloween had good intentions when they let their children go out that night.

Many of us want our children to have the memories we had. Halloween was fun, it was a big night in our lives and we fondly recall creating the costumes, going door-to-door and eating candy for weeks.

That was undoubtedly the reason that selectmen said they did not want to "over-regulate" Halloween when enacting the voluntary curfew again this year. We all want kids to have a good time.

But the facts are that kids today have more stuff, have been to more places and are exposed to more than we ever dreamt of at the same age. And many teens are less disciplined, less supervised and a lot more knowledgeable about sex and violence. Mix that combination with some under-age drinking and you have a recipe for disaster. We're very lucky that no one was hurt this year or in back in 1996 when dozens of egg-hurling Cohasset teens attacked our police officers on Halloween in a similar night of mayhem.

We realize that the broken windows and the spray-painted swear words and obscene diagrams that plastered the Osgood Playpark and Swim Center parking lot were the work of a minority.

Warm, dry weather on Halloween and the fact it was a school night and therefore, no teen dances or parties were planned, may have helped set the stage for events that followed.

But short of canceling Halloween altogether, we think the time has come to call off Halloween for older children in Cohasset. We have no problem if adults want to supervise parties for teens so they have an alternative. But going out and trick-or-treating should be left to younger children accompanied by their parents.

Next year, selectmen need to enact shorter hours for little trick-or-treaters, such as from 5:30-to-6:30 or 7 p.m. After that residents should turn off their porch lights and call it a night.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Optimize grades K-8, outsource 9-12

TO THE EDITOR:

Because Cohasset High School's graduating classes are so small (an average of about 65 during recent years); operating costs are about 25-percent higher (approximately $12,000 per student) than for typical Massachusetts high schools. Despite the high cost, the school committee and administrators assert that the Cohasset School District has been chronically under-funded and that an adequate "education" budget would require another 25-percent increase. At the same time, there is a drumbeat for full-day kindergarten and more pre-kindergarten publicly subsidized educational programs.

A succession of school committees and two superintendents have proven completely incapable of putting together a comprehensive strategic plan and we continue to lurch from one surprise to another. Why wasn't a total plan, even a phased plan, presented to the public when the new Osgood School was being debated? Can we afford to build two new schools that have the traffic flow, play area, security, utility and maintenance problems of the new Osgood School? Is it true that the new Osgood School is already undersized? Has anyone done a space utilization survey of the cavernous high school that our educators want to expand? Architectural costs precipitously descend from $1.2M to $.39M, renovation costs skyrocket from $10M to $40M. What is wrong with this picture?

I am unwilling to vote for additional public funds for school renovations so long as maintenance responsibility resides with an uncommitted school administration. The school committee chairperson seems satisfied that the schools have expended an average of $99,000 per annum for fiscal years 1998 and 1999. The Deer Hill principal has implied that the money may not have been spent effectively. To make matters worse, the industry standard (a commonly accepted "rule of thumb") suggests that $300,000 to $500,000 per annum should have been allocated for maintenance of our school facilities during fiscal years 1998 and 1999. It appears we do not know how much to spend nor how to spend it.

Education is a business and that is confirmed during each triennial contract negotiation. No sane businessperson would keep Cohasset High School open. They would create the most competitive grade K-8 school district in Massachusetts and negotiate arrangements with Norwell, Hingham, Scituate and Hull to place high school students. This approach would mean plowing under the Deer Hill School to release the new Osgood from its "sardine can." It would mean total replacement of the current middle/high school (grades 7-12) with a new middle school (grades 4-8) on the same site. The old Osgood and the Deer Hill could be used during the period of construction while "outsourcing" grades 9-12 is put on a "fast track."

The Halloween destruction of private and public property by unruly students and parents-in-denial reinforce the need to create diversity by "outsourcing." Have you looked at the added breadth of curriculum and extracurricular activities that all of our neighboring high schools offer? "Outsourcing" will explode the opportunities for Cohasset high-school-age students.

Mr. DiGiacomo is undoubtedly correct that there will be an ADA lawsuit if we do nothing. The lawsuit would be justified. We have procrastinated too long. However, the current prescription is a remedy for Cohasset's demise as a community that supports economic diversity.

In the meantime, please support the Teen Center and I'd appreciate 10 public-spirited people contacting me who will pledge $50,000 each toward resurrecting the plan to provide Cohasset with a year-round swimming facility. It is a "no-brainer."

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on six roll calls from the week of November 1-5. There were no roll calls in the Senate last week.
HMO INSOLVENCY(H 4848) House 158-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate a bill to protect consumers in the event of the insolvency of their Health Maintenance Organization (HMO). Supporters said current law offers little protection and noted the bill allows the state to step in and ensure there is replacement coverage and that members are not billed for more than their co-pays and deductibles. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).		Y
MBTA PROJECTS(H 4865) House 154-2, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate a transportation bond bill authorizing $225 million in borrowing to fund various MBTA expansion projects. Supporters said the bill will allow much needed MBTA projects to go forward and will improve public transportation in the state. Opponents offered no arguments. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).		N
OPEN SPACE/PROPERTY TAX HIKE(H 4863) House 139-14, gave near final approval to a bill allowing local communities, if approved by voters, to impose up to a three percent surtax on all property taxes in order to raise funds for the preservation of open space, renovation of historic buildings and construction of affordable housing. The measure allows communities to exempt low income homeowners including senior citizens. Anothe provision includes $50 million in matching state grants to be funded by a new minimum $4 fee to be paid by anyone filing deeds at the registry of deeds and a new $5 fee for filings at the state's land court. Supporters said this pro-environment bill simply gives local voters the power to raise property taxes in order to fund important environmental projects and affordable housing. Opponents said they support the goals of the bill but object to the property tax hikes and the increased filing fees. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).		Y
STRIKE MANDATES(H 4863) House 124-31, rejected an open space bill amendment removing the section requiring communities to use at least 10 percent of their increased property tax revenue for each of the three initiatives in the bill--open space, historic buildings and affordable housing. The amendment allows communities to decide what percentage to dedicate to each initiative. Amendment supporters said this will allow each city and towns to decide how to spend the money and noted each community has different needs. Amendment opponents said the 10 percent minimum is a reasonable and fair one which ensures that all three projects get at least some funding in each community. (A "Yea" vote is for eliminating the 10 percent requirements. A "Nay" vote is for the 10 percent requirements).		Y
$100,000 EXEMPTION(H 4863) House 119-36, rejected an open space bill amendment exempting the first $100,000 in value of a property from the up to three percent surtax on property taxes. Amendment supporters said this will help many elderly homeowners and working people who own moderate homes and cannot afford the surtax. Amendment opponents said the exemption is arbitrary and will decrease revenues. They noted the bill already includes protections for elderly and low income homeowners. (A "Yea" vote is for the $100,000 exemption. A "Nay" vote is against it).		Y
STRIKE $4 DEEDS FEE(H 4863) House 133-22, rejected an open space bill amendment eliminating the proposed new $4 minimum fee to be paid by anyone filing deeds at the registry of deeds. The bill provides that the revenue be used to fund the state's $50 million matching grants and allows the fee to be raised beyond $4 if necessary to fully fund the grants. Amendment supporters said the fee is simply a new tax and is likely to climb to $8 because of declining filings at the registry. Amendment opponents said the fee is a modest one which will fund environmental projects and affordable housing. They noted that without the fee the $50 million in matching grants will have to be reduced. (A "Yea" vote is for eliminating the new $4 fee. A "Nay" vote is for the new $4 fee).		N

Teens had no right to trash my town

(Editor's note: This is an open letter to the teens of Cohasset)

LOCAL VIEW

LINDA A O'LOUGHLIN

To those kids, and you know who you are, who defaced and terrorized the town of Cohasset, Massachusetts, on Halloween night:

I have never been more appalled at the news I heard about the vandalism you displayed on a place I called home for 28 years of my life.

My parents and I moved to Forest Avenue in Cohasset when I was 1-1/2 years old. From that point on, I was exposed to, what I considered to be, one of the most beautiful places in the world. Not only did I have the pleasure of using the Common for touch football games with my friends in the fall, the benefit of the beaches and ocean for sailing in the summer, but also to walk through the center of town during the springtime. I also received a great education in this town. I started in nursery school at the Community Center and continued through the school system until the day I graduated from Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School on June 8, 1986.

And to think that you little "punks," that's right, "punks," could deface places that, first of all, don't belong to you, but places that everyone in town has to use and view, is nothing short of pitiful! When I heard about the egg throwing and the vandalism to downtown and to some of the schools, I was horrified. To think that you would damage a place that young children rely on for their early stages of learning, I wanted to vomit. What gave you the right to damage their learning environment?

Let me also ask you this, who do you think you are? Did you pay to have the school and buildings in downtown built? Last time I checked, the town paid for it! To the best of my knowledge, I don't ever remember any of the buildings in town have any part of your names in their titles for you to call them yours and vandalize them as you see fit.

I would guess that you are all probably in the age ranges of 13-17 and therefore, don't own any of the establishments or schools you damaged. Therefore, there is no justification for your actions. Didn't anyone ever tell you that it's illegal to sabotage someone else's property? I would imagine that you all know the difference between right and wrong, so what provoked you to do these things? Did you think it was the "cool" thing to do? Well, news flash — it wasn't! You take pride in sports or events when you are competing, so why not take pride in the town where you live? We, my classmates, friends and I did when we lived here, and some of them reside there!

And to think that you little "punks," that's right, "punks," could deface places that, first of all, don't belong to you, but places that everyone in town has to use and view, is nothing short of pitiful!

I know I'm not the only person who was disturbed, angry and scared by this incident. But maybe hearing this from someone who was where you are not so long ago and someone who is not your parents, may help to change attitudes you all have towards respecting the property of others and the town in which you live.

Just for the record, you don't know everything — though you think you might, you certainly don't own everything — although your parents may be fortunate to give you quality things, and you certainly do not have the right to do anything you want to whatever you want. Most of you are still kids, and I stress, kids. You may think you have gotten away with this, this time and hopefully not, but what will happen the next time you try something like this and get caught? Then what will you do with the rest of your life? It takes a strong person to speak up and say what they did was wrong and only one person to give names of who did what.

I didn't know what I could do to let my anger at your actions be known, because I now live in Florida, so I figured this was the only way. I truly hope that you think twice about "sweeping this under the carpet" and forgetting it ever happened. If you know anything, talk to your parents, they can help and together all of you can make Cohasset, Massachusetts, the safe, beautiful and fun place to grow up, just like I remember when I was growing up.

Harry Potter to the rescue!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Just when we think we have our kids under control, who comes along? Harry Potter, that's who. For years, we've been training our young 'uns to sit quietly in front of the TV, occasionally snacking on pizza and twinkies, while we go about our daily business with fewer parental details to annoy us. Barney the Purple Dinosaur and the Teletubbies are the ultimate baby-sitters.

"Children watch more television daily, physical education has been reduced in our schools . . . and walking or bicycling has been replaced by automobile travel," mourned the Journal of the American Medical Association the other day in the general gripe about the younger generation.

That's where Harry Potter comes in.

Harry is a 10-year-old apprentice wizard who appears in a series of three (so far) books by an unemployed Scottish teacher of French, J. K. Rowling, which have been showing up on the best seller list of the New York Times for at least a year.

Harry's alma mater, the Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, is better known in some quarters than Florida State and Notre Dame.

The books have been selling faster in Boston than any book since the Watch and Ward Society gave up battling against the tide and surrendered to the 20th century, thus cutting the bottom out of the sale of books that used to be banned.

Children are gobbling them up - and reading them - so fast that more than a million and a half copies of each book have been printed and stores have waiting lists for more. If you want to buy some Harry Potter books as Christmas gifts, best start negotiating now.

"The kids are talking about this, there are actual conversations going on about the books," said Alan Farstrup, executive director of the International Reading Association, which has been fighting a losing battle to drag the youngsters away from TV and video games for years.

"I just hope it spreads to other kinds of reading materials," he added.

"Parents are running all over town trying to find the book," said Bonnie Kiesow, a sixth grade reading teacher in Sioux Falls, S. D., "I've had kids say, 'My mom couldn't believe it, because usually I don't sit down to read for two hours,' This is fun to see."

"My mom got it for me and said it would be really good," said Lizzie Allen, 14, of Columbia, S. C. "At first I thought it was a little kid's book, then I thought 'Wow, this is really good.'"

But there are rocks and shoals ahead for Harry Potter as he drags our kids from their posts in front of the boob tube.

For one thing, some conservatives have charged that the books teach "violence, disrespect, racism, murder, violent death and the occult" to impressionable youngsters who have grown up on Sylvester Stallone and Bruce Willis movies.

And worse, the author, J. K. Rowling, is said to be working with a screenwriter on a film version of Harry's adventures.

I can see it now.

"Do you want to read this Harry Potter book?"

"No thanks. I'll wait for the movie."

Life in Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

We are doing state research reports in my fifth grade class and I will be reporting on Massachusetts. The reports are due in December and cover topics such as history, geography and places of interest. The reason I am writing to your local paper is to ask if you could publish my letter in your paper. I am hoping some of the members of your community would write to me and tell me about their experiences, traditions and some history or interesting information about their life in Cohasset. I live in Southern California and am sure many things about Cohasset are different from where I live. Also, if any of the citizens find time to reply, it would be great if they would enclose a copy of my "published" letter. Thank you so much for taking time for my request and any information would be most appreciated.

Feedback on drug stories

TO THE EDITOR:

I applaud your coverage of drug use on the South Shore (Cohasset Mariner, Oct. 28). It alerts people to the reality that as a privileged community we are not immune from but part of a national malaise.

In a future article it would be useful to discuss two important issues relating to drug use:

1. The paucity of meaningful treatment vis a vis detox facilities for persons addicted to drugs, and

2. A profile of who actually goes to prison for drug offenses. What proportion of "upper class" (i.e. those with money to defend themselves) vis a vis those without power, influence and money to avoid actually going to jail.

Scituate 'cells' out citizens

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to the citizens of Scituate and Cohasset to provide an update on the Cell Tower issue and rebut a specific comment made in The Mariner's article on this issue dated Nov. 4.

Starting off with a quote from the Scituate Board of Selectmen on the town's Web page: "Every resident is encouraged to participate in their town government, whether it be by participation at town meetings, volunteering for a citizen board, or taking some responsibility for making our community a wonderful place to live. Your ideas and suggestions are always welcome."

With that in mind, on Tuesday, Nov. 2, Torin Sweeney spoke openly about the cell tower issues in front of the Scitaute Board of Selectmen and requested that they file an appeal to the Federal Court Judgment issued on Sept. 28. His speech crystallized the fact that the town had a strong legal basis to defend this decision. Additionally, he presented strong financial reasons for the town to oppose the tower. If the cell tower goes up, tax abatements are certainly to follow resulting in lower property taxes to the town for decades to follow.

Despite presenting the selectmen with indisputable federal case law, the selectmen still refused to appeal this decision. So much for Mr. Sweeney's ideas and comments being welcome.

Several citizens within the community have decided to do what the town would not and have filed a lawsuit against the town's planning board and Omnipoint. As this litigation progresses, I will periodically update you with its progress.

The basis for this lawsuit is rather simple. in granting the special permit to Omnipoint on Oct. 19, the Town and Omnipoint decided they are above Scituate Town Bylaws, the General Laws of Massachusetts, and the 1st, 5th and 10th amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Addressing a specific comment made in last week's article on this topic by the planning board chairman, I challenge Mr. Limbacher's statement, "Its important to understand the tower bylaw was not held in a vacuum". The facts show that this zoning district passed into Scituate town law on at the town meeting on March 2, 1998 by a vote of 253 'yes' votes to 18 'no' votes. The town of Scituate has a population of approximately 20,000 and 253 voted in favor of the district. In summary, a little over one percent of the town voted in favor of this district. I wonder what the other 99 percent of the town's population think of having this district abut a residential neighborhood?

Gray squirrels ... in a nutshell

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGAN

There's not much happening out there in the landscape these days, relatively speaking. We're past peak color and with the exception of cold weather crops such as kale, gardens are finished. And many of our summer visitors are winging their way to warmer climes for their millennium bash. Which is all the more reason we should appreciate the antics of gray squirrels, rustling the sere leaves as they gather and bury their winter stores, one of the few signs of life in an otherwise browning and barren world.

When it comes to squirrels, you probably fall into one of four categories. You find them cute and fascinating, a high wire artist-acrobat-trapeze artist rolled into one little muscular bundle. Or, they are wily schemers, lying in wait to rob newly-filled bird feeders. Perhaps you think them just plain vermin or you barely give them a second thought.

I was of the last category, paying them little attention as they scampered across my picket fence, stared down at me in the kitchen through the skylight or helped themselves to birdseed from a bag in the garage. Until some friends visited us from Brazil. They had never seen squirrels and took delight in following them around, watching their high jinks, taking their picture and luring them closer with handfuls of food. I decided then to give squirrels a second look.

More than 365 species of squirrel, representing seven families, and ranging in size from five inches to three feet long, are scattered across every country of the world except Australia, Madagascar and the polar regions. The three most common families are ground squirrels, which include chipmunks and woodchucks, flying squirrels, which don't really fly, but rather glide with the help of a membrane between the front and hind legs, and tree squirrels, which include our ubiquitous, watchful backyard visitor, the Eastern Gray (Sciurus carolinensis).

Fossil records trace the gray (also spelled "grey" in Europe and Canada) back more than 50 million years. Sometimes called "tree rats," squirrels are rodents, the world's largest mammalian order which, in addition to mice, voles and rats, includes porcupines, prairie dogs and beavers. The squirrel's common name, Sciurus, derives from the Greek, "skiouros," meaning "shade tail." That "shade tail," a bushy, multipurpose tool which serves as a balance, a parachute, an umbrella, a blanket and a means of communication, no doubt saves the squirrel from the near-universal revulsion its rat relative inspires.

A solitary animal, the gray squirrel normally lives alone except during severe cold. The nest, called a drey, is an elaborate, spherical, waterproof structure built, in tree branches or cavities, of leaves and twigs with a soft inner lining of moss, fur or feathers. Now that trees are bare, you'll see the nests, which look like clumps of leaves, wedged in forks.

Non-territorial and generalist feeders, grays have a wide field of vision, excellent hearing and a keen nose. They spend most of their time on the ground — though at the first sign of danger they climb up — roaming in an area from three to five acres where hiding spots let them catch a few winks or elude predators, including owls, hawks, fox, coyote, domestic cats and dogs, and humans who can legally hunt squirrels. Indeed, for early Native Americans and colonists, the squirrel was an important food source. Herbivorous, squirrels prefer nuts, berries, bark, mushrooms, tubers and seeds, but have been known to eat birds' eggs and bugs and to chew bone for calcium if other food sources are unavailable.

Squirrel tracks.

Like all rodents, a squirrel's front teeth grow throughout its life but are kept short by constant grinding during sleep and while foraging. Active year-round during the daytime, this time of the year is particularly busy as squirrels go into hoarding mode, instinctively preparing for winter by eating more to gain weight and burying food in hundreds of locations across their territory — called scatter hoarding — for the long, scarce months ahead. Before burying, squirrels break open their nuts and clean them by licking, applying a scent which later guides the squirrel back, even if the nut is buried under a foot of snow. Not all nuts are recovered and many a majestic oak out in the landscape was planted by a squirrel.

A frenzy of late winter activity, which includes rambunctious chases through trees, signals the start of mating season. Each year, females have up to three litters of three to five babies. Newborns, weighing about an ounce, are pink, hairless and toothless. Weaning begins at six weeks and by 10 or 12 weeks, the juveniles are ready for a measure of independence, though they remain with the family for the next few months. By fall, they are on their own. Fully grown, grays reach a length of 15 to 20 inches, half of which is tail, and weigh about one pound. Under ideal conditions, they can live six or seven years. Most probably don't make it a year.

Come early summer, it is not uncommon to find a baby squirrel, often at the base of a tree, apparently orphaned. We found one this year and took it to the teaching hospital of the New England Wildlife Center on Fort Hill Street where it was successfully nourished and released in Bare Cove Park. I've since learned that not all babies out of the nest are necessarily orphans. Even if a nest is damaged, a mother may retrieve her baby when she hears it crying and carry it by mouth to a back-up nest. Only if the squirrel is injured or the mother does not return should a baby be brought to a wildlife rehabilitator.

The non-profit New England Wildlife Center, now in its 15th year, advocates for wildlife and habitat preservation and treats more than 4,000 sick, injured and orphaned wild animals — representing 180 species — annually, returning most back to the wild. Those unable to return to their natural habitat become part of the Center's educational programs. The Center will accept any wild animal, but recommends that residents telephone before bringing an animal in.

As for our chatty, contortionist friends, a few do's and don'ts:

Do not attempt to feed (as our friends from Brazil did) squirrels by hand. The placement of the eyes on the side of the head prevents them from seeing straight ahead. The food and your finger are one and the same and you may wind up with a nasty 1/2" deep bite.

Do not attempt to rehabilitate a squirrel without proper training or keep a squirrel as a pet. Not only is it illegal to harbor wild animals, but a squirrel's hyperactivity, gnawing and clawing make it nearly impossible to domesticate.

Do provide a feeder for squirrels. One of the simplest is a spike or nail onto which a corn cob can be mounted.

Do let yourself be entertained. Appreciate the squirrel's alertness and perseverence and the many obstacles it overcomes to get what it wants. The lesson squirrels can teach us is that some things are worth going out on a limb for.

Tedeschi manager asks for bylaw change

Wants to open at 6 a.m.

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

You work in Boston. You have to catch an early ferry in Hingham or maybe you attempt to get a parking spot at the Red Line parking lot in Braintree. You may even be one of those brave souls who drives all the way to Boston. Whatever your preferred mode of transportation, the chances are that you leave early. Real early. If you want to stop for coffee before 7 a.m., however, you'd better bypass Tedeschi Food Shops in Cohasset Village.

By virtue of a town bylaw that doesn't allow grocery stores to open before 7 a.m., Tedeschi cannot serve those early-morning commuters. Retail food outlets, such as Dunkin' Donuts, are allowed to be open because they are selling "fast-foods' that are meant for immediate consumption rather than household goods.

Any item that includes a fast-food tax is not considered a retail grocery. Thus, it is legal in Cohasset to sell a cup of coffee before 7 a.m., but selling a can is illegal at that same time.

Tedeschi's manager, Crystal Callahan of Hull, started a citizen's petition to amend the bylaw at the Dec. 6 special town meeting to allow food stores to open an hour earlier.

"I called [Town Manager] Mark Haddad on a Friday and asked him if I could get a petition article in," she told the advisory committee at its Tuesday meeting. "He said it was due by the next Tuesday so I really had to hurry. I just left it on the counter and people looked at it and signed it."

Callahan told the advisory committee that she could skirt the bylaw by saying that she would only sell coffee before 7 a.m., but added that such a scenario would be unrealistic.

"The bylaw is only for groceries, but my biggest reason for asking for the change is coffee," she said. "But if someone wants to buy milk or diapers when they're getting their coffee, I'm not going to tell them to come back at 7 a.m. My company's not going to have us do that anyway. If the bylaw doesn't pass, then we'll keep opening at 7 a.m."

"My early morning customers come in at 7 a.m. and they've already gone to North Scituate for coffee or breakfast."

— Tedeschi Food Shops manager Crystal Callahan

When asked by members of the committee if she had heard any objections to the bylaw, Callahan told them she had only heard a couple.

"One thing I've heard is that people don't want 24-hour stores," she said. "The other thing I've heard is that people don't want Shaw's or Stop and Shop open at 5 or 6 a.m."

Selectman Merle Brown had a similar concern in mind when he suggested an amendment to the proposed bylaw.

"I'd like to see the bylaw amended to only include stores with five or less employees," he said. "That would keep Shaw's and Stop and Shop from opening early. The law seems to be hurting the smaller stores that it could really help."

Callahan said one of the problems caused by the 7 a.m. opening time is that it causes some delivery trucks to have to come in the late morning or afternoon.

"Right now, I get most of my big trucks in before 8 a.m., so they don't cause traffic in the village during the middle of the day," she said. "Unfortunately, some of the earlier trucks have to go around Cohasset because I'm not open yet. They go to Scituate, Hingham, Weymouth, and other towns and then have to come all the way back at the end of their route. On Fridays, I have to come in early to let the Pepsi deliveries come in because they can't alter their routes."

The primary reason Callahan wants to open an hour earlier, however, is her feeling that she is losing business to other towns.

"My early morning customers come in at 7 a.m. and they've already gone to North Scituate for coffee or breakfast," she said. The morning sales are almost completely profit. Coffee, for instance, is 90 percent profit. This will help our business and I don't see how it would be hurting anyone."

Callahan added that Cohasset's bylaw forces her to have different hours than almost every other Tedeschi's.

"There are 134 Tedeschi's and there are only two that don't open by 6 a.m.," she said. "I'm one and the other is in an office building in Quincy. That building doesn't open until 7 a.m."

Advisory committee chairman Dick Avery said the warrant article seemed reasonable to him.

"It looks like Tedeschi just wants to catch the early-morning crowd," he said.

Neither the selectmen nor the advisory committee have made a recommendation on the warrant article.

"If it passes, we'll do two weeks of advertising and see how it goes," Callahan said. "If we're not making enough money to keep it viable, then we'll go back to 7 a.m."

Sewer project at a temporary standstill

in the vicinity of Summer, Spring, and South Main streets. The new pipes will connect buildings in those areas to an existing sewer main. The buildings are currently served by individual septic systems.

Though the presence of contaminated soil demands increased safety precautions, Coughlin said the project will not be put on hold for a significant length of time.

"This shouldn't hold up the project for more than a couple of weeks," he said. "We have to resubmit plans to DEP, but they know this is an ongoing project and they're not trying to stop it. From my preliminary conversations with them, they understand that there's a greater environmental benefit in doing the project than not doing it."

Most of the safety precautions necessitated by the contamination are to protect the safety of workers digging and laying pipes in the area.

"Basically, we'll have to treat the site as a contaminated area," Coughlin said. "The pipelines don't have to be redesigned. We just have to change some of the methods we use. There has to be constant monitoring to ensure that we segregate clean materials from contaminated materials. We have to deal very differently with those materials when they're excavated. To further protect worker safety, we'll also put ventilation blowers in the trenches."

Modifications will also be made to ensure that gasoline doesn't seep into the new sewer pipes.

"We're going to change the gaskets in the pipes, which will provide greater protection from gasoline," Coughlin said. We'll also put a special rubber casing on the pipes for added protection, because gasoline can't attack those types of rubber."

CDW Consultants, a civil and environmental engineering firm from Framingham, came to appraise the contamination the day after it was found. In a report to DEP, the consultants described how far underground the gasoline was sitting.

"The top three feet of soil is uncontaminated and will be stockpiled separately from the contaminated soil located at depths of greater than three feet," the report said. "After the sewer pipes are installed, the contaminated soil will be reused as backfill material."

"We're going to put the contaminated soil back in place," Coughlin agreed. "It will be stored next to the trench while the work is going on."

Modifications to the project and delays will increase the cost of the project, but Coughlin was unsure what the added cost would be.

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829
FAVORITE THRONE
One of our sidelines in the plumbing business is draining water from the distribution systems in summer houses. We drain out the water in the fall and turn it back on in the spring. Years ago there were numerous houses along the coast that no one lived in during the winter months, and we would drain hundreds of them. Today we drain only about twenty-five. One house that we have drained for years is located on Atlantic Avenue in Cohasset. The house is perched on a rocky ledge that juts out into the Atlantic Ocean. My Uncle Merrill always claimed that the best place to go to the bathroom in the world was located in that house. One year I was sent out to drain the house and I was interested in seeing this famous throne. He was absolutely right. Someone had installed a bathroom on the old closed in porch on the second floor. You could sit on the john and your view was a grand vision of the harbor, the marshes, the rocky crags on the adjacent shore and the lighthouse two miles out into the sea. The whole panorama looks like an oil painting by Sargent. You are also seated at the entrance to the harbor and can watch the fishing and pleasure boats run in and out. It was the first bathroom I ever used where I didn't need something to read.

graphed the production.

"It is kind of intimidating at first, but everyone is a ton of fun," she says.

"A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," is directed by Doug Trudeau and co-produced by Paula Higgins and Dawn Rota, both of Scituate. The musical director is Scott Walker, of Abington. Trudeau is active with theater arts in a variety of ways throughout the community. He is a teacher at Scituate High School, and has also been involved with such groups as Show Stoppers and the Curtain Call Theater. Currently he is directing the show, "Secrets Every Smart Traveler Should Know," which runs at the Copley Theater in Boston.

Opening night was indeed deemed a success by all. Highlights included a very funny rendition of "Everyone Ought To Have a Maid," sung by Byrne, Bob Pietrzak, Harvey Kertzman, and Zandy Sheperd.

Pietrzak, a Cohasset resident, plays the charming Roman slave, Pseudolus, the supposed narrator of the play who orchestrates much of the comedic chaos on stage. Kertzman portrays the frantic Hysterium, Pseudolus' sidekick, and Sheperd, a senior at Scituate High School, plays the conniving and cowardly Lycus.

Other memorable moments included the love song, aptly titled "Lovely," sung by the characters, Hero and Philia, and the comedic chase scene that acts as the climax to the production. Tony Midi, who plays Hero, is a resident of Weymouth and works South Shore Hospital, and Melissa Costa, who plays Philia, who works across the way from the Cohasset Town Hall at an after-school program. Other strong performances included Jessica McDonald as Domina, Joe Rota as Erronius, and Chris Hetherington as Miles Gloriuosus. The ensembles of the diverse and winsome Courtesans and the versatile Proteans round out this cast which was never at a loss for energy or pace.

"A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" can be seen this Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m., and next weekend, Nov.19 and 20 at 8 p.m., and Nov. 21 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Hingham and the Front Street Book Store in Scituate, or by phone at 781-383-8264. So if you are looking for "A Comedy Tonight," check out this production at the Cohasset Town Hall soon.

COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY

Emergency access will be needed for Rocky Lane

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Although the fate of the Greenbush commuter rail line is still undecided, meetings continue between the town's Greenbush Mitigation Committee and the MBTA. Draft mitigation plans are worked and reworked to determine how best to reconcile the needs of a diesel rail line with the needs of Cohasset's citizens and its landscape.

The latest draft mitigation plans for Cohasset from the MBTA are currently available at both Town Hall and the town library. Those plans are by no means final, but they do show the steps which the MBTA plans to take in running the commuter rail through Cohasset. One major aspect of the current plans is to provide emergency access to the residents of Rocky Lane.

Rocky Lane lies between North Main Street and James Brook and is parallel to both. The street ends in a cul-de-sac and its only access to the rest of the town is by virtue of an intersection with North Main. Two tracks are planned to cross Rocky Lane and quadrant gates will stop traffic on both sides of the track as a train passes through. Though Greenbush is a single-track line, it does include intermittent segments of double lines, allowing trains to pass one another.

INSIDE GREENBUSH

The intersection of the tracks with Rocky Lane poses a problem, however. If a train were to get stuck as it crossed Rocky Lane, the street would effectively be isolated. Were a fire or a medical emergency to occur at that time, emergency vehicles would have no way to get to the houses on Rocky Lane.

"The people on Rocky Lane would get cut off from the rest of the world and there would be no emergency access," said Greenbush Mitigation Committee chairman Tom Gruber. "The MBTA recognizes this as a serious problem."

To ensure that emergency vehicles can reach Rocky Lane, the MBTA is proposing an access road which would connect the isolated street with Rose Hill Road, which leads into the new Rose Hill subdivision off Route 3A.

"The emergency access road would cross Sanctuary Pond, which is the headwater for James Brook," Gruber said. The road is then to go up to Rose Hill Road, where there are houses all around. There's no open land up there, so the access road would probably have to come through someone's driveway."

Andrew Brennan, MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs, said plans for the access road are only in their initial stages.

"Everything is conceptual at this point," he said. "I don't know yet if the road would come through a driveway or what form it would take."

Only emergency vehicles would have keys to the gated and locked access road. A hammerhead turn, which would allow snow plows room to back up and turn would be placed at the access road's intersection with rocky Lane.

"The access road would have to be plowed by the town," Gruber said. "It would defeat the purpose of having an access road if it were blocked by snow."

A second access road option proposed by the MBTA is a connector road between Rocky Lane and North Main Street that would include a bridge over the train tracks.

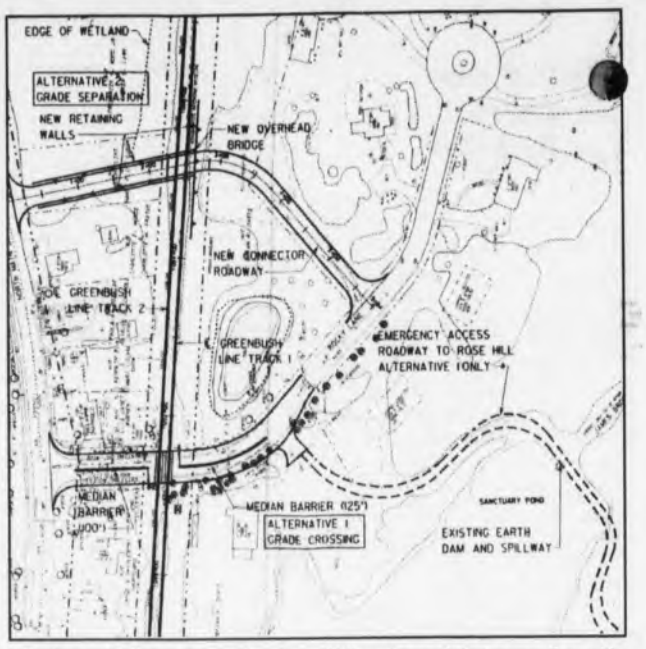
"The land is pretty high where they're looking at putting the bridge," Gruber said. "Because of that advantage, they'd really only have to build the bridge on one side."

If the MBTA decided to build the bridge and connector road, that road would be Rocky Lane's only access to North Main Street. The current access to North Main Street would be closed off.

"No one really lives near North Main Street on Rocky Lane anyway," Gruber said. "The houses are near the cul-de-sac and the bridge and connector road would still provide access for those people to North Main Street. Closing off the old Rocky Lane would save the cost of a grade crossing and also eliminate a place for potential accidents. It's a safety and financial concern."

The MBTA would have to pay the costs of land acquisition and infrastructure improvements for either access road alternative.

"The access road connecting to Rose Hill Road is the MBTA's preferred alternative," Gruber said. "The bridge is considerably more expensive, at $2.1 million, than is the access road at $800,000."



Gruber said that a potential problem may exist with the option of an access road to Rose Hill Road.

"The access road is to go on top of Sanctuary Dam, which is an earthen dam and is not very well constructed," he said. "If the dam broke, there would be a James Brook flood in the village the likes of which we've never seen."

Brennan said the MBTA has yet to study the potential of flooding near Sanctuary Dam, but said it would if the Rose Hill access road was chosen.

"Anytime you look to build on impervious services, you have to be extremely careful," he said. "We'll do a flood analysis if that's the option we go with, but we haven't gotten to that stage yet."

Fire chief Roger Lincoln said both alternatives are acceptable to him.

"I'm for an access road to Rocky Lane so long as it is open to emergency vehicles at all times of year," he said. "We've discussed the Rose Hill option and that seems fine with me as long as snow plows can get through. I'm also interested and intrigued by the bridge idea. It seems like a viable option as well."

While Greenbush is still in its planning stages, Gruber said it is important that people look at the plans at the library or Town Hall and stay informed about the MBTA's mitigation plans for Cohasset.

"Unless people come to our mitigation meetings, how are they going to know what's going on and what the impact on Cohasset will be?" he asked. "I want to get as much factual information out there as possible so people in town know what's going on."

This is the first of a four-part series which will focus upon the possible effects of the Greenbush commuter rail line in different parts of Cohasset.

MBTA response blasts Harvard study

Transit officials say new rail report is flawed

By Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITER

A report released by the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University has riled MBTA officials who released a 12-page response this week, discrediting the study's conclusions on restoration of the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad..

"We feel the study was seriously flawed," Kevin Dasey, senior project coordinator on the MBTA Greenbush project, said Tuesday.

Dasey spoke briefly on the Harvard study while meeting with the Scituate rail mitigation committee Tuesday afternoon. He supplied the committee with the memorandum outlining where the MBTA believes the Harvard study was wrong.

The Harvard report, commissioned and paid for by the town of Hingham, concluded the Greenbush rail alternatives analysis is deficient in several ways and more work needs to be done before the transit authority chooses a mode of transportation for the corridor. The conclusions reached in the report served to substantiate many residents' and officials' concerns about the T's facts and figures. Jonathan Richmond of the Taubman Center was the principal author of the study which took a year to complete.

"We documented 40 errors or incorrect assumptions," Dasey said. The MBTA remains convinced that restoration of commuter rail service is the preferred alternative.

In a letter to Scituate selectmen chairman Richard Lane, Dasey wrote, "While we understand that Mr. Richmond is a research fellow at the Taubman Center and has no professional planning credentials or experience, we were still very surprised at the number of errors (almost 40) that were found in the report, given the Kennedy School's reputation for excellence."

The response to the Harvard study was prepared by Barry Faulkner of Sverdrup Civil, Inc., consultants to the MBTA.

"It was sort of what I expected," Hingham's Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan of MBTA response to the study.

"His favorite technique is to claim everyone else is biased and he is not," said Macmillan of Faulkner, who prepared the response. "He did the same thing with the report generated by the Army Corps of Engineers." The Corps is the lead federal agency reviewing the project.

"The points that are made in the Harvard report are valid," Macmillan said.

Dasey's letter outlined some of the more glaring mistakes in the Harvard study including its indication that commuter boat parking was not free and that commuter buses and boats are unsubsidized.

"We are always open to constructive input, but it must be correct and able to be substantiated before we can use it, as we have an obligation to 'get it right' in spending the public's money. Unfortunately this report doesn't 'get it right,' and serves to mislead," Dasey wrote.

Skippers run ends

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High boys soccer season is over, but not before the Skippers went on a Cinderella run in which they knocked off Westport in the first round of the tournament.

The Skippers magical run came to an end with a hard-fought 2-0 loss to Hanover in the Division 3 South sectional quarterfinals. It was a game in which Cohasset's play was so inspiring that Hanover coach Jim Sylvia spoke to the Skippers after the game.

"It was nice for him to come over, because he was sincere," said Cohasset coach Juan Ramos.

Sylvia was glad to come out with a win.

"They dominated our midfield," said Sylvia, whose squad won both regular season games by a combined score of 8-0. "That was a different Cohasset team than we've seen in a while. Ramos is doing a great job with them. He's got them playing the type of soccer that I used to see from them. That was like the old Cohasset teams. They just kept coming at us."

Hanover had the wind for the first half and continually kept the ball in the Skippers end of the field. Cohasset goalie Kevin Devito was on top of his game ,though, and recorded eight saves in the first half alone to keep his squad close.

"We knew he (Devito) was going to be tough," said Sylvia. "He could've been on the all-star team, so we knew he was a good player.

The Indians finally were able to score when John Berenz blasted a shot from 35 yards out midway through the first half for a 1-0 lead. Hanover would take that lead into the break.

Field hockey squad bounced out of tourney

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The varsity field hockey team lost 3-0 to Milton High School in the first round of the playoffs, but one cannot help but be impressed by the year the Lady Skippers have had.

In a do or die situation, the girls in blue came out with the same determination that had carried them to the tournament. However, the Skippers were overmatched by the Wildcats of Milton on last Friday, at Cohasset's Alumni field.

The season came to a close with the defeat to Milton High, after Cohasset posted a regular season record of eight wins, five losses, and five ties. It was the first time ever that a Cohasset field hockey team has had eight wins in one season.

And now, a look back at four of the year's highlights, a roller coaster season filled with many more ups than downs.

First, the veteran seniors had been the motivational and emotional backbone of the team. Captains Melissa Pyfrom and Jen Meehan were like the "big sisters" of the team. Without senior goalie Melissa Rosano, the defense never would have had as strong of an anchor to back up the forwards. Also included in the defense were Naomi Ansbergs and Kellie Straughn. With their talent and hard work, they were great role models for the underclassmen.

Second, was the outstanding junior class, with all-star representatives Andi Shaghnessy, Sarah Kidder, and Maggie O'Connor. Twelve of the girls on this year's squad will be returning for next season.

The next high point in the season was the game against Notre Dame that locked in a Cohasset berth in the postseason. The game was a real nail-biter, with Cohasset just eeking out the victory 1-0 to put the Skippers in the tournament. After the game, the players, tearful with exhilaration, proceeded to celebrate with ultimate joy.

The last feature of the year came on Homecoming weekend, an exciting scoreless tie against the first place team in the league, Hanover. This game was especially sweet, because Hanover was heavily favored, but could not come up with a win against the resilient Cohasset team in front of an enthusiastic crowd of over one hundred.

Debbie Bostwick was the coach of this team, and was extremely proud of the job they did. Hosting a tournament game was a great accomplishment for Bostwick, and qualifying for the playoffs before the last game was also a treat. It was the first time that had ever happened for the field hockey team.

Despite the fact that the girls followed Cohasset's decade long trend of not being able to get past the first round of the tournament, there is always hope for next year. Congratulations seniors, on an amazing season, and good luck juniors, sophomores, and freshmen for an amazing year ahead.

Skippers prepare for home finale on Friday

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The odds were stacked against the Cohasset High football team long before they even took the field Friday night at Norwell High.

It was the last home game for the Clippers, and with a win they would be one step closer to clinching a Super Bowl berth.

"I think Norwell decided to play their best game of the season against us," said Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe after his team dropped a 29-6 decision. "I didn't think we played that bad. Norwell was just the better team."

The Clippers asserted themselves on their second possession, marching 53 yards on nine plays to score on a Jim Lewis quarterback sneak from one yard out. Steve Williams (11 carries, 89 yards) had the big play of the drive, running for 33 yards on the first play.

Again Cohasset went three and out, but the Skippers defense came up with a stand of their own to force Norwell to punt. The drive was kept alive though when the Skippers were whistled for roughing the kicker.

Norwell took advantage, scoring four plays later on a Williams' nine-yard run for a 14-0 lead with 5:03 left in the half.

Cohasset attempted to run out the clock, and actually got a first down, but the drive stalled, and the Clippers took over on their own 32 with 1:51 left.

That would prove to be plenty of time for Norwell, which managed to score after running the ball on six consecutive plays to chew up 68 yards. Mike Mohan scored from 12 yards out to cap the drive and give the Clippers a 20-0 lead with just 27 seconds left in the half. Williams had another big run, going for 36 yards to put Norwell in good shape.

As impressive as the offense was, the defense was even more dominating, holding Cohasset outstanding running back Daniel Trowers to a 30 yards on nine carries.

"I thought we did a real nice job on him," said Norwell coach Jim Sullivan. "We had one breakdown. With the exception of that one play, we were able to hold him back as much as we could. We've been playing tenacious defense all year. He was the marquee player, and we had him well-covered."

The previous week, Trowers rushed for 360 yards and scored five touchdowns. Against Norwell, he would keep pounding away and manged to finish with 12 carries for 95 yards against the Clippers, including a magnificent 67-yard touchdown run with 43 seconds left in the third quarter and his team trailing 29-0.

"Once they saw that we weren't able to pass, they just ganged up on Trowers," said Rolfe.

Cohasset quarterback Jason Browne looked good and demonstrated his strong throwing arm, but he was victimized by a several dropped balls by his receivers.

"He put the ball where he had to, we just didn't make plays," said Rolfe

Norwell was able to put the Skippers in a hole in the second half as they marched down to the Cohasset 35. Facing fourth and 20, the Clippers elected to punt, and Jim Lewis was able to drop the ball inside the five, where a hustling Dan McNamara downed the ball on the one-yard line.

The Clippers got a safety on the next play as McNamara stormed through the line and sacked Brown before he was able to hand the ball off.

Cohasset was forced to kick to Norwell, and the Clippers scored four plays later when McNamara hauled in a 33-yard touchdown pass from Lewis for a 29-0 lead. McNamara was all over the field, catching two passes for 56 yards. He also downed another punt, this time on the two yard line, and had 10 tackles.

"He had an incredible game," said Sullivan.

Cohasset will try to regroup with a league game against Hanover in the Skippers home finale tomorrow night. The Indians lost to Abington, 23-7, and have been battling injuries.

"We have to pass the ball and play better defense if we want to win Friday night," said Rolfe.

Skippers run ends

When the second half started, the Skippers came out on the attack and managed to get off several good shots, but Hanover goalie Andy Hamilton made some spectacular saves.

"The only reason we won was because of the defense and the goalie," said Sylvia. "We couldn't finish against them."

Cohasset continued to press, but the Indians were able to score a second goal with just over three minutes remaining to put the game away.

"We gave them a shot," said an understated Ramos. "I really thought we were going to score, but they got that second goal and that was it."

Late last week, a trip to the sectional quarterfinals appeared unfathomable. The Skippers opened up the tournament last Friday, hosting Cape Cod Tech in a preliminary game.

Despite dominating the action, Cohasset only scored once and had a 1-0 win on a goal by Eric Shea. The Skippers would face Westport the very next day in the first round on the road. Westport was the top seed, and had a bye until the first round.

After the game, Ramos hardly sounded upbeat about his team's chances, particularly when Shea was injured late in the game, and carted to the locker room when it was over.

"We did not play well at all," said Ramos. "I wasn't happy with that. I expect to play better."

And as for taking on Westport the next day?

"That's ridiculous," said Ramos. "There's no way we should play back to back, especially since they (Westport) didn't even play a game. It's silly. It doesn't look like Shea's gonna play."

But Shea did play, although it looked like Ramos' fears would come true when the Skippers fell behind 2-0.

"We were unlucky being down 2-0," said Ramos. "But the kids never gave up."

Ted Gledhill sparked the rally when he scored to cut the lead to 2-1.

"Ted's goal got us going and turned the game around," said Ramos. "He really worked hard for that. It was a real hustle goal."

Shea scored to put the goal into overtime, and Matt Bilodeau scored the game-winner to propel the Skippers into the sectional quarterfinals at Hanover.

After the loss to the Indians, Ramos spoke to his club.

"I just told them that I was very proud of them," said Ramos. "It was an honor to coach them."

The sixth grade takes a trip to Expo Center

By Caitlin O'Connell and Emilie Shea
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Oct. 21, the sixth-grade students from the Deer Hill Elementary School attended the International Festival at the Expo Center in Boston. Although the Expo Center was quite crowded with students from many schools who were attending, the Deer Hill students had a very enjoyable experience.

"You could spend days at the festival because there were so many fun things to see and do," Katie Moore explained.

Each student was given a passport, and as they visited the different booths representing a wide variety of countries, the kids could expect to see people from the native country, many objects from that country and learn lots of different facts.

"I really enjoyed learning about all the different countries and their cultures," Brooke Allen said.

Every group of students was required to watch a live performance that featured singers, actors and actresses from different countries. The Voices of Africa was a group of four women singing and dancing to an African beat using drums. The alternative performance many students watched was The Inca Son. Students say this was very impressive and fun because the performers allowed you to get involved with the music by singing, dancing, clapping or just swaying to the rhythm.

During this field trip, the students were allowed to buy souvenirs at a large marketplace that included many booths with traditional objects from each country. It was very fascinating to see what foreign people use for pleasure and everyday life.

At the festival, students had the chance to buy the lunch of their choice. There were ethnic dishes available from a wide variety of countries. They were able to buy these foods at the International Cafe. The most popular foods were from China, Mexico and Italy. Everyone agreed that their meal was fulfilling, unique and delicious. Most kids say that they wouldn't mind sampling that tasty food again! As a result of this trip, the sixth-grade students came back to Cohasset having learned about different cultures. They also sampled exotic foods and enjoyed the entire experience! The trip was definitely a success! All the sixth-graders and their teachers would like to send a special thank you to the Diversity Committee; this experience was possible as a result of its generous donation.

School librarian attends conference

School library media specialist Joan Gallagher of Cohasset Middle/High School and president of the Massachusetts School Library Media Association was one of the 650 library media specialists who attended their annual conference this past week in Worcester.

The theme of MSLMA's conference was: At the Crossroads—Integrating the Massachusetts education reform frameworks, literature and technology. Kathy Schrock, creator of the dense WebPage Kathy Schrock's Guide for Educators and technology chair at the Dennis-Yarmouth Regional School, was one of the featured speakers as were Chris Crutcher author of Crazy Horse Electric Game and Chinese Handcuffs and William Martin, author of Back Bay and Citizen Washington.

There were informal discussion groups to exchange ideas on running library media centers in the next century. Other sessions included speakers on books for children/young adults, Massachusetts frameworks, using the internet and other technology with students and the changing role of school library media specialist.

The Massachusetts School Library Media Association is dedicated to the improvement of teaching and learning through the integration of school library media programs, resources and technologies into the total educational process. With its diverse membership, the organization advocates, promotes and strengthens school library media services to students and teachers. Strong school library media programs have been shown to enhance student performance.

The goal of the attendees was to better prepare students to function successfully in the information age. Attendees also had an opportunity to examine new books for their libraries.

St. Anthony's shows off new parish house

Space used for religious education classes and social gatherings

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The brick exterior and eyebrow windows of the new parish house at St. Anthony's Catholic Church meld so well with the church itself that it's hard to tell the church is 35 years older. Only the plaque on the front of the parish house which bears the inscription 'A. D. 1999' gives the secret away to a passerby. Upon walking inside its doors, however, one can tell immediately that everything inside the parish center is brand new.

"We've got eight classrooms for religious education, two offices, a beautiful hall, and a state-of-the-art kitchen," said Fr. John R. Mulvehill, pastor of St. Anthony's parish. "We have 700 students who come to classes here. It's a great building for them."

The classrooms are painted in a light blue and feature white dry-erase boards instead of blackboards. Teachers can write on the dry-erase boards with marker rather than chalk, a change made to help children with asthma, who sometimes suffer breathing problems due to breathing in chalk dust.

"The classrooms also have dividers in them, which can be removed to double the size of the rooms for large-group activities," Mulvehill said.

That kind of space is a departure from life before the new parish center, when Mulvehill and the rest of the religious education staff held classes wherever they could find room.

"We had the kids all over the church," he said. "We had them in the basement, in the "crying room" in the back of the church, and even across the street at the rectory."

The spacious, 2,352 square-foot hall seats 350 for a performance or a speaking presentation and 150 for a sit-down dinner.

Mulvehill said the auditorium will be a multi-use facility.

"We have a group called the Arimatheans who provide hospitality after funerals," Mulvehill said. "They'll be able to use the hall and kitchen. We have a new youth minister, Bill Coleman, who has a lot of ideas and plans to have performances by the kids. The kids from the Appalachia Service Project met here as well. We'll also have social activities for adults. And, most importantly, the hall serves as a gathering place for the parish after Mass."

The hall is separated from the kitchen by an open serving counter, just one of the features of the kitchen that Mulvehill said caterers enjoy.

"When we were designing the kitchen, I talked to caterers about their ideal setup," he said. "We took a lot of their ideas. "We have walk-in refrigerators, a reach-in warmer, and a convection oven. Caterers go crazy when they see it."

The kitchen has allowed some of the parish's youngsters to serve other segments of the community.

"We had the junior high kids in here cooking dinner for Father Bill's Place," Mulvehill said. "They're going to be in here again soon cooking for senior citizens."

On nice days, the parish may also spill out onto the patio when they gather following Mass. A gazebo and terrace were planned as well but those uses were denied by the zoning board of appeals, who sided with residents concerned about potential noise from outdoor gatherings.

Father Mulvehill stands inside the auditorium of the new St. Anthony's Parish House.

Construction began on the 10,500 square-foot parish house in October 1998, with the dedication only 11 months later on Sept. 19 of this year. Mulvehill said the project was completed so quickly because the parish knew exactly what it wanted.

"Fr. John Keohane, the late pastor of St. Anthony's, started planning this building back in 1993," Mulvehill said. "At that time, there was a moratorium on adding sewer connections in town, which prevented us from building the parish center. When that moratorium was lifted in early spring 1998, we were ready to go."

The parish center also lies in the flood plain, which accounts for the 70 feet of 30-inch pipe which run underneath the structure.

"People were very surprised we were able to get the permitting done so quickly," Mulvehill said, "but we did what the conservation commission and the wetlands laws told us to do. We planted the necessary amount of trees to act as a buffer and we got the approvals we needed."

Currently, the parish office and religious education office both reside at the rectory across the street, but both will move to the parish center once some phone problems are solved. Mulvehill will maintain his office in the rectory.

While he will not be in the parish center on a daily basis, Mulvehill is proud of the part he played in planning a building that will be a centerpiece of parish activity for years to come.

"This will be the gathering place for the parish community," he said. "It's going to be here long after I'm gone."

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

WOODEN IT BE NICE?

Four out of five kitchen projects and two out of three new bathrooms have wood as the material of choice for their cabinetry. The National Kitchen and Bath Association's latest trend survey shows that the most popular material for cabinetry is maple (42%), followed by oak (29%), cherry (24%), laminate (13%), and pine (6%). While solid wood is reserved for use in premium cabinetry, wood veneer (over a core material of particleboard or plywood) is used for nearly all others. This works to the consumer's advantage, however, in that veneer laminates are far less likely to warp than solid wood - making them especially appropriate for humid climates. Painted cabinetry generally makes use of close-grained woods, such as maple or poplar.

You can improve the look and feel of your kitchen by replacing the cabinets. THE DESIGNING WOMAN can help you create a kitchen that satisfies your personal tastes and meets your demands for space and functionality. We can create a design plan, order materials and coordinate the work of craftsmen. We can also advise you on window and door placement and other remodeling techniques. Welcome the new year with a remodeled kitchen. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a consultation.

Hint: Painted wood cabinetry is frequently treated with a thermofoil process to prevent chipping.

Angelspeake talk at Second Congregational

The Task Force on Spirituality and Healing presents Angelspeake with Trudy Diane Griswold on Wednesday, Nov. 17, at 7:30 p.m. at Second Congregational Church, next to town hall in Cohasset.

Trudy Griswold, author and cofounder of Angelspeake, believes that people are spiritual beings experiencing a physical life and incorporates that belief in her personal work with clients, whether they come to develop greater self-awareness or self-esteem, understand their God-given abilities, enlarge their life dream or to develop healthy relationships.

Angelspeake, a national organization, was formed by Trudy and her sister, Barbara Mark of San Diego, to teach individuals about their angelic guides, the ministry performed by such divine beings and how to communicate with their own angels at any time they choose.

Good Morning, America (ABC-TV) was the first network to feature an actual Angelspeake workshop during a week-long television series titled "Spirituality in America." Trudy and Barbara appeared on The Leeza Show (CBS-TV), and the Public Broadcasting System (PBS) purchased the rights to produce and air a new hour-long video of the sister's most recent workshop, "Speaking With Your Angels: A Guide."

How much will Cohasset grow?

Buildout analysis suggests 1,000 new households possible

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Looking around the South Shore, it is obvious the area is growing by leaps and bounds. Homes in new subdivisions are being bought in towns such as Kingston and Plymouth as fast as developers can build them. What does the growth of the region mean for Cohasset? Is it indicative of what the future holds for the town or is Cohasset isolated from the explosive growth being seen in other communities.?

To find out the answers to such questions, the Massachusetts Area Planning Council (MAPC) conducted a buildout analysis of towns in Southeastern Massachusetts to see what towns would look like if developed to their maximum capacity.

"The state felt that Southeastern Massachusetts was the most likely region to experience growth in the near future," said selectman Ronnie McMorris. "The state started a program called Vision 2020 and funded a buildout analysis of all the towns in the region. There was no cost to Cohasset. The state wanted to see what the town would look like if it was built out completely."

The projections done by the MAPC state that the population of Cohasset could swell to 10,769 at buildout. The number of households is projected to increase to 3,837 from a 1998 total of 2,801.

"We feel there is an immediate need for Cohasset to utilize available resources to achieve a master plan for the town," said Veneta Roebuck of the conservation commission at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting. "The [state] House and Senate recently passed the Community Preservation Act, which makes money available for participating towns to protect open space. We need to do whatever it takes to preserve the quality of life in Cohasset. To do that, we need a master plan."

Roebuck was joined in lobbying for a town master plan by members of the board of health, open space committee, and conservation commission. Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the inability of developers to construct suitable septic systems on much of the town's undeveloped, rocky soil has served as a barrier to development in many parts of town. He cautioned, however, that the septic hurdle may be one that developers will be able to clear in the next few years.

"We've been relying for a long time upon the fact that a lot of our land is unsuitable for on-site septic systems," he said. "New technology is likely to make that land developable in the School committee picks grade reconfiguration

Renovations to move forward based on that choice

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The school committee voted unanimously for a reconfiguration of the grades in the Cohasset school district, agreeing that it would best serve the needs of students for the next 50 years.

Under the proposed reconfiguration, the third grade is to move from Osgood to Deer Hill, while the sixth grade is to relocate to the middle high school. Osgood will become a K-2 school, Deer Hill will include grades 3-5, Cohasset Middle School will be 6-8, and the high school will remain 9-12.

The changes in grade alignment are contingent upon voters approving an override for the project, which current budget estimates place at about $40 million. The project is expected to be reimbursed by the state at 60 percent, leaving an actual cost to Cohasset of approximately $16 million.

The cost to Cohasset of doing the same renovations without the grade realignment is estimated to be $15 million. Realignment costs an extra $1 million because it requires a second-story addition at the middle school that would be unnecessary if the sixth grade stayed at Deer Hill.

The new grade alignment will not be implemented until renovations are completed. If those renovations proceed as scheduled, Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey said the earliest Cohasset students will be affected by the new grade configurations would be the beginning of the 2002-2003 school year.

"I feel confident that the reconfiguration is in the best interests of education in Cohasset."
School committee member Betsy Connolly

"We'll be submitting our plans to the state in June 2000," he said at the school committee's Nov. 10 meeting. "We'd be able to go out to bid that fall and can probably break ground early in 2001. Construction will probably take about two years, which would hopefully allow us to be ready for 2002-2003."

The school committee has planned a public forum to talk about the ramifications of the reconfiguration and the reasoning behind the decision. The forum, which will also be attended by Malvey, K-12 curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey, and the principals of all three Cohasset schools, will be held on Nov. 22 at 7p.m. in the high school auditorium.

"We strongly invite all interested folks in town to come to the forum, even if you don't have children in the schools," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "We know the reaction might be negative for some, but if people hear the same information from the administrators that we've heard, I think they'll come to the same conclusion."

One of the concerns some parents have voiced is the prospect of sixth graders moving from Deer Hill to the middle school, in effect having to "grow up" a year sooner.

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun said the reconfiguration could have the opposite effect, in that the schools may become younger rather than older.

"It's very possible the sixth-graders could make the eighth-graders younger instead of the eighth-graders making them older," she said. "The research shows sixth graders are more like adolescents than they are like fifth graders. By moving the third grade to Deer Hill and moving the sixth grade to Osgood, both Osgood and Deer Hill become younger schools as well."

A light at the end of the tunnel?

Cost estimates are lower than expected

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There could be a train tunnel in Hingham's future after all.

A "short" tunnel would cost significantly less than initial estimates according to the results of an independent cost analysis commissioned by the MBTA at the direction of state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Kevin Sullivan.

Jon Carlisle, spokesman for Sullivan's office, confirmed Tuesday that a report by Canton-based consultant M K Centennial puts an 800-foot-long tunnel under Hingham Square in the range of $30 million to $35 million — far less than the anticipated $100 million price tag.

"We wanted an independent third set of eyes to take a look at the situation," Carlisle said about the pur-

Who's the town's top citizen?

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It's that time of year again. In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Last year, Mariner readers honored Katherine Stanton for her tireless service to the town and so many people over the years, including serving as a case reviewer for the state Department of Social Services and pitching in with its "Suitcases for Kids" program.

Once again, here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1999 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 7. Please see the nomination form on page 14. The form may

Teen center adding finishing touches

The name 'The Garage' is freshly painted on the outside, and the opening of the new teen center at the DPW garage is only a couple of weeks away.

"We've got the bandstand in, the bathrooms are finished, and we're about to put in some carpeting that we've just gotten donated," said recreation director Jack Worley. "We still have to do some minor electrical work and plumbing, but it's just about done. We're just waiting until we can get the people in here to do the work. We should be ready around the end of November."

A November grand opening would allow the public to see the new facility before the Dec. 6 special town meeting, at which citizens will vote on an $8,750 warrant article for a teen center director.

Selectmen voted 3-2 to recommend the article at special town meeting, while the advisory committee has yet to make its recommendation.

Deer Hill tour set for Saturday

A community tour of Deer Hill led by principal Paul Callahan will begin at 8 a.m. this Saturday, Nov. 20. All interested parties are invited to attend.

Facilities meetings to air on Channel 3

School facilities committee chairman Robert Spofford announced that the committee's Nov. 23 and Dec. 1 meetings will be held in the selectmen's meeting room at Town Hall and televised on cable channel 3.

The committee has been meeting in a conference room at the middle-high school and its meetings have not been televised.

The change was made at the urging of Town Manager Mark Haddad, who suggested the public might like to be aware of the decisions being made by the committee.

"The important thing is that the meetings be televised and a lot of people in town watch channel 3," Haddad said.

$235K article is discussed

Water commissioner John McNabb appeared at last week's advisory committee to discuss a $235,000 warrant article from the water commission for the Dec. 6 special town meeting.

The $235,000 includes a $98,000 surplus from fiscal year 1999, which is limited to capital projects. The remaining $137,000 is money that was to be spent on the town's new water tank. That tank is scheduled to be built next year.

While McNabb did not have an itemized breakdown of how the money would be spent, he said the water commission plans to use some of the capital funds to fix problems in the distribution system.

"I'm appalled at how many gates and valves are broken in the distribution system," he said. "A broken gate was the reason why the flood abatement project at the Cove was held up for so long."

Gates and valves are both used to turn flows of water off and on within the distribution system. McNabb would like to further improve the distribution system by fixing the devices which pump water in and out of the system.

"We had a high-water lift and a low-water lift both go out this summer," he said. High-water lifts bring water into the system and low-water lifts pushes it out. We'd like to do some preventive maintenance on one or more of the lifts in case another one were to break."

Also on the water commission's priority list is a mapping and engineering analysis of the town watershed.

Advisory committee chairman Dick Avery asked McNabb how he would prioritize the projects against a ceiling of $235.000.

"We're still figuring that out," McNabb said. "Most of these things don't have to be done now."

Traffic sign is removed

Selectmen voted unanimously on Tuesday to remove a 'No Turn on Red' sign from the corner of Ripley road and Sohier Street.

The sign was deemed unnecessary because of the closing of the old Osgood school, located on that corner.

"The school is gone and there's no need for the sign," said selectmen chairman Merle Brown.

Mitigation seeks new member

Selectman Diane Sullivan announced an opening on the Greenbush mitigation committee at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

"We need someone who doesn't have a strong opinion on the rail issue," she said.

Sullivan, a member of the committee, said chairman Tom Gruber needs someone to help him with the large task of doing all of the paperwork for the committee.

"Tom is doing all of the paperwork and writing all of the letters that need to be written," she said. "He's doing an amazing job. We need someone to roll up their sleeves and give him some assistance."

Tech. coordinator is concerned

Ken Cisneros, technology coordinator for the Cohasset school district, is concerned about the school committee's decision not to include a $150,000 article on the warrant for the Dec. 6 special town meeting.

The school committee has a $390,000 article, contingent on the approval of an override vote, on the warrant for the special town meeting. School committee members decided not to ask for both that money and the technology money at the special town meeting.

Cisneros said the lack of funding will affect the continuity in his department.

"We were going to put in 24 new computers in the math lab at the high school," he said. "The computers there are outdated. I don't know how many of them will even work come January. At the middle school, we were going to put a new computer in each class room. We were going to upgrade the Mac lab at Osgood to a PC lab. At Deer Hill, we were going to put a multimedia presentation TV in each classroom. Obviously, this impacts what we're trying to do."

Litchfield to stay on another year

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced the appointment on Tuesday of DPW Superintendent Harold Litchfield to another year as head of that department.

"Harold has been unbelievable," Haddad said. "I've been able to convince him to stay on another year."

Litchfield's contract has been extended to April 1, 2001.

Second Congregational Church celebrates anniversary

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

As the millennium approaches and organizations look toward their future in 2000 and beyond, the Second Congregational Church has had a unique opportunity to delve into its past in recent weeks. This Sunday, the church will celebrate its 175th anniversary with a special service at 10 a.m. The minister of the Second Congregational Church, the Rev. Gary Ritts, said the service would be lighthearted in nature.

"We've asked people to dress up in costumes as far back as they can go," Ritts said. "I've going to be wearing some ministerial garb from the 1800's. We'll have a birthday cake. I've also teased people saying the sermon would be an hour and a half long like in the old days. We want to keep it fun."

Congregation member Stephen Bobo has penned a hymn especially for the event, titled "Celebrate! The 175th Year of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset." An amateur poet, the hymn is Bobo's first foray into songwriting.

"I write a lot of poetry and, in fact, I'm the single member of the Bad Poet's Society," Bobo laughed. "I talked with Gary and it sounded like we needed something musical to celebrate the anniversary. It took me about three weeks to do because different people had suggestions and it was constantly changing. It's really just a matter of matching the meter of the poem to the beat of the song."

Bobo said he can't wait to hear his words sung for the first time.

"I'm anxiously awaiting that," he said. "I'm interested to see how it will sound. I'll actually be one of the people singing it because I'm in the choir."

The congregation has been focusing upon its anniversary since September by including readings of historical interest in its services.

"The readings have all been very comical, very cute," Ritts said. "The services used to be led by cello, and there was a story of some little boys who got in trouble for playing as the service was beginning. A couple of our members have shared remembrances of their childhood in Cohasset and what life was like as they were growing up. It's been a lot of fun."

At the separate children's services, the Christian education staff has sought to explain the historical legacy of the church in terms the children can relate to.

"We've divided the 175 years into six segments, and the teachers tell the children what life was like in each of those six time periods," Ritts said. "The teachers explain that there might be electricity, but no indoor plumbing, for instance. These are things that the kids can understand. They can see how their lives would have been different in those times."

The church's Christian education teachers have taken turns dressing up in costumes signifying one of the six time periods the children are studying. Ritts recounted a humorous anecdote he heard from a member of the First Parish congregation who saw the teacher dressed in 1950's attire.

"From the First Parish balcony, you can see our entrance," he said. "This woman saw one of our Christian education committee members in the fifties outfit. She told me it looked just like her mother."

Though the congregation's celebratory service is on Sunday, the church will not actually turn 175 until Wednesday, Nov. 24. On that day, the church will be home to a Thanksgiving service which all religious organizations in town will attend.

"The ecumenical service on Wednesday will be town-wide and focus on the value of religious community," Ritts said. "We'll have joint choirs performing, which should really be something. All seven religious organizations in Cohasset will be there. We'll even have another birthday cake."

The ecumenical service is symbolic of the sense of community shown in January1928, when a devastating fire ravaged the Second Congregational Church. The fire raged so fiercely that it took the combined efforts of the Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, and Scituate fire departments to quiet the blaze.

"The disastrous fire which nearly half-consumed the edifice of the church occurred at 12:15 a.m. on January 19th, 1928," wrote Dr. Oliver H. Howe, who was serving as church treasurer at that time. "The cause was probably cigarettes brought in by boys who may have entered by raising a window. The fire spread upward, involving the front corner room above and the north end of the rear gallery. From there it spread into the attic over the auditorium and into the tower.

"The fire in the attic was difficult for the firemen to get it and was not controlled till the auditorium ceiling had fallen and the firemen could attack it from below with their hose inside the church. By that time, it had burned through about one-third of the area of the main roof," he wrote.

Following the blaze, the worship calendar posted on the front of the church read 'We are burned out but we carry on.' The congregation did indeed carry on, holding services and religious education classes at other churches in town while its own building was reconstructed.

"Both the Unitarian (First Parish) and St. Stephen's churches, as well as the Konohasset Lodge of Free Masons, offered us the use of all of their facilities in the most cordial manner," Howe wrote.

Though a feeling of religious community would be felt a century later, the Second Congregational Church was formed as the result of a rift with the pastor of First Parish in 1824.

"We split from First Parish and were the second religious organization in town," Ritts said.

In an 1895 account of the split, the Rev. E. Victor Bigelow described the circumstances leading to the creation of the Second Congregational Church.

"For several years previous...there had been forming the nucleus of a church," Bigelow wrote. "Five years before the rupture, more than a dozen earnest souls inaugurated a Bible reading circle which met upon Saturday evenings. This germ of evangelism developed into a Sabbath-School. The disaffected members of [First Parish] attended these meetings to obtain the sort of religious instruction which they thought was not given in the old church."

After celebrating its past, Ritts said the congregation will focus on the future.

"We've used the fall to focus on this event, but we're going to turn our attention to the new millennium," he said. "We're going to put together a time capsule that we'll open at our bicentennial in 2024. We're also going to do some goal-setting and surveys to set the tone for our next 175 years and figure out what kind of congregation we want to be."

The Rev. Fred V. Stanley stands in front of a sign showing the congregation's spirit of perseverance following a January 1928 fire.

Millard MacNeill, John Hunt, the Rev. Fred V. Stanley, and Oliver Howe break ground on a side extension to the church in September 1925.

Though the congregation's celebratory service is on Sunday, the church will not actually turn 175 until Wednesday, Nov. 24. On that day, the church will be home to a Thanksgiving service which all religious organizations in town will attend.

Town History, Vol. 3 to be out by 2001

Louis Eaton, a former longtime member of the advisory committee, met with his former committee last week to discuss a $30,000 warrant article for the Dec. 6 special town meeting.

The $30,000 is to be part of the town's effort to finance Volume 3 of the town history, which will be written by Jackie Dormitzer and edited by Molly Hochkeppel. Eaton said the committee is also planning to produce a CD-ROM version of the book.

"We'll be able to send the CD-ROMs to people in other parts of the country who grew up here as well as put them in the schools," Eaton said.

The town history committee started the project with $5,000 and received an appropriation of $30,000 last year. With the $30,000 that will be on the warrant for the special town meeting, the committee will have $65,000 to work with. Eaton said the committee planned to ask for an additional $15,000 next year, bringing the total to $80,000.

The town history committee's budget is only $55,000, which prompted advisory committee chairman Dick Avery to wonder why it was seeking $30,000 this year.

"I'm more tempted to give you $15,000 this year," Avery said. "I fully agree with doing the town history, but I'd like to see the taxpayers get a $15,000 break if we can accomplish both."

Selectmen chairman Merle Brown suggested that the $15,000 could be of great assistance to the town's balance of free cash.

"I know that we could use that $15,000," he said.

Eaton said he needed to talk with his committee regarding a lower figure, but thought they would be amenable to the suggestion.

next five years. Land that is now rock and poor soils will be able to be developed. The town needs to prepare for that contingency."

Building commissioner Bob Egan agreed that new septic systems could spur an influx of new development.

"If advanced septic systems are allowed for new construction, zoning would be the only restriction to development," Egan said. "Our zoning is fairly liberal. There may need to be a higher hurdle."

Debbie Cook, a member of the conservation commission and open space committee, said professional help will be needed to create a master plan that can guide new development.

"We need a consulting firm," she said. "If we do get community preservation funds, we have to be able to prioritize which open space is the most valuable to protect."

Board of health member Stephen Bobo said environmental bylaws will have to be instituted in a piecemeal fashion without a plan for the growth and development of the town.

"The board of health is crafting an impervious surface bylaw for the spring town meeting," Bobo said. "The idea of doubling roof space on a building without some kind of remediation increases pollution. We hate putting out fires like this without a master plan. It needs to be done very quickly. The state is planning to widen Route 3 and Route 53 and this town is going to grow. If you don't think it's going to happen, you're wrong."

Planning board members said people in town should not panic about the amount of growth suggested by the MAPC's buildout projections.

"I've been on the planning board for almost 20 years and I've never seen anything close to maximum development in this town," said planning board member Robert Sturdy. "In the last 10 years, we've built an average of 10 new homes a year. The concern I have is that the town went through a scare with the Benjamin Report in the early 1960s, which said that growth in town was supposed to skyrocket. It didn't happen."

Sturdy said the town needs to get a clearer picture of its needs before it embarks on hiring a professional to create a town master plan.

"What we need is a town overlay map including the assessors map, drainage map, and wetlands. We need to include every drain and every septic system. We don't even know where everything is underground."

Planning board chairman Alfred Moore scoffed at an MAPC-produced map which showed different parcels of potentially developable land in town.

"That map is about as useful as me sitting here and throwing blobs of ink at a blank map of Cohasset," said Moore, sitting at a distance of 15 feet from the MAPC map. "Without a topographic overlay map, there's no way to tell what land will be developable."

Moore added that property owners shouldn't be prevented from development because it isn't palatable to others in town.

"I think there are a lot of agendas at work here. I've got my house, the hell with the rest of you. To me, that smacks of unfairness. Property owners have the right to the enjoyment of their property."

McMorris said a master plan would be an essential tool in guiding the growth and development of Cohasset.

"People are looking for a master plan because they recognize the need," she said. "It's important for the planning board to understand there's a difference between preventing growth and controlling growth and development in a sensible way. Sometimes people make mistakes in predicting the future. The Red Sox sold Babe Ruth to the Yankees."

Moore said the town needs to get its house in order before embarking on a master plan.

"I'm not opposed to a master plan, but let's get our data correct before we do a plan," he said. "We know the assessors map is wrong. We need an overlay map that the town can use to show all of these things before we charge off on a master plan."

While land in Cohasset is scarce for the large subdivisions being built in surrounding towns, Roebuck said Cohasset could still experience a good deal of growth.

"It isn't the 100-home subdivisions I'm worried about," she said. "It the one house here, three there, the two, the six, the four, the three."

Committee picks grade reconfiguration for town schools

Osgood, which is currently a K-3 school, will become a K-2 school under the proposed reconfiguration. Deer Hill, currently a 4-6 school, will become a 3-5 school. The middle school will add the sixth grade to its current 7-8 configuration.

"I'm all for slowing down the aging process of our kids," Ofsthun said. "I'm convinced these changes will have that result."

While Deer Hill will become a younger school chronologically, the 4th grade MCAS tests now mandated by the state ensure that serious academic work will still occur. Ofsthun said that third graders may be helped by being at Deer Hill for a year prior to the MCAS test.

"This may help the third-graders to get serious academically a year earlier," she said. "I held out on making this decision about reconfiguration because I felt we needed to talk more about the third grade. I found there's no disadvantage in the third grade moving to Deer Hill."

School committee member Betsy Connolly said the decision would provide the best learning environment for Cohasset students.

"I feel confident that the reconfiguration is in the best interests of education in Cohasset," she said. "This would allow three-year programs at each school, and children really need three years to get comfortable in a school. The first year is an adaptation process, the second year they become fully comfortable, and the third year serves as a transition into the new school."

The proposed renovations are being designed to meet state specifications, which will make the project reimbursable at 60 percent. To meet state criteria, the renovations must be designed to standards that will allow the schools to last for 50 years.

School committee member Pat Martin said she remained cognizant that the renovations would have to meet the town's educational needs for the next 50 years.

"In looking at the research on different grade configurations, I kept reminding myself that we're looking into the future as well. It's very likely the state will mandate full-day kindergarten in the next few years. Moving the third graders to Deer Hill will allow for that space at Osgood."

In September, the school committee heard a presentation by Malvey, Fennessey, middle high school principal Curtis Collins and Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan. During that presentation, the school administrators explained their preference for a 6-8 middle school and gave the school committee research on the issue.

Martin said the advice of school administrators weighed heavily on her decision.

"I heard from people who said the school committee should have made the decision right after we heard the opinions of the administrators," she said. "Of course, we valued their opinion greatly. But we still felt it was our duty to look at research on the issue and talk about it with people in other towns. The fact that we came to the same decision is a complete vote of confidence with the administrators. All of our research showed they were right."

School committee member Stephanie Noble said she had reservations about the reconfiguration, but was swayed by the opinions of administrators both in Cohasset and other communities.

"I was probably the hardest one to convince, because I'm one of those people who doesn't really like to change things," Noble said. "But after hearing from school committee members and administrators in other towns, I'm convinced that the sixth grade belongs in the middle school. I'm also attracted to the idea of younger schools."

DeGiacomo said separation of the middle and high schools will be an important issue should the sixth grade move up to the middle school.

"Keeping the middle school and high school as separate as possible will be a primary concern as we move forward with the renovations," he said. "We'll continue working with the architects to make sure the schools are kept as separate as possible. We're cognizant that is an issue that needs to be dealt with."

Noble said Collins should be commended for the job he has done in helping the middle school to establish its own identity in a building it shares with the high school.

"Curt has done a wonderful job in bringing the middle school philosophy to bear," she said. "There are different bell schedules and very little interaction between middle and high school students."

Nominations open for Citizen of the Year be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the 1999 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January 2000.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the seventh person honored as Hingham Citizen of the Year, joining past recipients:

1993: the late Gerard T. Keating, "Mr. Cohasset," for his more than half-century of contributions to his community, including serving as chairman of the Council on Aging; chairman of the school committee; president of the hockey boosters club; vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society; director of veterans services, and lector, Eucharistic minister and usher at St. Anthony's Church.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors understand the complexities of the healthcare system and to access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), his service on the Council on Aging, and volunteer work over the years with the Boy Scouts, Little League, Sunday School and more.

1995: Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated service as a pediatrician in town and school doctor. He also served on the board of health and led the fight back in the 1970s to sewer the town. He is also a familiar figure at town meetings where he speaks his mind on important issues.

1996: The Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for being a positive force for good through his work with the Appalachia Service Project (ASP), an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers. ASP is a home repair and home building ministry in central Appalachia.

1997: Anna Abbruzzese, for all her volunteer work including preparing and delivering meals for the Pine Street Inn; driving the senior shuttle and coordinating the Gourmet Cooking Club at the Council on Elder Affairs; and her many efforts to help revitalize Cohasset Village through the Farmers' Market and much more.

1998: Katherine Stanton, for her tireless service to the town and its citizens over the years. She also volunteers as a case reviewer for the state Dept. of Social Services, served on the school committee and recreation committee, and along with her family was involved with the creation of the Cohasset Sailing Club.

Greenbush will bring changes to center of town

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The restoration of the Greenbush line will affect some residents more than it will others. The residents of Rocky Lane, for instance, will have a new emergency access road in case their street should be blocked by a stranded train. For the vast majority of residents, however, emergency access will not be a concern if the train does indeed come through town.

Most everyone in town, however, parks in the center of town at one time or another. If Greenbush does become a reality, more of those people will be parking in an expanded town parking lot.

"Some parking in the center of town will be lost along the right-of-way," said Cohasset mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber. "To make up for that lost parking, the MBTA has agreed to add an expansion to the town parking lot."

The expanded town parking lot will be completely resurfaced and will extend behind the old DPW garage, home of the new teen center.

Gruber said the topography of the land behind the teen center will cause that extension to be an involved process.

INSIDE GREENBUSH

"It's all ledge back there," he said. "It's going to take a lot of blasting to level off that land."

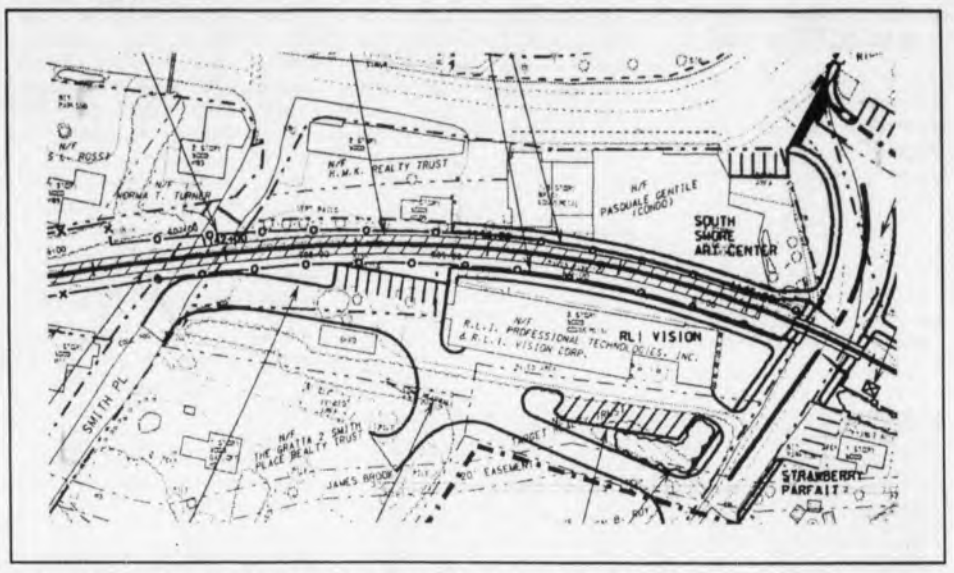
To protect the unique character of the village, the mitigation committee succeeded in convincing the MBTA to put in a special type of fencing on both sides of the tracks.

"The MBTA agreed to put in an architectural grade of steel picket fence in the center of town," Gruber said. "It's more aesthetically pleasing than the chain link fencing that will be used in the other parts of town. It will fit better with the feel of the town."

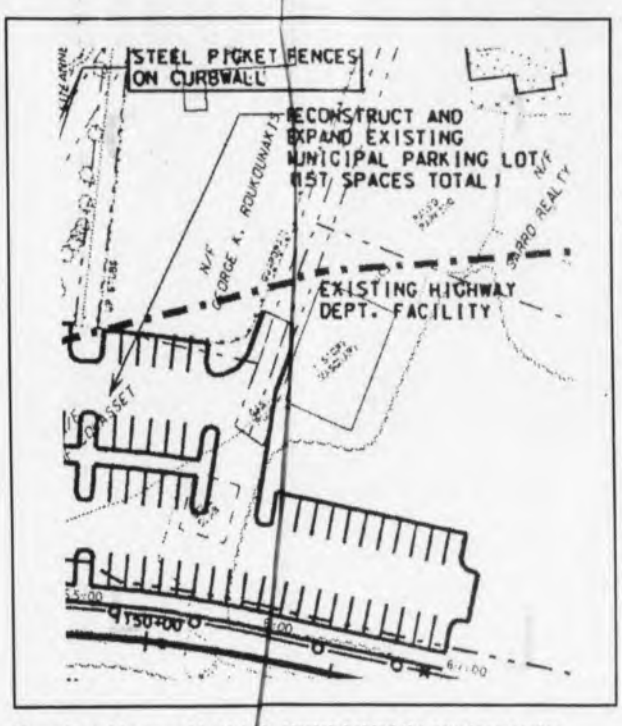
The one grade crossing in the center of town will be the intersection of the tracks and Pleasant Street. Two quadrant gates will be placed at the crossing to block traffic as the train passes by. Islands, or burms, will be constructed in the middle of Pleasant Street to prevent cars from avoiding those quadrant gates.

Those burms, however, will also inhibit access in and out of Strawberry Parfait, an ice cream shop located at the corner of Pleasant Street and the proposed train tracks.

"Anytime you have a grade crossing, there's a safety concern," Gruber said. "The burms serve an important purpose in that they keep cars from trying to get around the gates. However, those burms will inhibit access to Strawberry Parfait. You won't be able to take a left into Strawberry Parfait or take a left turn out."



An access road is to connect Smith Place and Pleasant Street. Smith Place is to be closed at the tracks.



The enlarged town parking lot to stretch behind the new teen center.

Joseph Rosano, owner of Strawberry Parfait, said traffic patterns in the center of town will undoubtedly shift because of the burms on Pleasant Street.

"People will have to make a left turn into James Lane and turn around to get to my shop," he said. "Something will have to be done to regulate that traffic."

"Some parking in the center of town will be lost along the right-of-way. To make up for that lost parking, the MBTA has agreed to add an expansion to the town parking lot."
Cohasset mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber

Strawberry Parfait will not be the only business affected by a restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line. ABB Optical (shown on the map as RLI Vision), a manufacturer of contact lenses located at 1 Pleasant St., will be precluded from expansion by a proposed access road that will connect Smith Place and Pleasant Street.

"Smith Place is to be closed at the tracks to avoid a grade crossing," Gruber said. "An access road to Pleasant Street is being created to give the Smith Place residents access to the rest of the town. That access road will hem ABB optical in between the new road and the tracks."

Some ABB Optical parking will also be lost as a result of the new access road, but the MBTA plans 10 replacement parking spaces as mitigation.

Representatives from the MBTA, its engineering consultant, Sverdrup, and vibration consultants Harris, Miller, Miller, and Hanson, will visit ABB Optical on Friday to do vibration testing.

"Because their business [grinding contact lenses] is sensitive to vibration, they receive a higher level of vibration protection than do residences," Gruber said.

This article is the second in a four-part series which will focus upon the possible effects of the Greenbush commuter rail line in different parts of Cohasset.

A light at the end of the tunnel?

pose of the study.

But he stressed the secretary's office will continue to lobby for the train at-grade through Hingham.

Carlisle said the new tunnel estimates would put the total cost of restoration of the 17-mile Greenbush Line close to the $400 million ceiling imposed by Gov. Paul Cellucci last summer.

According to the study, Greenbush is estimated to cost $42 million to $364 million without the tunnel. A "cut-and-cover" tunnel — which is the cheapest tunnel alternative and involves excavating along the existing right of way — would drive the cost up to $384 million to $404 million.

Carlisle blamed the exorbitant projected tunnel costs that were initially floated on "early estimates."

The tunnel would provide relief for Hingham Square, which is part of the Lincoln National Register Historic District and eliminate the need for several grade crossings.

Hingham's Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan said the news is a breakthrough of sorts.

"The obvious key here is that the MBTA recognizes they are going to have to do something about Hingham Square," Macmillan said. "A tunnel goes a long way to solving the problems associated with the railroad."

However, Macmillan said it is premature to say that has really been resolved. (The report was apparently leaked earlier this week to the Boston Globe's Brian McGrory who used the news as a stepping off point to launch a scathing attack on Hingham politics and people in his column on Tuesday.)

"I've not seen the report and we'll have to look at all the maps, plans and ask a series of questions," Macmillan said. "But it is a first step by the MBTA in conceding that the problems in Hingham square, which restoration of the railroad creates, are so great that a tunnel of some kind is the only solution that is marginally suitable."

Carlisle said the secretary's office was not the source of the leak. He said the report, which is in draft form, won't be available for a couple of weeks.

He said the report provides Secretary Sullivan with up-to-date estimates if the tunnel should come up for debate.

"The obvious key here is that the MBTA recognizes they are going to have to do something about Hingham Square."
— Alexander Macmillan, Hingham Greenbush coordinator

"We don't want to be told to go back and study the tunnel, adding more time consumption and therefore increasing the price of the project," Carlisle said. He said current estimates are that Greenbush will be rolling by April 2005 without a tunnel and by August 2005, if a tunnel is built. Greenbush, which has been mired in controversy and feasibility studies for well over a decade, is the third leg of the Old Colony Project whose Middleboro and Plymouth lines started service in Sept. 1997.

Hingham filed a lawsuit in 1996 – which is still pending – accusing the MBTA of skirting strict environmental laws under Section 4f of the Transportation Act that could have required a tunnel under Hingham Square. Hingham alleges the transit authority changed tracks so-to-speak part way through the process deciding to use state money to pay for the project rather than using federal dollars. Section 4f says federal money can't be used for a project that would adversely impact a historic resource if there is a "prudent and feasible" alternative.

The Army Corps of Engineers — the lead federal agency in the Greenbush saga — became involved because Greenbush construction would involve the filling of more than five acres of wetlands under federal jurisdiction. While its primary role involves granting permits when wetlands and waterways are involved, the ACOE also has responsibility over historic resources. An ACOE recent review of Greenbush said that no other transportation alternatives to the train met the purposes of the project as defined by the MBTA — that of reducing the number of cars on the roadways. The ACOE investigated 21 alternatives to restoring the Greenbush Line, including expanding boat and bus service.

But the project must still undergo the historical review process that started in September and is expected to run through March, which involves the ACOE, Mass. Historical Commission and the federal Advisory Council on Historic Preservation.

Much of Hingham's Lincoln district hugs the Greenbush right-of-way. It also includes two national landmarks, the Old Ship Meetinghouse, built in 1681, and the Benjamin Lincoln House, which dates back to 1667.

Carlisle said the secretary is involved in talks with the Mass. Historical Commission, which will "push one way or the other regarding the tunnel."

"We are trying to convince them that the tunnel is an option but one that we don't want to take," he said.

AROUND TOWN

A BEAUTIFUL VOICE

Please take your hat off, put your hand over your heart and listen to Liz Ingber — she sings the national anthem at the high school events. Liz has a beautiful voice (the kind that makes for goosebumps when you hear her sing the anthem) and she made special efforts to appear when we hosted four soccer tournament games last week! Excuse me, six, plus our football games!

She is always there, she is a junior at Cohasset High School and watch the schedule, if you want to hear a marvelous rendition, sung by Liz!

As an add-on, congrats to all who make it possible for the games to be held at Alumni Field, Cohasset is making a great name in the South Shore League, thanks to the voters and people who keep it going!

SAYING GOODBYE

It is with a great deal of regret that I must tell you of the passing of one of my classmates and good friends —Mary Ann (Davis) Kelley, class of 1962 CHS (my class, my buddy). She was a person who would always do anything for anybody! We know where she got it from, her mom, Mary, her brothers and (I) hope her friends.

Good bye Mary Ann, we will all miss you and certainly always love you! And much love to you and all of your family!

Congratulations are in order for Ted Straughn, left, and Tim Pilczak, right, on being named to the Milton Spartans, an AAU baseball team that trains out of Curry College.

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

Austin and Nancy O'Toole celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with a month's trip to Europe, including Germany, Austria and Switzerland. Their four children, Lisa Vivian, Lynn Durkin, Clover Weinstein and Scott were told emphatically that the trip was to avoid any party.

Do your children ever listen to you? One week after their return from abroad the family was to get together for dinner at Atlantica — you guessed it. The four kids threw an awesome wedding party with 70 people.

Nothing was left unturned — a disc jockey, dancing, open bar, hors d'oeuvres, dinner, even a wedding cake!

Their best man and his wife (a high school friend of Nancy's) flew in from Traves City, Mich.; a former nanny flew in from Toronto; and cousins from Washington D.C.

I'm telling you they were flabbergasted and surprised out of their socks! Isn't it beautiful to be blessed with such great children (who listen to you)?!!!

Congratulations to you, Austin and Nancy!!

Cohasset's Nancy and Austin O'Toole, shown here in Florida, recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with a month-long trip to Europe.

WINTER BASEBALL CAMP

Congratulations are in order for Tim Pilczak and Ted Straughn, both seventh graders at the Cohasset Middle-High School. During four weekends in September and October Tim and Ted participated in a tryout and training camp for the "Milton Spartans." The "Spartans," an AAU baseball team, train out of Curry College. After completing the camp both boys were pleased to receive notice they had been selected as starting players for the next season's 13-year-old team! Winter training camp will begin next month at Curry College and will continue until the start of the baseball season. Tim and Ted played Little League baseball together on the Cohasset Red Sox and are excited about continuing together on an AAU team.

These boys are in for a lot of hard work but both boys love baseball and can't wait to hear their favorite words —"play ball"!!

FOOD PANTRY WISH LIST

It is time to remind you again folks — the Cohasset Food Pantry has its wish list and hope that you can help out! The needs include mayonnaise, pasta sauce, fruit juices (boxes or jars), snacks, dishwashing liquid, paper towels, bathroom cleaner, rubbish bags, laundry detergent, coffee, white granulated sugar, canned fruit, and cereal.

As we always say use the "buy one, get one free" and donate the "free."

REMEMBER THE CHIEF

Let us all take a moment to remember Randy Feola, our former police chief. He was a true legend (he even made the cover of Boston Magazine years ago) — he had a loud voice and a soft heart — he made the town "tow the mark." He had a great sense of humor and a true love of people. When Randy left for Florida, he was missed by lots of us — that loss is felt with a much greater depth today! Take a moment and remember the Chief — he was unique! We send sincere regrets to Randy's family!!

LIGHTKEEPER'S MEMORIAL

Finally, although it is cold and the boats are in the yard for the winter, make a special trip to Government Island to see the Lightkeeper's Memorial that has been erected — ne Antoine and Wilson Memorial Stone is a special sight and a special dedication to two of our townspeople and all of their families!! Please o and see it!

That's all folks — tune in next week nd if you gave me your news you'll e able to read all about it (so will ll of us) — include a picture to ake it complete, we love those too!

Getting on track

Train talk is in the air this autumn and along with it the promise of compromise. While Cohasset is a town divided on the controversial Greenbush rail restoration project, its mitigation committee has met regularly for the past two years and has been hammering out all sorts of plans to make the train's return as smooth a ride as possible. In planning for the return of commuter rail the committee is pushing for, and in many cases getting, noise and vibration abatement plans, access roads and is working toward flood mitigation where needed.

Their neighbors to the north in Hingham — a town that has vocally opposed the project and sued the T — are cautiously optimistic about a recent consultant's report that says a tunnel under Hingham's historic square can be had for a mere $30 million. That's about $70 million less than estimated by state transportation officials some five years ago, and certainly makes it a compromise the MBTA will want to keep on hand as its project continues to make its arduous journey through the environmental review process.

While the tunnel may have been a red herring for some Hinghamites, Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan has been pushing for it as an alternative to at-grade rail through the downtown practically from day one. That's really what that Hingham lawsuit is all about — getting the project back under federal environmental review — so that alternatives can be selected, like the tunnel, to have a less negative impact on the Lincoln National Register Historic District than at grade rail.

In Scituate, where town officials have walked away from negotiations with the MBTA, opponents and proponents alike are urging selectmen and the still "charge-less" mitigation committee in that town to get on board and start working with the T. The residents and even environmental groups like the North and South River Watershed Association have accepted that the train is coming and say finding ways to compromise with the T would be wise. Scituate has come late to the table, after leaving it many times before but hopefully town officials are getting the message that the old "head in the sand routine" will do much more harm than good in the long run.

Citizen of the Year

Please take a moment this week to clip the Citizen of the Year nomination form on page 14. While the deadline for nominations isn't until Jan. 7, with the holiday season upon us — the weeks between now and then will fly by.

We don't want any of our readers to miss the opportunity to help us continue with a seven-year-long tradition of selecting an unsung hero for the annual award.

The Citizen of the Year selection process and subsequent reception honoring the recipient — graciously hosted by Kimball's by the Sea in the spring — is something we really enjoy here at the Cohasset Mariner.

But it couldn't happen without the dozens of thoughtful nomination letters we receive every year from you.

Forms and letters may be sent by fax, hand delivered or mailed to the Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 741-2931.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Disregard for school bus safety

TO THE EDITOR:

On Friday, Nov. 12, I was witness to something so disturbing I feel compelled to write this letter.

I am a school bus driver for the town of Cohasset. As a "rookie" in this profession, I am becoming aware of a few facts. Facts that I find utterly appalling. Facts that you, the general public, may not be aware of.

Fact One: I did not know that it is perfectly OK for a car to pass a school bus. What's wrong with that, you ask? At the time this enlightened individual passed me, I was driving along Jerusalem Road, heading into the corner before the causeway, with a solid yellow line dividing the road.

Thankfully, at the time there were no students on the bus. Thankfully, there were no cars coming the other way because the driver in no way, shape, or form could see around my bus. I did the only thing I could, the license plate number was report-

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on five roll calls and local senators' votes on three roll calls from the week of November 8-12.

$20.8 BILLION FISCAL 2000 STATE BUDGET(H 4400) House 155-2, Senate 31-4 approved the conference committee version of a $20.8 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. Provisions include $72 million to help senior citizens purchase prescription drugs; $245 million in new education aid to cities and towns; and $78 million in new higher education aid. The package includes several tax cuts including a decrease in the income tax from 5.95 percent to 5.75 percent over three years; a "circuit breaker" tax break aimed at helping senior citizens pay their property taxes; an increase in the maximum rental deduction available from $2500 to $3000; an increase in deductions for dependents and an expansion of the definition of dependents to include elderly and disabled ones in addition to children under 12; increased child care deductions; and increased deductions for interest on student loans. The package also imposes a two percent tax on long term capital gains assets held for more than six years. A controversial provisions makes major changes in the method of funding the MBTA including limiting state funding of the T and adding more communities to the ones currently assessed for T service. Another controversial section makes changes in the voter-approved Clean Elections Law which provides public financing for candidates who agree to certain spending limits. The change allows candidates to raise unlimited funds until six months prior to an election and then allows them to limit their spending and in the last six months receive public funds. Supporters said the package is a fiscally responsible one which funds and expands important programs, reins in uncontrolled spending at the MBTA and offers modest tax cuts while still allowing the state to save money for an inevitable economic turndown. Some opponents objected to the MBTA assessments on dozens of additional communities. Others objected to the gutting of the Clean Elections Law. (A "Yea" vote is for the budget. A "Nay" vote is against the budget).	Y	Y
SUSPEND RULES FOR BUDGET(H 4400) House 131-26, Senate 27-9, suspended rules to allow immediate consideration of the conference committee version of a $20.8 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. Supporters of rule suspension said the state has been operating on interim budgets for over four months and argued the legislature should act without delay now that an agreement has been reached. Opponents of rule suspension said the budget has only been in print for a few hours and argued it is outrageous to act on a $20.8 billion package when legislators and the public have not even had time to read it. (A "Yea" vote is for rule suspension. A "Nay" vote is against rule suspension).	N	N
TRANSPORTATION BOND(H 4864) House 157-2, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate a $3.2 billion transportation bond bill. Provisions include millions of dollars to fund road and bridge repairs across the state; $5.9 million for the purchase of two state police helicopters; and $6 million for the demolition of the former Registry of Motor Vehicles building on Nashua Street in Boston. Supporters said the package is a sound one which will help repair crumbling roads and bridges and make the state and local transportation system safe for drivers. Opponents offered no arguments. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).		Y
ROAD ENHANCEMENT PROJECTS(H 4864) House 146-5 rejected a transportation bond bill amendment requiring the state's transportation secretary to take action to ensure that the state receives the full amount of federal funds for a special program for enhancement of state and local roads. Amendment supporters explained that $60 million has been available to the state over the past six years in matching federal funds earmarked for enhancement projects including bike paths and pedestrian ways but noted $30 million of the funds are sitting idly in state coffers. They argued the state has refused to put up sufficient matching funds to ensure the money is used for these enhancement prjects and expressed fear that the state is holding onto the funds in order to eventually use a loophole and spend the money on other state projects including the Big Dig. Amendment opponents said federal highway funds have decreased and argued the amendment is too restrictive and requires the limited funds to be used for enhancements instead of other critically important projects. They also noted the amendment may be unconstitutional because it instructs the transportation secretary on how to spend money and may violate the balance of power between the executive and legislative branches. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment requiring the secretary to ensure the state receives the full amount of available federal enhancement funds. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).		N
BEAVERS(H 3525) House 93-60, gave initial approval to a bill allowing the unrestricted use of conibear traps to kill beavers. Conibear traps are body-grabbing devices typically used underwater to trap and kill beavers. Current law, approved by voters in 1996, prohibits the use of conibear traps unless a trapper first tries non-lethal traps but finds them ineffective. The trapper may then apply to the Division of Fisheries and Wildlife for a permit to use the conibear traps. Supporters said the restrictive use of conibear traps has led to an explosion in the beaver population and many incidents of flooded basements and roadways due to beaver damming. They said the conibear permit process is a bureaucratic, costly nightmare which discourages trappers from doing their jobs. Opponents said the bill overturns the restrictions which voters in 1996 clearly placed on the use of the cruel conibear traps. They noted the traps often capture and kill non-targeted animals. They said they support legislation designed to streamline the permit process which allows the use of the conibear traps when more humane efforts fail. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill allowing the unrestricted use of conibear traps. A "Nay vote is against the bill).		N
FORMAL SESSIONS AFTER NOVEMBER 17 Senate 35-1, approved a motion to suspend the rule which requires the legislature to conclude its formal business by November 17. The motion allows the legislature to convene in session after that date to consider any of Governor Cellucci's budget vetoes. Supporters of rule suspension said this will ensure that the legislature exercises its power and is able to meet in formal session to consider any of the governor's vetoes. Opponents of rule suspension said it is possible the governor may send the vetoes to the legislature before the 17th in time for the legislature to act on them. They urged the Senate to wait until the 17th before considering suspending the rule. (A "Yea" vote is for allowing formal sessions after November 17. A "Nay" vote is against allowing formal sessions after November 17).	Y

COHASSET CARES

A snapshot of the recycling committee

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Given the title of our column, I cannot let the cowardly Halloween atrocities committed by some of our young people pass without taking advantage of this platform to express my utter dismay. My message is: if we do not respect each other, we won't have to worry about the fate of the planet.

We've had some people ask about the Cohasset Recycling Committee — who it is, what we do, why we do it; what are our meetings like, and so on. So let us introduce ourselves.

The first thing we'd like you to know is that we're all volunteers, giving our time for the welfare of the town. Why? Because we're concerned about waste. Or to look at the half-full glass, we're concerned about the conservation of our natural resources. Like many people today, we feel uneasy about how mankind is messing up the world. Or to look at it another way, we find spiritual satisfaction in making a difference. And with recycling, it's easy to see each step count.

Recycling makes such obvious sense. Sure, it saves us all money, but more importantly, at least to me, it is a way of saying thanks for life — "Life, you've let me borrow all these resources which make my life so comfortable; let me show my appreciation by treating them like the precious resources they are." Simple enough. But it is a matter of attitude.

The Cohasset Recycling Committee is headed by the venerable Arthur Lehr, who has selflessly given so much of himself to Cohasset for decades in so many civic endeavors and who deserves the credit for starting the RTF as an offshoot of the DPW. Next in seniority is Merle Brown, representing the selectmen, another tireless worker for the town. Both of these men boggle my mind with their devotion to the cause and for their absolute command of relevant data.

Recycling Committee members develop specialties, like Eunice Brownell, who faithfully logs thankless hours weekly quietly collecting and sorting returnable cans and bottles for the Scouts in their RTF building; Jean White has taken on the project of the compost bins; David Bigley is working with the schools on recycling; John McNabb is our well-known legal representative; and Carol Martin gladly volunteers to assist on days when paints are collected or when youngsters tour the RTF facilities.

What is discussed at our meetings on the first Saturday of each month? The agenda lasts about an hour, usually more. How is the recycling education coming along in the schools? Who will be available on Paint Recycling Day? Should every householder who buys an RTF sticker get a second sticker at no charge when Hull people are showing up with Cohasset RTF stickers? [Hull has no municipal waste system whatsoever.] What can we do to prevent junk mail and newspapers from blowing around when we don't have money for a cover? How about a contract with someone to take care of TV and computer screens? Who's going to dismantle them? How about committee members volunteering to stand by the junk mail and newspaper bins to guide people to put their brown bags in with the cardboard — because if our paper were not contaminated, we could make money for the town? How to get the word out there that our current cardboard hauler says brown bags are used to make new boxes? What about the guy who was told "No brush today" and then dumped his brush in the dumpster?

What about the long lines of cars on weekends? Our two hired men, Dicky and Paul, can only do so much. If we could haul stuff away ourselves, we could save the town money... and on and on it goes. These are just some of the issues we deal with.

Out of time and out of space. More later. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Making the grade in Cohasset

After many months of deliberations, review and analysis, the Cohasset School Committee has voted unanimously to approve the recommendation of the school administration to support a grade reconfiguration.

EDUCATION MATTERS

DR. EDWARD M. MALVEY

Currently the schools are structured as Pre-K-3 (Osgood), 4-6 (Deer Hill), and 7-8 (Middle) 9-12 (High School). The change would see a new arrangement of Pre-K-2 (Osgood), 3-5 (Deer Hill), and 6-8 (Middle) 9-12 (High School).

The significant fact of this change would see grade 3 going to Deer Hill and grade 6 going to the Middle School.

Certainly as in any change, it may be difficult to understand or accept. Cohasset has had a long history of the current grade structure so it is to be expected that the proposed change will be of concern to students, parents, staff and the community as a whole.

In conjunction with my administrative colleagues, your school administrative team has thoughtfully studied this issue by reviewing the educational research and literature before making the recommendation to the school committee. I can assure you that we take this recommendation most seriously, and firmly believe it is in the best interests of the students. More importantly, we believe it is in the best interests of the future of education in Cohasset.

Throughout our discussions, we have labored to look at a vision of the future for the Cohasset Public Schools knowing full well the proud tradition of the past. But, I would suggest that we not become fixated in the present at the expense of a vision for the future.

Research has told us there is a good deal of support if one chooses to align grade 3 students with grade 4 students. Developmentally speaking, grade 3 students, both in maturation and academics, are more attuned to fourth-grade students. Curriculum alignment under Education Reform is beginning to address this point.

Secondly, grade 6 students are more attuned to grade 7 students. Indeed, there is a national trend to support grade 6 students in the middle school organization.

Concepts such as academic teams, team planning, school identity, interdisciplinary education, exploratory areas are tantamount to a successful middle school program. We have already begun the process in grade 6 creating a structure for a smooth transition to middle school.

Building on this concept, one has only to recall the town-wide survey conducted in 1995 which indicated a majority of 44 percent of the respondents favored a grade 6-8 middle school.

The need for a three grade configuration in the elementary and middle schools is also supported by school practitioners giving a sense of stability and continuity for students remaining in a particular school for three years.

Remembering the famous words of FDR, "We have nothing to fear but fear itself," clearly play out with the fear of change. Students in their current niche would transition to the new with tremendous support from staff and administration. Fears would be allayed as the staff puts appropriate supports in place. Parents will be communicated with as part of the transition team.

In summary, all of us would make the grade. It would be unrealistic to think that the teachers, staff, administrators and school committee would do anything less than to nurture this change to be successful.

Some think the word grade is as on a report card. I prefer to think of it in our circumstances as a call to a vision of the future in the Cohasset Public Schools.

Dr. Edward M. Malvey is superintendent of the Cohasset Public Schools.

We did not bail out on the feral cats

Nope we sure didn't! In fact we have successfully had one more adopted and two more trapped, tested and altered. They are in a foster home. What we did do was prepare a budget at the request of two of the three members on the health board to trap, alter and cage at a location (most likely the dump) for a period of 30 days. The estimate to do so was $5,217. That included five cats going to the humane society that came forward and volunteered to take the cats. That did not come free! The Rockland Humane Society was not about to pay for Cohasset's problems. The donation to relocate five cats to Daisy Humane is approximately $1,600. The health board offered $500 to "the volunteers." Who is going to pay the rest? I have since realized that the health board assumed that the volunteers would pick up the tab. I don't think so.!

LOCAL VIEW

We cannot justify spending donations and our own money on a plan that is ineffective, costly and a 30-day solution. The board mandated a 30-day quarantine, (by the way there is no need to quarantine altered cats with a clean bill of health) then what? Might the health board still order a mass kill of the cats for lack of a better solution? Private funds of $5,000 plus dollars would have been misused or wasted. No, we could not support this decision.

I have met with each of the signatures on the complaint. A new letter was signed and given to the health board. It included the signatures of all but one of the original on the complaint. That one resident just did not want to sign anything else that they did not understand. The residents that had been in complaint are willing to let us manage a "colony" of 10 or less adult cats. There appear to be eight to 10 feral cats left in lower James Lane. The other five or so cats observed in the area were wearing collars and better go home where they belong. There were two cats that I can pick up and pet. They also better head home before they are trapped and sent to a cage in a different location.

There are successful colonies in Norwell, Duxbury, 17 other South Shore towns. Managed feral colonies control the cat population.

Let me address some of the issues that I keep hearing or reading about. Little kids picking up sick kittens and getting bitten. First of all on my visits, two to three times a day no sick cats or kittens have been spotted. Second even if there was a sick feral cat, you couldn't get within 10 to 15 feet of it. Feral cats are scared to death of humans they bolt like lighting. So, if there are sick kittens kids can pick up, they must be somebody's neglected pets. Perhaps someone's pet roaming outside was forced to deliver her kittens in the woods.

There are volunteers waiting to implement a nationally tried and effective method. The cost to the town $0. The costs to us: a minimum of $130 per male and $155 per female to alter. Then there is foster home care, food and shelter. So far there are twice as many females to alter as males. Oh I forgot, most of all it is our time. We all have full-time jobs. Fortunately several of us have jobs that allow for morning, afternoon and evening shifts to carry out this task and maintain the colony.

So far 11 cats have been trapped all but one kitten altered and all tested and inoculated. Three cats have been adopted, two kittens almost ready to adopt that are in a foster home, one kitten died of malnutrition at the beginning of our evolvement, and five cats have been released and are being monitored. We have had to stop due to road construction and now due to the uncertainty of where the cats are going. So we are waiting to hear from the health board. We have still been working in other areas in town. Four other cats in another location in Cohasset have been trapped, altered and are in a foster home. We would like to get moving on James Lane project, the immediate residents are willing to let us continue. January kittens are on their way and then there will be even more cats to deal with.

I have started a non-profit organization, Cohasset CATS, Cats Around Town Society, formed to distribute educational material and talks, problem solve, fund altering and inoculations and get a handle on just how many cats are roaming uncared-for in Cohasset. Our animal control officer is apparently not responsible for cat issues.

Mark Twain said it best: "If a man could be crossed with a cat, it would improve the man but would destroy the cat." Well, Mr. Twain, maybe the board of health will listen to you.

Pokémon lays siege to nation's pre-teens

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It was bound to happen one of these days. A 12-year-old boy in Lakeland, Fla., a seventh grader at the Sleepy Hill Middle School, attacked his teacher. He "charged the teacher, pushed him and choked him . . . and tried to run out." He was promptly suspended and faces a year's expulsion.

The teacher's crime? No, he didn't take away the kid's Uzi. Something worse. He confiscated his Pokémon trading cards.

You guys who don't have youngsters in the 7-to-14 age range have no idea the hold that Pokémon items — each available at a more-then-nominal fee — have taken on the pre-teen set in less than a year.

Beanie Babies? Perhaps wilting under the Pokémon onslaught, Ty's Beanie Babies, more than 100 of them from dinosaurs to Teddy bears, will be retired en masse on New Year's Day, 2000, after a run of six years.

No, it's not part of the Y2K virus, although many parents would not be blamed if they thought it was.

"This is the biggest thing I've seen in 16 years in the business," says Steve Higgins, who sells Pokemons - Japanese shorthand for "pocket monsters" — from his shop, the Outer Limits, in Waltham. "We can't get cards on a regular basis and usually they're gone within an hour."

So far, there are more than 150 different Pokémon cards with more being run off weekly. Pokemons describe a game played with cards, a television show, a line of toys and clothing, and last week a motion picture opened at a theater near you.

Note that it is called "Pokemon, the First Movie," and, yes, that probably means what I'm afraid it means.

A friend of mine took her 9-year-old to the opening of the movie and came away with a card featuring Pikachu, the fat little leader of the Pokemon gang, and a review of the picture that would make Joyce and Dixie cringe.

"This human trainer tries to create a perfect Pokemon," she reported. "He does and the Pokemon tries to take over the world. He creates clones of the Pokemons to fight the real ones. They do but nobody wins. They just run out of fight."

Tell Meryl and Julia their Oscars are safe.

"It was cute for the age group and there is a good moral at the end," my friend said, "It says, 'If you go with your heart, you always win.'"

Indications are the movie houses won, too. "Pokemon, the First Movie" took in $10.1 million on the first day and $9.7 million on the second, best of any animated film. That's pretty good considering the first day was Wednesday and the second day Thursday.

Needless to say, Pokemon cards have become so popular that in many schools, including the Sleepy Hill Middle School in Lakeland, Fla., and the Johnson School in Nahant, they have been banned by spoilsport school committees.

"They (the kids) trade cards like baseball cards, but they are doing it at recess when they are supposed to be eating and in class when they are supposed to be learning," said Johnson Principal Thomas LaValley.

And a group of parents in California has filed a class action suit, claiming that the Pokemon game promotes gambling among children and thus violates federal racketeering laws in the marketing of Pokemon cards.

Legal authorities give the suit little chance - especially when Pikachu and his gang turn their powers loose in the courtroom.

ed to the police. This happened on Monday, Nov. 8. Disturbing as this is, hold onto your hats, the worst is yet to come!

Fact Two: I did not know that the flashing red lights and sign that reads "STOP" are just there to break up all that yellow paint. I did not know that it is optional to stop for a school bus when these devices are deployed. I did not know that other drivers feel total disregard for the safety of children! What do I hear? "Not in this town!" you say? On Nov. 12 I stopped to let an Osgood student off at her stop. She crosses the road to get to her house. Thankfully I did what I always do. I popped the door handle so the stop sign would deploy and my lights would turn from yellow to red and did not open the door fully. Thankfully, this student stopped to show me something. As I looked at what she was showing me, not one but two cars (that had been stopped behind the bus) decided that they had waited long enough (all of 15 seconds). When I saw the first car, I started reading the plate number, but was unable to get it. Why, you ask? Two reasons: 1. The car was going too fast. 2. The second car was almost on top of the first and blocked the plate. Why didn't I get the second plate? One simple reason: I was in shock that two drivers would pass a school bus with its safety devices deployed.

All I keep thinking about is what might have happened on Friday. What if, what if... Those three drivers showed that a child's life means nothing to them. They got away with it this time. Next time they won't. I will not be shocked the next time it happens. And, unfortunately, there will be a next time.

I know that being behind a school bus can be frustrating. But please remember this: We are carrying someone's son, daughter, niece, nephew, grandchild. The safety of these children is more important than any time schedule you may have.

Finance director decision faulted

TO THE EDITOR:

To Cohasset Board of Selectmen,

I understand your board did not support Mark Haddad in his proposal for a director of finance. Strategically that is a mistake. I have heard discussion about needing an "independent" accounting person who reports to you. This was an undercurrent from the days of the original vote on the town manager.

This really misses the whole point; there are two main needs in the financial functions of any organization (whether it be a business or a town).

First, is the line accounting function. This consists of all of the people who actually perform the accounting duties. In Cohasset it would be the offices of the town accountant, the treasurer and the assessor. It is this organization that the director of finance would oversee and coordinate. (Technically, Mark holds this position now, since he is the chief financial officer of the town.) The question really is, does he personally have the financial skills to do this adequately along with all of the other things you expect him to do? Or, would it be beneficial to let him reorganize so that he has a professional person who can direct all of these functions for the betterment of the town's finances? Of course, a possible catch is: can we afford the additional pay increase and how will this play out in the budget? This part is properly the selectmen's decision.

The second town financial function is the audit function. Cohasset should (and I think does) have an independent outside audit performed each year to review our overall financial operation and grade it. This report should be directed to the selectmen so that you have a report card to know how an outsider skilled in town finances views our performance in the absolute and against our peers. The selectmen must be very active in reading and understanding this audit report. If you don't spend the time to do this you are neglecting your oversight duty. Of course this report should also go to the town manager so he can see the report card and make the adjustments in his operation that are indicated.

I think some on the board are mixing up these two functions. If the only reason some are against the proposal is that they want to be directly involved in or direct the personnel issues of the financial department, then I think you are meddling in the town manager's job and probably should get a new town manager since you obviously don't trust him (or her).

The issue of "independence" is bunk and has no place in the discussion of a line management function. Can you imagine what would happen if we took the DPW superintendent and had him report directly to the selectmen, while all of the DPW workers reported to the town manager? Don't you think that would be a mess? Plus, do the selectmen really want to spend the necessary time to directly supervise any operations personnel? (Keep in mind, the director of finance is an operational job.) I think you'll agree it's working pretty well with a professional manager who is paid to supervise and direct town functions full-time.

Anyway, that's the way I see it. The selectmen really pulled the pins out from under Mark on this one.

LIBRARY CORNER

Artist of the Month

Oil paintings by artist Heather Risley of Stoughton are currently featured at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for the month of November.

Risley's paintings are in private and corporate collections across the country and in Europe.

Risley attended UMass/Amherst and the Massachusetts College of Art. She has studied and had workshops with numerous artists such as Mary Good, David Curtis and Robert Moore. Risley has also received many local and regional awards through the Stoughton Art Association, the South Shore Art Festival and the Brockton Art Museum.

"I sense beauty and harmony and feel that my painting is a vehicle of expression for these qualities in life," Risley states on her resumé. "Working in oil, I do a variety of subjects in the realist tradition. My subjects reflect a strong feeling for light contrasts and composition."

There are a number of vivid local scenes in Risley's paintings on exhibit, including the cupola of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and a serene depiction of boats on Cohasset Harbor. Stop in at the library and enjoy all these paintings and consider one for a wonderful holiday gift.

Senior computer club

Would you like to meet informally with other seniors learning to use the Internet? Several patrons have suggested that the library form a group that would meet Tuesday mornings at the library to share their knowledge and enthusiasm about utilizing computers.

If you are interested in participating or in helping to organize this group, call the library at 383-1348 and leave your name, address and phone number. Updates on how this project is developing will follow.

Internet training

Thanks to two volunteer teachers, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library has completed two Internet training sessions for adults. Teachers David Game and Andy Durham, both of Cohasset, each taught three sessions of the Basics of Internet.

A second round of classes is being organized. "As long as we can get volunteer teachers from the community, we're willing to put together groups of students and schedule classes," said Mrs. Janet Husband, Paul Pratt Memorial Library director. "We already have quite a waiting list. Obviously, this is something many people want."

For more information or to volunteer to teach a basic course about the Internet, call the library at 383-1348. A big thank you to David Game and Andy Durham! Volunteers are so important and necessary in providing current and interesting programs.

Community service

John Hertig and Erik Shea, Cohasset High School students, have completed their community service project at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. During the half-semester they volunteered, they performed a variety of useful assignments from installing software on the new Children's Room computer to tutoring individual users at the Internet stations in the Reference Room.

"This community service program run by the high school is great," library director Janet Husband said. "We can always use help here. John and Erik were especially good at sharing their Internet skills and confidence with adult learners. We'll miss them."

Congratulations to John and Erik for a job well done.

Selectman Diane Sullivan sounds off at meeting

Blasts rejection of Haddad's proposal for finance director

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Not one to hide her opinions, Selectman Diane Sullivan used Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting as a forum to publicly take three of her fellow selectmen to task for voting against Town Manager Mark Haddad's proposal for a reorganization of the town's finance department.

"I'm troubled by the lack of support we gave Mark Haddad on the Director of Finance," Sullivan said of the Nov. 2 decision by selectmen Ronnie McMorris, Merle Brown, and Fred Koed to vote against recommending Haddad's proposal for a new finance director position. Haddad had asked selectmen to recommend the article at the Dec. 6 special town meeting.

"This was simply an attempt by Mark to structure his people under him," Sullivan continued. "This decision reinforces the larger issue that this board has never supported the Town Manager Act. This decision is a black mark on this board and is not one of the happier moments of my tenure."

Haddad had requested a reorganization of the finance department similar to the consolidation of the Department of Public Works several years ago. Formerly separate entities, the highway, tree, park, cemetery, and refuse departments have been combined into a single department headed by DPW Superintendent Harold Litchfield.

Haddad said a senior-level financial officer would help ensure similar accountability in the financial department. Currently, that department is made up of three individual departments: the treasurer/collector's department, the assessors' department, and the town accountant's department. The heads of those three departments each report to Haddad individually.

"This was simply an attempt by Mark to structure his people under him. This decision reinforces the larger issue that this board has never supported the Town Manager Act. This decision is a black mark on this board and is not one of the happier moments of my tenure."
Selectman Diane Sullivan

Town accountant Michael Buckley was Haddad's choice to fill the new position. Haddad asked for a $1,500 appropriation at special town meeting for the rest of the fiscal year to compensate Buckley for the additional responsibility, which would have had to be approved at special town meeting. The creation of the position itself would also have to be approved by the town because it requires a bylaw change.

After selectmen voted not to recommend his proposal for a finance director, Haddad rescinded the article from consideration at the special town meeting.

"I don't want to go forward with this unless there's unanimous support among the selectmen," he said before selectmen voted on Nov. 2.

Sullivan suggested the town might support the proposal despite the lack of a recommendation from selectmen.

"I think the town would have seen the logic in the proposal," she said. "I think the people of Cohasset hold Mark in high esteem, as well as Michael Buckley, who would have filled the position. I think it was a good idea and feel that Mark deserved our support."

Selectman Thomas Callahan, who voted along with Sullivan to recommend Haddad's proposal at the special town meeting, endorsed her comments in support of creating a finance director.

"I agree with Diane," he said. "I hope Mark puts the article back on the warrant."

In a telephone interview Wednesday, Haddad said he did indeed plan to bring the article before special town meeting.

"I'm still going to include it," he said. "I'm going to make it part of my overall budgetary presentation to the town. I had planned on doing that even before Diane's kind words last night, which I appreciated."

Not everyone was so appreciative of Sullivan's comments, however. McMorris said Sullivan should not have used the selectmen's comment period to find fault with fellow board members who disagreed with her position.

"I don't think the selectmen's comment period is the time to chastise others on the board for voting differently than you," she told Sullivan.

Sullivan disagreed with McMorris' contention.

"I'm an elected official and this is a public forum," she said. "This is the place to talk about it. I hope that the proposal is brought up again and that it's looked on favorably by those on the board who are still in office. I intended to say what I said and I'm glad I said it."

Selectmen Fred Koed said he voted against the proposed finance director because he felt such a decision should be made at the annual town meeting in March.

"I want to assure you that my vote was nothing personal," he told Haddad. "I do hold both you and Michael Buckley in high esteem. I just tend to think of the annual town meeting as the place to change the structure of government."

Selectmen chairman Merle Brown said the issue was a dead one as far as he was concerned.

"We've already discussed this and voted on it," he said. "Let's move on."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Gratuitous attacks should stop

To the Editor:

In his most recent rambling attack on the Cohasset Public Schools (Cohasset Mariner, Nov. 11, 1999), Joe McElroy once again has demonstrated an abysmal ignorance of the law, a troubling lack of knowledge regarding the education of children, selective amnesia regarding the recent history of the town and an uncanny knack for getting things wrong. Addressing each of these in turn:

1) Mr. McElroy suggests that a sane businessperson would close Cohasset High School and negotiate an arrangement to send Cohasset students to Norwell, Hingham, Scituate and Hull. Unfortunately, that businessperson (sane or not) would find it impossible to do so without a vote of the respective towns in favor of School Choice, or an act of the Legislature to set aside the Choice law that governs acceptance of students from other towns. Leaving aside the debatable merits of this suggestion, it is currently not legally possible to "out-source" our children (as if they were widgets), and at best unlikely to be so in the foreseeable future.

2) Mr. McElroy suggests creation of a middle school housing grades 4-8. No one with even the slightest understanding of child development or knowledge of educationally appropriate grade alignments would suggest placing fourth-grade students in the same school with eighth-grade students. A true middle school is designed around the educational needs and social, emotional and intellectual development of children in grades 6-8.

3) Mr. McElroy asserts that a succession of school committees and two superintendents have proven incapable of crafting a strategic plan and that no phased building plan was presented at the time the new Osgood School was being discussed. First, in the interest of full disclosure, I was a member of that "succession of school committees" for nine years. But Mr. McElroy also was a school committee member for two years, a fact that he conveniently fails to mention so that he can attack others. Second, the Cohasset Public Schools have operated under a strategic plan, developed with the cooperation and input of administrators, teachers, students and community members, for more than a decade. Third, a phased building plan was presented to the community at the time we were discussing replacement of the old Osgood. Phase one of that plan was to be the construction of the new K-3 school and partial renovation and expansion of the Deer Hill School. Phase two was to be renovation of the Middle/High School. As many will recall, although Mr. McElroy clearly does not, voters rejected the plan to renovate Deer Hill. The plan to renovate the Middle/High School is currently before the town.

4) Mr. McElroy claims that Cohasset High School's operating costs are $12,000 per student. The Massachusetts Department of Education (DOE) defines operating costs as expenditures for administration, instruction, pupil services, transportation, plant maintenance and fixed charges, but not capital outlays or long-term interest on debt. According to the DOE, Cohasset's per pupil expenditures for 1997-98 (the latest year for which data are available) were $6,361. If we spent $12,000 on the 302 students enrolled in the High School in 1997-98, then we must have spent only $4,578 for each of the 955 kids enrolled in grades K-8 that year. Either the School Committee has been extremely efficient in educating younger children, or there is something wrong with Mr. McElroy's figures.

Debate and discussion concerning the education of our young people is the right of every citizen and is necessary for the health and vitality of the public schools. But the constant gratuitous attacks on the volunteers and professionals running our schools, consisting as they do of half-truths, egregious errors of fact and witless, uninformed comments and proposals, ought to stop. They have grown repetitive and tiresome.

Support school building projects

To the Editor:

The citizens of Cohasset will be called to a Town Meeting on Dec. 6 and much of the discussion for that gathering will center around the issue of whether or not to approve funding through a tax increase for renovations of Deer Hill and the middle-high school. There has been much discussion and disagreement over this issue and much disapproval over the way moneys are spent or miss-spent in Cohasset. However, before casting our votes I think that there are some facts that need to be put before the public.

Maintenance of the schools seems to be a serious concern and raises questions as to why they have been so badly neglected. Many in the town immediately fault the administration and the school committee, perhaps with some justification. However, when carefully and prudently prepared budgets are drastically slashed, the administration and the school committee are left with serious challenges. Faculty and staff positions must be maintained if at all possible. Supplies that are necessary must be funded and maintenance is what suffers, simply because of lack of funds. Budgets were reduced so drastically last spring that the administration was forced to eliminate needed faculty positions, resulting in some very large classes. Funding for supplies was kept to absolute necessities. I know for a fact that one of the text books used in the high school math department is so pathetic that the teacher must spend much of the year supplementing from other sources — a complete waist of time and energy.

Many adults sight that today's youngsters behave so badly they do not deserve new or better facilities. I agree that many of our young people are willfully disobedient, rude, irreverent and disrespectful, but just as many are wonderful. Children are molded by their parents or guardians and their society. It is unjust to punish our young people for the sins or the failings of their role models. We need to find ways to improve our society and our culture and we can't do that by failing to provide adequate facilities for education.

Building costs are rising daily. Waiting to renovate will only increase the cost of the project, probably significantly.

We live in an affluent community but there are people on fixed incomes and it does not seem fair to burden them with taxes that they aren't able to pay. Many communities offer creative plans to help out senior citizens or those with modest incomes.

If we fail to fund and provide for our schools we will begin to see our respectable school system failing to meet the demands of today's educational needs. If this happens, young couples with children will find other towns to live in and that will result in plummeting values for moderately priced homes and properties.

We all stand to lose if we allow our school system and our facilities to fall into disrepair.

Boys soccer squad looks back on season

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

It was a year that the Cohasset High boys soccer team will not forget any time soon.

After several down years in which the Skippers did not qualify for the tournament, the team overcame a sluggish start and steadily progressed throughout the season, to the point where they qualified for the tournament.

"This year went a lot better than I expected," said senior captain Kevin Devito. "I think it's due to Coach Ramos."

First year coach Juan Ramos did not exactly walk into an ideal situation, but by the time his first season was over, he had turned the program around 180 degrees.

"On the field, I had to address their approach to the game," said Ramos. "Their way of playing was not conducive to their physical talent. Off the field, I had to deal with a few players who had issues with commitment, timeliness and motivation."

So what was Ramos' secret?

"I don't know if there's any formula," said Ramos. "I just went in there and knew what I had to do. I didn't go in there yelling and screaming. I had positive outlook."

That approach rubbed off on the team.

"The kids just worked and worked, and the magic started happening," said Ramos. "I don't know why they didn't rebel."

For Devito, the answer was simple.

"He showed us we could do it," said Devito, who played in net. "He showed us how to work as a team."

The Skippers were off to an 0-3 start, but a turning point would soon follow.

"We tied Randolph the next game, and we played pretty well," said Ramos. "That's when I knew we were getting there, but there were still things we needed to work on."

From there, the Skippers would battle into contention for a tournament spot, when they had another breakthrough.

"We played Hanover on a Friday, and we lost," said Ramos. "We had the next two days off, then we had a game against Randolph on Monday again. It was a crucial game to qualify for the tournament, and we killed them. We had a game the next night, and we were reached another level."

Devito also pointed to the same game as a turning point for the season.

"We won some games throughout the season, and we started working as a team," said Devito. "Practices were tough. But something clicked in the Randolph game. We played really well."

From there the Skippers reached the tournament and made some noise, reaching the quarterfinals and losing to Hanover for the third time, 2-0. The Indians have since gone on to win the Division 3 South sectional title and are two wins away from a state title.

"That makes me feel pretty good," said Ramos. "The South Shore League is very strong. We had three teams in the quarterfinals."

The Skippers played Hanover tough, and received some spectacular saves by Devito to keep them close. As they trailed 1-0 until three minutes were left.

"We played really well," said Devito. "We competed with the best. It was really a 1-0 game until the final three minutes. I wasn't disappointed with the loss. I was happy because we put out our best effort."

It was an effort that has Ramos looking ahead.

"Next year we'll hopefully go down to 16 games, and I'll have a better feel for the league. It's a situation where we only lose two players," said Ramos. "Some people might look at it as there being a lot of pressure on us. I think we're gonna have a lot of fun. It's going to be even better."

Skippers nipped by late Hanover rally

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset High football coach Tony Rolfe had hoped for a better result, but couldn't fault the effort of his team.

"They just wore us down," said Rolfe after Hanover rallied to defeat the Skippers, 19-14.

It had been a rough season for the Hanover High football team.

Coming off a loss to Abington that eliminated the Indians from a shot at the Super Bowl, Hanover seemed to be sputtering when it came to Cohasset

Both teams entered the contest with a 3-5 record, and Hanover found itself confronted with a task that has given nightmares to coaches across the South Shore: Stopping Skippers running back Daniel Trowers.

"I don't know that you can stop him," said Hanover coach John Sullivan. "We weren't able to. You just have to try and contain him."

Trowers ran for over 160 yards, but had a touchdown that was called back.

Hanover was able to avoid the big penalties

"We just had to eliminate our mistakes," said Sullivan. "We cut down on our penalties and we did not have any turnovers."

It was also a matter of carrying out the game plan and having a balanced attack.

"We ran the ball well and we threw the ball better," said Sullivan. "I think the main thing is that we were able to run the ball better."

Trowers wasn't the only running back on the field Friday night. Andy Breda was able to grind out over 100 yards on the ground for the Indians and scored two touchdowns, including the first, which came after Cohasset fumbled on its own 12. Breda's score gave Hanover a 7-0 lead.

Cohasset bounced back and took the lead, 8-7, in the second quarter, then took a 14-7 lead. Jason Brown threw a pair of touchdown passes to Nick Bolster and Kevin Andrews. Brian Krupczak rushed for the conversion on the first touchdown.

"Trowers almost beat us single-handedly," said Sullivan. "We stopped him for the most part. But it's easier said than done. He only had about four or five big runs, two of which went for over 40 yards each."

"We threw the ball very well. That's what we're looking for. Obviously, we'd feel better if we had won, but we'll take a couple of days off and get ready for Hull."
Cohasset coachTony Rolfe

Hanover was able to get back into the game as the offense mixed in the passing game with the running game. Quarterback Ryan Gavin connected with Jared Baker for a 33-yard pass. Breda added another score to pull the Indians within 14-13

The Skippers were unable to move the ball and punted out to their 35, where Hanover took over to start the fourth quarter.

The Indians then pounded their way toward the goal line, and seized the lead on Dana Butner's touchdown.

"We just had to work harder in practice," said Sullivan, whose team dropped a 23-7 decision to the Green Wave a week earlier. "We had to concentrate on what we had to do in practice."

In addition to Butner and Breda, the Indians got key performances from linemen Tony Espositio and

Cross nets winning goal for Aces

By Mike Hardman

Pembroke's Niki Cross scored a goal she will never forget.

The freshman at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham netted the overtime goal that gave the Aces a 2-1 win over Needham for the Div. 1 South title at Cohasset High School.

Teammate Kristine Lauria of Rockland took a corner from the left side at the 7:12 minute mark of the overtime. Cross then broke through the Needham defense, put the pass into the net, sending the Aces to the state semifinals Thursday night against Newton North at Natick High at 7:30 p.m. The winners will play either Ludow or Shrewsbury for the state title on Saturday.

While Lauria's kick was making it way toward the Needham goal, Cross was preparing for the shot.

"I saw it coming," said an elated Cross. "It was perfect. I wanted it to go in."

Two years ago, Needham knocked the Aces out of the tournament in overtime, so Notre Dame was able to get some measure of revenge.

Cross and her teammates expected that the game would go right down to the end.

"We knew it would be a close game," she said. "They have a lot of talent and experience."

The victory gives the Indians a morale boost as they prepare to host Super Bowl bound Norwell Thanksgiving morning..

"Obviously, confidence is a major factor," said Sullivan. "It was nice to get the win going into Thanksgiving."

The Skippers are also feeling confident despite the loss.

"We threw the ball very well," said Rolfe. "Not including the penalty, we threw for three touchdowns. That's what we're looking for. Obviously, we'd feel better if we had won, but we'll take a couple of days off and get ready for Hull."

net, she threw her arms into the air and raced out to greet her teammates.

For ND coach Jose Arana, the goal ended some tense moments in the overtime.

"Seeing that winning goal I was just relieved," said Arana, whose team won its first South soccer title.

Throughout the tournament, ND has trailed in every game. After a scoreless first half, Needham's Kim Kelly headed in a free kick from Tracy Prihoda for a 1-0 Rocket lead.

ND's Molly Tate of Weymouth tied the game at one with a pretty drive up the field.

Rockland's Christine Rich, a senior, was outstanding in goal for the Aces.

Cohasset's Sarah Motley is a sophomore on the squad.

In the other tournament games last week, ND defeated Marshfield, 3-2, in overtime in the quarterfinals and then followed that up with a 2-1 over Plymouth North in the semifinals.

Senior housing committee shares recommendations

Professional survey only one of a number of ideas

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A $5,000 article to finance a senior housing study by U-Mass Boston is on the warrant for the Dec. 6 special town meeting. If approved by the town, officials from the university are set to begin work on the study the following day. The study, however, is only one piece in completing the larger puzzle of finding a permanent solution to Cohasset's need for senior housing.

"We've come up with a number of recommendations," said Barbara Anglin, co-chairman of the Cohasset Elder Affairs housing committee, at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting. "Obviously, our first recommendation is that the need for senior housing has to be documented. We also feel that any kind of senior housing will increase the tax base. People need to understand that this won't be a burden on the town."

Fellow committee member Dorothy Keville said other towns have been able to fund capital projects thanks to the increased tax dollars generated by senior housing.

"I talked with officials in Duxbury, and they were able to use the money from senior housing toward schools and libraries," she said.

The Elder Affairs housing committee also shares the view of members of the conservation commission, board of health, and open space committee that a town master plan should be completed as soon as possible.

"We think one of the town buildings will eventually be open," Anglin said. "We need to be thinking about the reuse of those buildings. Also, the use of the old Osgood school is still up in the air. We think the library and senior housing can coexist in that space. The 1996 and 1998 town meeting votes can both be honored. It would be a beautiful marriage."

"Seniors are an invaluable commodity. We don't want them moving to Scituate, Duxbury, or other towns that have senior housing. We want to keep them here."
Barbara Anglin

"In 1996, the town voted to appoint an Osgood reuse committee to put the old Osgood school back on the tax rolls.," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "Senior housing was one of the possibilities of how the old Osgood school would be used. In 1998, the town voted not to sell the building and instead fund construction drawings to convert it into the new town library."

Zoning would currently not allow the use of a library and senior housing in the same space. Anglin suggested a new town planner might be able to figure out a way to make such a combination work.

Haddad said his conversations with planning board chairman Alfred Moore have led him to believe a town planner position could be created in the near future.

"Al and I have talked about the possibility of a town planner," he said. "It's likely that a town planner will be part of the planning board budget for the next fiscal year."

Anglin said seniors also need to be educated about tax deferral programs which could enhance their quality of life by giving them more disposable income.

"Seniors are entitled to defer property taxes until their home is sold," she said. "Adult children also need to be educated about the tax deferrals. A lot of them don't want their parents to defer their taxes because it will affect the inheritance."

While certain tax deferral programs are limited to seniors, many more homeowners in town are affected by changes in Title 5 regulations that govern septic systems.

"There is a lot of fear and misconceptions about Title 5," Anglin said. "The senior center would be glad to host a town-wide forum explaining the issue."

The Elder Affairs senior housing committee has been disbanded following the completion of a pilot survey which they gave to the UMass-Boston team conducting the professional senior housing needs analysis. The former committee would like selectmen to appoint a formal senior housing committee, which would be responsible to the selectmen.

"We want it to be a formalized committee," Anglin said of the new committee, which hopes to make site visits to successful senior housing developments, work on a plan to determine potential sites for such a development in Cohasset, and research tax incentives for those wishing to donate land on which a development could be built.

Selectman Fred Koed, a UMass-Boston graduate, agreed to serve as a liaison between the new committee and the university conducting the study.

Anglin hopes that study will lead to a senior housing development in Cohasset.

"Seniors are an invaluable commodity," she said. "We don't want them moving to Scituate, Duxbury, or other towns that have senior housing. We want to keep them here."

Wage ruling could lower snow removal costs

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Christmas is coming early this year for Town Manager Mark Haddad. Municipal funding is tight, and Haddad is wishing for cash savings anywhere he can find it. The state Division of Occupational Safety granted Haddad's wish when it issued a finding on Oct. 21 that cities and towns should not pay prevailing wages for snow plowing and removal.

"All I can say is 'Thank God'," Haddad said. "Paying prevailing wages for snow removal results in direct cost increases to the town, and has done so ever since the law went into effect."

The prevailing wage law requires contract-awarding authorities — cities and towns —to hire contractors who pay the prevailing union wage. The law does not apply to all municipal contracts with private companies. The Division of Occupational Safety (DOS) issues a chart of prevailing wages, which is based on the prevailing union wage paid in Boston. Contractors who wanted to bid on certain municipal projects have to pay their workers the prevailing union wage.

In January, the state Attorney General's office issued a ruling that municipalities had to pay prevailing wage for snow removal. The ruling came in response to a request from the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA) for a clarification on the prevailing wage law. Critics of the practice of paying prevailing wage for snow removal said the state law did not cover snowplowing, salting, sanding and other related practices.

"There have always been a lot of questions about whether we actually had to comply with the law for snow removal," Haddad said.

In the January decision, Barbara A. Piselli, chief of the Attorney General's Fair Labor and Business Practices Division said municipalities had to pay prevailing wage for snow removal.

In February, Piselli issued another ruling saying that there was some confusion over whether the prevailing wage law included snow removal. Piselli said the Attorney General's office upheld the statute because the DOS continued to issue wage schedules for snowplowing. Piselli said the Attorney General would enforce the statute for snowplowing unless the Legislature or the DOS clarified the situation.

In it's October decision, DOS issued a statement saying it would no longer issue require prevailing wages for snow removal:

"Acting responsibly, any agency charged with making an administrative decision that carries criminal penalties for non-compliance, such as the prevailing wage law, must carefully oversee the implementation of that decision, including its enforcement. In this case, DOS is not comfortable with the current posture toward enforcement and will not hold awarding authorities and contractors to the requirements and potential penalties of a statute that does not unquestionably apply to them. As such, DOS is unable to determine categorically that the prevailing wage law, M.G.L. ch. 149, sub-section 27F, applies to snow removal until such time as the legislature of the courts provide some guidance on whether this particular category of work is covered under the law."

The Sons of the American Legion will host a pancake breakfast from 7 to 9:30 a.m. on Thanksgiving. The cost is $4 for all you can eat. Reservations are not necessary, just show up and enjoy!

Streets are to be paved

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced four streets affected by the sewer, drainage, or water projects would be paved shortly.

"Linden Drive, Forest Avenue, Rustic Drive, and Jerusalem Road will all be paved in the next two weeks," Haddad said.

Haddad also apologized for the amount of construction on Smith Place, which has recently been paved.

"I know that the water, sewer, and drainage projects have all gone through there," he said. "I apologize to the residents for the inconvenience."

Middle-high school library fosters use of technology

Role expands with advent of the internet

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

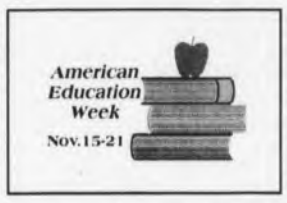
As one witnesses students busily surfing the internet on one of the 15 new computers in the Cohasset middle high school library, one thing is clear. Libraries aren't what they used to be.

The school library of today bears little resemblance to the ones in which baby boomers studied 30 or 40 years ago. The books, magazines, and newspapers are still there of course, but today a student is much more likely to grab hold of a mouse and search the information superhighway than he is to look though a card catalog.

"The library is really the center of media in the school," said Cohasset middle-high school librarian Joan Gallagher. "It's a place where students can access information from books, CDs, and the internet. It's become more important in recent years because kids are doing so much of their research on the internet. If they don't know how to use it the right way, they're wasting time and their academic performance suffers as a result."

Gallagher said many parents and teachers share a common misconception about the ease with which students can use the internet for research purposes.

"A lot of people think that the kids know how to use the internet just because they can get on," she said. "That's like saying a kid knows how to drive because she can start a car. There are 200 million websites and search engines are not as accurate as a card catalog. The internet is a fabulous tool, but the kids have to learn how to use it effectively."



While the internet can allow students to reach vast corners of the world in real time, it can also make simple research tasks more difficult.

"I had a student come in who was trying to look up a word in an Italian dictionary," Gallagher said. "He got on the internet and looked for 15 minutes and still couldn't find the definition. All that time, there was an Italian dictionary sitting on one of the bookshelves. He could have opened that up and found what he was looking for in 30 seconds. It's important to teach these kids to think critically and use the right tool for the right task."

Gallagher said it is crucial that students do as much of their internet research in the library as possible, because they can access books and magazines at the same time.

"What's nice about the library is that everything is physically right here," she said. "A lot of teachers nowadays are limiting the number of internet sources that students can use in doing research papers and projects. Some kids think they can do all their research in five minutes with the internet, but it doesn't work that way."

One exciting possibility provided by the internet is that it allows for more teamwork in developing lesson plans and curriculum.

"All of the teachers in the middle school now have e-mail," Gallagher said. "If I know what they're teaching, I can forward websites to them that are relevant to their lessons. Right now, I'm working with a seventh-grade science teacher, developing a project on cells. The kids will use both books and the internet in doing their research. We're going to team-teach the lessons, and I think the kids will be very interested in what we're doing."

Such a project is an example of how technology can be made useful for teachers and students. Gallagher said librarians and teachers will all need to be technology-literate in the near future.

"Everyone needs to know how to use these tools," she said. "I'm doing a presentation for the teachers on information literacy to show them ways to use technology in a curriculum-relevant situation."

Gallagher recently returned from a conference of 3500 school librarians in Birmingham, Alabama, at which the use of technology was a primary focus.

"We learned of a study done in Colorado, Pennsylvania, and Alaska which showed that a professionally-staffed, well-supported library media center can positively affect test scores," she said. "There was another study in New York in which a social studies teacher had a class that scored below 70 percent on the state's yearly Regents exam. The teacher spent a year with that class focusing on learning how to research and get information. I know it sounds crazy, but the scores went up 20 percent the next year."

While such a rise in test scores may not be possible in Cohasset, the students are certainly excited by the new research tool at their disposal. In fact, Gallagher said she has a difficult time convincing them to do other types of research.

"Right now, it's hard to get them off the computers, because they're so excited to use them," she said. "But the kids are finding that they're just a tool. For doing scientific research, the internet is great, because the information is current. They can access studies that they won't find out about in any book. For subjects like literature, however, the internet is not as strong an information-gathering component. I think the fascination with the internet will die down after a while, and the kids will learn to use the best tool for the task at hand."

For now, however, the fascination continues. In her second year as director of the middle-high school's library/media center, Gallagher said it is a joy to see students work with the new computers.

"Last year, we only had eight machines, which were four and five years old, and completely outdated," she said. "The monitors could only show three colors. Meanwhile, most of these kids had MediaOne internet at home. With the new computers, I see the students showing things to the teachers. There's more sharing of information between the students and teachers. There's also more teamwork between students. None of the students have to be embarrassed not to know something, because another student can show them where to find the information."

Finding that information could become easier for students in the near future. Gallagher is working to develop a database that will merge research tools of the library's card catalog and the internet.

"We're working on automating the card catalog," she said. "The idea is that when students do a search on the card catalog, there will be links to related websites. That way, students can do a book and internet search at the same time. They'll be able to find useful sites instead of navigating their way through a lot of junk."

Concerns with school rehab project voiced

Questions answered at public forum

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

"I want to know if there's a plan existing for the maintenance of these schools and the new Osgood school. Are we going to be here again in 10-15 years with Osgood and in 20 years with Deer Hill and the middle high school?"
Paul Gavasa, 16 Flintlocke Ridge Road

If you hold it, they will come. That was the hope of the school committee, school administrators, and school facilities committee when they decided to hold a joint public forum on Monday night to discuss the proposed $41 million in renovations for Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle High School.

A $390,000 article for construction drawings for the project is on the warrant for the Dec. 6 special town meeting. School facilities committee chairman Robert Spofford explained the need for the $390,000, saying architects would need that money to stay on course for the state's June 1 deadline for submission of school building projects. With 60 percent state reimbursement, the cost of the project to Cohasset will be reduced to approximately $17 million.

"The $390,000 will pay the architects to keep working toward that June 1 deadline," Spofford said. "They'll be doing geotechnical drawings, wetlands analysis, schematics, and cost analyses. Even if the overall project were to fail at the March town meeting or in an override, that money would not be wasted. We will have to do work on these schools, and the reports generated by the architects can be used for a future renovation project."

At the forum, those involved with the school renovation project had hoped to reach a significant number of citizens with that message. Attendance was sparse, however, with perhaps 25 citizens spaced throughout the middle high school auditorium. Though the number of attendees was limited, those who came had a number of questions about how the project would affect the future of Cohasset's schools.

Town may take over school upkeep

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

As a result of the debate surrounding the proposed renovations to Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle-High School, maintenance of the town's schools has become a hot-button issue in recent weeks.

Facing a cost to Cohasset of approximately $17 million for the project, even with state reimbursement, residents and public officials want to ensure that the town's schools are properly maintained in the future.

At the Oct. 26 school committee meeting, selectmen responded to what they viewed as inadequate maintenance at Deer Hill and the middle-high school.

"I was absolutely appalled," said selectman Diane Sullivan following a tour of the schools. "The lack of cleanliness was disgusting. I don't think any children should be using bathrooms and locker rooms that don't look like they've been cleaned for years. I know these buildings are old, but there's no excuse for filth."

Female firefighter is town's only paramedic

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

By virtue of being the town's only female firefighter, Laura Morrison is certainly recognizable when she responds to a fire or an ambulance call. It is her status as the department's only trained paramedic, however, that makes her invaluable to the safety of Cohasset residents.

"In cases of cardiac arrest, for every minute you wait, the chances of survival decrease by 10 percent. The paramedics from South Shore do a great job, but it's all about seconds."
Cohasset firefighter Laura Morrison

Unfortunately, Morrison cannot use those life-saving skills. Because she is the only trained paramedic in the department, the town cannot receive approval from the state to operate paramedic service.

Laura Morrison, the town's only paramedic, is on duty at the Cohasset Fire Department.

"She is really something," Town Manager Mark Haddad said of Morrison. "It's a shame that she can't use her paramedic skills. The town has to have at least three paramedics to get a waiver from the state to establish a paramedic program."

Selectmen voted 4-1, with Diane Sullivan dissenting, to recommend a $100,000 warrant article for the Dec. 6 special town meeting that would allow such a paramedic program to become a reality. The money would be used to hire four new firefighter/paramedics, which Haddad said would be immensely beneficial to the town.

"There are two reasons why this article makes sense," he said. "First, the four additional firefighters will control the overtime situation in Cohasset. More importantly, we'll be able to establish a paramedic program to provide the best possible care for the citizens of Cohasset."

The additional firefighters would allow the department to carry four six-man groups as opposed to the four five-man groups which currently exist. It is the policy of the fire department to keep four firefighters on duty at all times. With crews of five firefighters, the absence of a single firefighter for reason of injury, sickness or vacation already puts the staffing at its minimum limit.

When two of those four firefighters leave the station for an ambulance call, two off-duty firefighters must be called in to replace them. The off-duty firefighters who come in accrue a minimum of two hours of overtime pay for filling in. Overtime expenditures have sky-

Offering hope, warmth and shelter to homeless

To say there is a housing crisis is a gross understatement.

That's the view of John Yazwinski, who has firsthand knowledge of the housing needs on the South Shore as executive director of Fr. Bill's Place in Quincy.

The robust economy and the state's political leaders bent on getting people off welfare have fueled the crisis.

"This is a major crisis like I've never seen," said Yazwinski. "It's the first time in the history of Fr. Bill's Place we have been overbooked every night for 12 months. It's incredible."

The Quincy shelter, which provides temporary housing for individuals, has 95 beds in two facilities but has been accepting up to 110 people a night. "We've got cots set up in the cafeteria because it's getting cold now and we don't want to turn people away," Yazwinski said.

Eliot Binder tells of a similar story at Carolina Hill, a shelter in Marshfield serving homeless families. The 16 rooms available to families have been at full capacity.

"It's horrendous. I really don't know how far up the chain to find a word to describe it," said Binder, executive director of the shelter located on Route 3A. "From what I have been seeing, homelessness has doubled on the South Shore."

Most people find that hard to believe. With a strong economy and new homes going up at a record pace, you would think all was rosy. Think again.

"The economy is doing well but the tide is not picking up all the boats," Yazwinski said. "The working poor can't find reasonable housing so they are forced to live in shelters. Rentals are out of reach and no new housing is being built to accommodate people of modest means. The folks with $8, $9, and even $10 an hour jobs don't have the income to sustain the demands for housing."

Talk to any homeless advocate or provider and you hear the same story: homelessness is at an all-time high. And the need for funding and financial support escalates.

Contact principal's offices for tours

With a $390,000 warrant article for school construction drawings on the docket for the fast-approaching special town meeting on Dec. 6, school committee members welcome anyone in town to see why they feel those renovations are needed.

"We urge anyone who wants to see the conditions at Deer Hill or the middle-high school to contact the principals of those schools if you want to take a tour," said school committee member Betsy Connolly.

"Grab a bunch of neighbors or friends and go together," urged fellow school committee member Kathy Ofsthun.

The number for the middle-high school is 383-6100, while residents can reach Deer Hill at 383-6115.

Suburban Coalition courting Cohasset

Needham selectman Jerry Wasserman has contacted both the selectmen and school committee about appearing at a future meeting to discuss the possibility of Cohasset joining the Suburban Coalition.

A grass-roots lobbying group, the 52-town coalition seeks to promote the interests of suburban communities in the legislature and the governor's office. The cost of membership is $500 per town.

"Mr. Wasserman said he is willing to talk about how we can get more funds for our schools, said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "I think it would be good to hear what he has to say."

Selectmen also wished to talk to Wasserman and asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to include him on the agenda of a future meeting.

E-Tel offers potential revenue for schools

The school alternative funding subcommittee said a legal review has cleared the way for Eastern Telephone to help produce revenue for Cohasset Schools. At left is school committee member Pat Martin with Jacqueline Murphy, director of business development at Eastern Telephone.

School committee member Pat Martin announced that legal review has approved the concept of a phone company donating revenue generated by local phone service to the public schools.

"A mailing is going out to 2900 households in Cohasset, all at a cost to E-Tel," Martin said.

Jacqueline Murphy, director of business development for E-Tel, said the mailing would be sent out at the end of November and would include a letter from the company's president and sign-up materials.

E-Tel is a Boston-based company which resells Bell Atlantic telephone service at a reduced rate. A 1996 decision by Congress to allow competition in the local telephone industry allows resellers like E-Tel to offer services at the reduced rate.

Murphy said schools in other Massachusetts towns have benefited from partnerships with E-Tel.

"In Dedham, we've gotten enough customers to give $7,000 to the local schools," she said. "We're also active in Stoughton and Sharon and are launching in Brookline by the end of the month."

For more information, contact the Superintendent's office at 383-6111.

Private ways to be closed at tracks

New access roads proposed to minimize impact on residents

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Three private ways off of South Main Street will lose their access to that thoroughfare if the latest draft mitigation plan for the Greenbush commuter rail line becomes a reality.

The train tracks are to cross Sestito Lane, Castle Road, and Lincoln Lane, which are all to be closed at those tracks. Cohasset mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber said grade crossings would be necessary to provide access to South Main for residents of those private ways, at a great financial cost to the MBTA.

INSIDE GREENBUSH

"Ordinarily, you would put in a grade crossing, but these are three additional crossings where not many people live," Gruber said. "Crossings are significantly expensive and also pose a safety hazard. In the case of Castle Road, surrounding wetlands would also make it difficult to construct an adequate crossing."

MBTA spokesman Brian Pedro said a two-gate crossing, the type which would be used on the private ways, costs approximately $175,000. Pedro said a larger, four-gate crossing, used on busier roads, costs approximately $400,000.

At all of the proposed grade crossings in town, the MBTA plans to use two quadrant gates with burms, or islands, to prevent cars from avoiding the gates. Those safety precautions ensure the crossings will meet guidelines of the Federal Rail Administration and will allow the train to move through town without having to blow its whistle.

Because of wetlands issues, the MBTA would not be able to construct a crossing with burms at Castle Road. If a crossing were constructed there, the train would have to blow its whistle because the crossing would not meet FRA guidelines.

"If the train has to blow its whistle, it has to do so for a quarter-mile on either side of the crossing," Gruber said. "It would be heard in the center of town."

Lincoln Lane residents will have to access Cohasset through Gannet Pasture Road in Scituate.

To allow residents of Castle Road and Sestito Lane access into town, the MBTA has proposed two connector roadways that will take those residents out to Pond Street. The first roadway is to connect Castle Road and Sestito Lane, while the second will connect Sestito Lane to 100 Pond Street and then out to Pond Street.

The planning board has approved the connector roadways, saying it is the best way to allow residents of those private ways to reach the rest of the town should Greenbush become a reality.

"The consensus was the connector roads were the best way to do it," said planning board chairman Alfred Moore. "We're not standing on a bloody pulpit saying this is a great way to do it, but if the train comes through, what other options are there?"

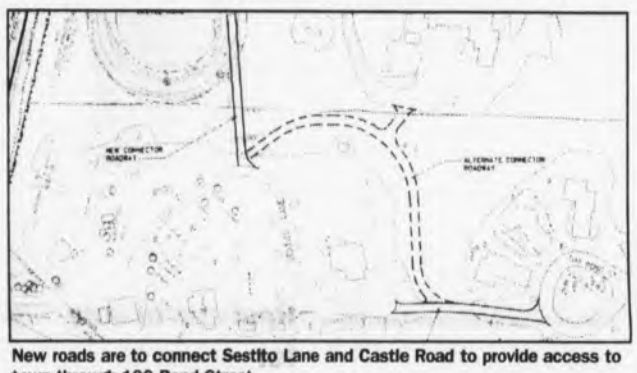
Gruber said the lack of residents living on Castle Road and Sestito Lane may cause any changes made to be fairly insignificant to the town at large.

"This may turn out to be a non-issue," he said of connecting the access road to 100 Pond Street. "Clearly, there won't be a lot of traffic going through there."

The situation on Lincoln Lane is similar to that on Castle Road and Sestito Lane.

"There are wetlands issues concerning a crossing on Lincoln Lane and you're talking about a crossing to serve one home," Gruber said. "Because of the wetlands, you couldn't put in a wide crossing anyway."

The MBTA has proposed the paving of a 50-foot stretch which will allow the residents on Lincoln Lane to exit their property through Gannet Pasture Road in Scituate.



New roads are to connect Sestito Lane and Castle Road to provide access to town through 100 Pond Street.

Towns want federal review of rail project

By Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITER

Faced with conflicting reports from the MBTA and Harvard University, town officials from Scituate, Cohasset and Hingham are pushing for a federal environmental review of the Greenbush project.

During a brief mitigation meeting last week, officials from the three towns agreed to send a letter urging the Army Corps of Engineers to take a closer look at the project. The ACOE is the lead federal agency reviewing Greenbush.

Selectman Frederick Koed of Cohasset abstained from voting on the letter because he said he needed more time to review the material. (For full text of letter, see page 9)

Written by Alexander Macmillan, Hingham Greenbush coordinator, and Tom Gruber, chairman of the Cohasset Greenbush Mitigation Committee, and addressed to Colonel Brian Osterndors of the New England District of the Army Corps of Engineers, the letter requests that engineers prepare a Federal Environmental Impact Report the Greenbush rail restoration project.

"There are serious unresolved conflicts between the data and conclusions reached in the state-level (environmental feasibility report) prepared for this project, which is currently pending before the Corps of Engineers for environmental review," the letter states.

Unlike the two other Old Colony lines, the MBTA has not accepted federal funds for Greenbush. Since only state money will be used to fund the project, the T is not subject to federal environmental standards described by some as more stringent Town officials concluded that asking the Corps to perform an environmental impact report would not turn the planned revival of the Greenbush rail line into a federal project.

Signed by selectmen from all three towns, the letter follows a recent report that was highly critical of the MBTA's Greenbush project. The report was commissioned by Hingham and conducted by the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University. The Harvard report drew a strong response from the MBTA and last week an even stronger rebuttal to the T from the author of the report.

"We want to encourage the Army Corps of Engineers to commit to a federal environmental impact report and that will provide a process in which all of us can participate," said Macmillan.

"And also to get a study by objective experts," added Hingham selectman Katharine W. Reardon.

But Cohasset Selectman Diane C. Sullivan questioned whether the letter to the Corps simply reiterated the contents of a lawsuit Hingham filed in 1996. The lawsuit against the T disputes the T's stance that the Greenbush project is not subject to federal environmental standards because it does not accept federal funds. The other two lines of the Old Colony Railroad which are up and running were federally funded, but the MBTA chose to pay for the Greenbush project with state money.

According to Macmillan, the T did not accept federal funds on Greenbush in order to avoid even higher standards than the state had.

"They improperly attempted to avoid complying with these statutes," said Macmillan.

The Harvard report released last month concluded the Greenbush alternatives analysis by the MBTA was deficient in several ways and more work needed to be done before the transit authority chooses a mode of transportation for the corridor.

Subsequently, the T generated a 12-page rebuttal with a cover letter that questioned not only the report, but the professional credentials of Jonathan Richmond, the main author of the Harvard report.

Richmond responded in writing to the T's rebuttal at the mitigation meeting Thursday saying, "It is unfortunate that the MBTA is disseminating so much false information."

The rebuttal to the T by Richmond also contains a three-page amendment to the original Harvard study.

"Keep in mind I don't think the T was open in sharing files," said Gruber as he handed out the report at the meeting.

Officials from the three towns who gathered in Scituate Thursday, mulled over what to do with the study, the T's response and the rebuttal.

"The Harvard rebuttal is very firm and is very professional and makes mincemeat out of the T's response," said Gruber.

Sen. Robert Hedlund (R - Weymouth), a vocal rail opponent, also found the Harvard study more believable than the report generated by Sverdup, the consultant to the T.

"It's been an extremely close relationship," he said of Sverdup's ties to the T. "It's like it's a wholly-owned subsidiary of the T."

If the Corps performs an environmental report, the public will have a chance to participate in hearings, said Macmillan.

Hingham selectman Martin Crane said the T should be held to the highest standard there is — a federal environmental review.

"The issue is that we all believe the same thing, we want to see the facts," said Crane.

While the three towns have authored and signed several letters together, Hedlund said the towns should consider including Weymouth in their discussions.

"Selectmen weren't serous about the mitigation committee," he said. "Now's an opportunity with the change of form of government over there to try to work them into the discussions."

Concerns with school rehab project are voiced existing for the maintenance of these schools and the new Osgood school," said Paul Gavasa, 16 Flintlocke Ridge Road. "Are we going to be here again in 10-15 years with Osgood and in 20 years with Deer Hill and the middle high school?"

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun told the public a plan is being formulated to improve maintenance in the town's schools.

"We do have a plan," she said. "The selectmen would like to take over the maintenance of the schools, beginning with next fiscal year. Maintenance will go over to the town's DPW (Department of Public Works), which maintains the library, fire and police departments, and town hall. Maintenance budgets will have to be increased, however."

Roger Hoit of the Hingham architectural firm Strekalovsky and Hoit, the town's contracted architects for the school rehabilitation project, said a maintenance plan must be approved by the state to receive reimbursement for the project.

"The school department will work with us on a preventive maintenance plan for both schools," he said. "We have to submit a checklist of items to be maintained as part of the application to then state."

Ofsthun said citizens need to understand the difference between custodial services and maintenance.

"Custodial deals with the day-to-day cleaning of the schools," she said. "Maintenance deals things like replacing light bulbs, fixing broken windows, and repairing heating systems.

School superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey said custodial services are likely to be contracted out under the proposed transfer of maintenance to the town.

"[Town Manager] Mark Haddad is putting together a bid document for cleaning services," Malvey said. "We'll review those estimates and transition maintenance and custodial services to the town budget during the next fiscal year."

Osgood principal Merilee Cantelmo said she and her staff have heard concerns that the new building is not being properly maintained.

"We take very seriously the duty of maintaining the new building," she said. "We've established a month-by-month grid of when things need to happen, such as air filters being replaced. That grid took us a lot of hours and we don't have the staff to carry it out. We only have two custodians for 77,000 square feet. The norm is to have a custodian for every 20,000 square feet."

Aside from assuring proper maintenance in all town schools, a primary concern of parents has been the school committee's decision to reconfigure grades throughout the school system. Under the proposed reconfiguration, third-graders will move from Osgood to Deer Hill and sixth-graders will move from Deer Hill to an expanded middle-high school.

"Initially, I has some of the same reservations many of you have," school committee member Stephanie Noble told the parents in attendance. "What kind of schools will these become? But I realized that there will always be a grade at least two years older than the youngest in a school. In a school system, we cannot safeguard these kids against society.

"We're not asking the sixth-graders to grow up," Noble continued. "There's simply a point in these children's lives where they need a certain type of education. And Osgood and Deer Hill will become younger schools."

School committee member Betsy Connolly said the learning styles of third and sixth-graders were a primary factor in the reconfiguration.

"Academically, sixth-graders are just different than fourth and fifth-graders," she said. "They need computer labs and exploratory learning opportunities. From kindergarten to second grade, kids are learning to read. By third grade, they're ready to read to learn."

Lucia Flibotte, 27 Summer St., wondered about the ramifications the school district might face if the town votes against renovations.

"Will our schools have accreditation if we don't move forward with this project?" she asked.

Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins said his building would likely face major problems in gaining accreditation should the school district not show progress toward renovations. In particular, Collins noted the school's lack of compliance with providing handicapped accessibility mandated by the American Disabilities Act (ADA).

"We'd have a major problem with this building," he said to those gathered in the middle-high school auditorium. "We wouldn't get by the ADA situation, let alone the locker rooms. Our accreditation meetings will take place in 2002. We've already completed our new mission statement for those meetings. It's right around the corner."

Cohasset resident Cynthia Hurley said many other towns are facing similar school renovation projects and urged her fellow taxpayers to stop putting it off.

"Every day I read in the paper about another town that is dealing with this," she said. "The town of Milton is facing a $100 million project. Let's force ourselves to bite the bullet and do this now. A lot of towns are renovating all of their schools. Thank God we've got one school done. Everywhere I look in this town, I see new cars, people going on vacations. We can pay for this. What would be a better time?"

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the school renovation projects being planned across Massachusetts are simply a sign of the times.

"Hingham and Norwell are going through this, and Hull is six to eight months behind where we are now," DeGiacomo said. "School buildings in this state are all going through this. These buildings were all built in the postwar baby boom. They're all 50 years old. Every town is going to be faced with a decision on renovating its schools. Let's do it now."

Collins said the growth of the town would have forced an addition at the middle-high school even if the schools were not 50 years old.

"According to the projections, we're going to have 251 kids in grades seven and eight in seven years," he said. "We've got nowhere to put that many kids, and we will need an addition at some point anyway. We're only going to get one shot at this with the state. Let's do this thing right once. If we don't, we'll be dealing with this issue again in the near future."

Town may take over school upkeep

McMorris suggested that school maintenance be made a higher priority.

"These schools belong to the community," said selectman Ronnie McMorris "Taxpayers should be able to have an expectation that these buildings be kept clean. We need to get somebody into the schools whose main focus is maintenance."

To accomplish that goal, Town Manager Mark Haddad has met with school committee members, selectmen, and Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey to negotiate possible changes to school maintenance procedures. The group has agreed upon a proposal that would put the town in charge of school maintenance and custodial services. The full school committee will have to vote officially to enact any such change.

"The selectmen would like to take over the maintenance of the schools, and my feeling is we should let them have it," said school committee member Kathy Ofsthun at Monday night's forum about the school renovation project. "To be successful, however, budgets will have to be increased."

"My concern is that someone be absolutely responsible for making sure things get done at the appropriate times. We don't have that person right now, quite frankly."
— Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins

In fiscal year 1998, the school department spent $122,000 on maintenance and more than $300,000 on custodians, according to figures provided by school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. The $122,000 spent on maintenance was well over $95,300 budgeted for maintenance that year.

In fiscal year 1999, the school department spent only $76,000 of a budgeted $112,000 on maintenance due to costs incurred in funding special education.

The budget for school maintenance in fiscal year 2000 is $105,000. According to Haddad, that money will be transferred to the Department of Public Works (DPW) budget in fiscal year 2001. The DPW will then be responsible for the day-to-day maintenance of the town's three school buildings.

Haddad is currently drafting a bid document to secure an outside company to perform the daily custodial work at the town's schools. He said he would ask that company to hire the current custodians.

"Right now, we have 10 custodial positions," Haddad said. "We would eliminate those jobs, but ask the contractor to give our current custodians the right of first refusal. We'll be bidding out our cleaning service, but whatever company is hired will be directly responsible to the superintendent."

Haddad said he would like to add some of the current custodians to the town payroll.

"I'd like to hire three of the current custodians to the DPW. Those three people will primarily concentrate on the maintenance of the schools, such as painting and replacing light bulbs. We'll also be eliminating seven benefit positions because the other custodians will no longer be employees of the town."

By the time the town would take over maintenance of the schools, Malvey hopes to have maintenance plans in place for each town school. As part of the application process for state reimbursement for renovations to Deer Hill and the middle-high school, the school department will have to submit a preventive maintenance plan. Such a requirement was not part of the state funding process for the Osgood school.

"We have pieces of a maintenance plan for Osgood, and we're working to make it a comprehensive, five-year plan," Malvey said. "When Osgood came on-line several years ago, the state requirements for maintenance plans were not yet in place."

Haddad said the proposed arrangement for cleaning and maintaining the schools will allow those plans to be carried out more successfully.

"We'll have better resources to deal with maintenance," he said. "We'll have people whose primary focus is the maintenance of the school buildings. In addition, 10 custodians probably isn't enough for three schools. By subbing out the custodial work, we're likely to get more custodians into the schools."

Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins said accountability is his chief concern regarding the maintenance of the schools.

"My concern is that someone be absolutely responsible for making sure things get done at the appropriate times," he said. "We don't have that person right now, quite frankly."

Cantwell makes senate bid official

Will seek Hedlund's seat

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Marshfield native James "Jim" Cantwell is officially throwing his hat into the ring for the Democratic nomination for state Sen. Robert Hedlund's seat.

To that end, Cantwell will host a campaign kickoff celebration from 7 to 10 p.m., Dec. 2 at the Weymouth Elks Hall.

The 33-year-old attorney and new father of a baby boy recently moved from his hometown of Marshfield to Weymouth — with the biggest population in the eight-town district — to shave some time off his wife Jennifer's commute to Waltham where she works as a regional sales representative for Cellular One.

"We both love the South Shore," said Cantwell, who recently left his job as an aide to Congressman William Delahunt to join the legal firm of Billingham and Marzelli in Marshfield.

That love and his hankering to jump into the political arena helped the couple make the decision not to relocate to Washington, DC this year where Cantwell would have served as a judicial aide to Delahunt.

And Delahunt isn't the only familiar Democratic name that the former Marshfield selectman has in his repertoire.

In his days at Marshfield High School in the early 1980s, Cantwell got his first taste of politics when he helped distribute leaflets door-to-door to spread the word about a developer that was using piping material made out of potentially cancer-causing material. Through that effort, he met Hedlund's predecessor, William Golden, an attorney who was helping the cause, who later went on to serve as state senator for the Plymouth-Norfolk district — the same district that Cantwell now hopes to represent.

Cantwell subsequently volunteered on Golden's campaigns and served as an aide in Golden's office after graduating from Boston College in 1988 and before starting law school.

Cantwell also served as an aide to state Sen. Brian McDonald who unseated Hedlund in 1992, but lost to him in a 1994 rematch.

Cantwell has always had politics in his blood. His parents were active in the Marshfield Democratic Town Committee and by tagging along to meetings, Cantwell — the youngest of four children — learned about how government could help people.

"I learned early on how people can make a difference," Cantwell recalled.

His years as a legislative aide on both the state and national level, his term as a Marshfield selectman, service on the conservation commission, work as an assistant Norfolk County District attorney, and efforts with several nonprofit organizations — add up to valuable experience for a prospective state senator, Cantwell said.

"Our region is facing tremendous challenges to our quality of life," he said. "We need a state senator who is engaged, energized and has the experience to help our communities address these challenges."

Cantwell sees planning as one of the biggest challenges facing the district and wants the region to be able to tap into federal incentive grants to help it come to grips with rapid growth.

"The money is going to go to the regions with the best representation," he said.

While he won't be pigeonholed as "pro- or anti-Greenbush," Cantwell said he wouldn't support the train unless it goes hand in hand with extensive mitigation measures, like the tunnel under Hingham Square. He has thus far been discouraged with the MBTA's report card on mitigation efforts with the various towns in the Greenbush corridor that encompasses the entire senatorial district.

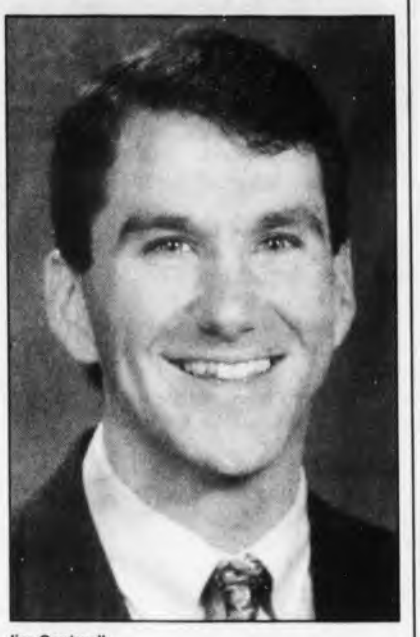
"Our region is facing tremendous challenges to our quality of life. We need a state senator who is engaged, energized and has the experience to help our communities address these challenges."
— Jim Cantwell

"The senator needs to get the attention of the MBTA saying 'we're not accepting this line unless it's done properly,'" he said.

Cantwell also said redevelopment of the former Weymouth Naval Air Station must come with transportation improvements that include an independent connector road and widening of Route 3 to provide relief from traffic gridlock.

If elected, Cantwell said he would work to ensure that the state continues to pay for its initiatives under the Education Reform Act, promotes school safety, and picks up the tab for special education.

Health care is another priority for Cantwell who points out that that the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association with a 70-year tradition was almost driven out of business through cuts from the federal Balanced Budget Act of 1997. While the Norwell VNA held on, other VNAs did not. He would work to reverse that trend.



Jim Cantwell

"Every study shows, it's more cost effective to care for a person in their own home rather than in an institutional setting," Cantwell said.

Cantwell said a theme of his campaign is to ensure that citizens have "affordable, accessible and quality healthcare." If elected he would also urge the state to conduct hearings on why prescription drugs cost so much — a factor that is forcing many senior citizens to choose between food or the rent and the medication they need.

Before Cantwell can face Hedlund next November, he must first beat potential challengers in the September Democratic primary that could include Phil Edmundson and Timothy White, both of Hingham, and Ted LeClair of Marshfield.

Cantwell said if elected he would step down from his law firm work and focus his effort full time on serving the district that stretches from Weymouth to Duxbury.

Cantwell's committee is hosting a kickoff fundraiser from 7-10 p.m., Dec. 2 at the Weymouth Elks Hall, 1197 Washington St. Suggested donation is $15. For more information, call Kathy Norman, 749-0573, Margy Charles, 383-0916 or Tony Dougenik, 545-5497.

Absentee ballots for Special Town Election

Absentee ballots for the Special Town Election, Dec. 11, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, Dec. 10, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons: absence from the town during the hours the polls are open; physical disability; or religious beliefs which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Dec. 11 to be counted.

Citizen of year nominations open

In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1999 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 7. Please see the nomination form on page 15. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the 1999 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January 2000.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

AROUND TOWN

WELCOME TO THE WORLD

Let's start the week by giving a huge welcome to Parker John Ryan, the son of Lisa and John Ryan of Scituate — Parker was born Oct. 6 at 1:52 p.m. and weighed 10 pounds, 4 ounces, 21" long!

Parker is certainly a lucky little boy. He has a big sister Madeline; his maternal grandparents are Judy and Stephen Ward of Cohasset; and his paternal grandmother is Dorothy A. Ryan of Scituate. Parker also is blessed with having a great grandmother Norma Parker Young, formerly of Scituate, now residing in Cohasset

That's one bouncing baby boy that will truly have a lot of loving!

Congratulations to you all!

A FINE LADY

From good news to sad news, we were all distressed to learn of the passing of Ann Leonard, one of Cohasset's finest ladies and a true legend! You name the task and Ann was there to do it! I remember all of the times her daughters would call of her latest feats in the Olympics. She was a star! If there was a fundraiser or charity event that she could help with, she did!!

Ann was always seen walking around town but you never saw her with all of the medals she won throughout all of her years in the Senior Olympics (she had so many it would have been tough for her to walk very far!).

Ann was Cohasset's "bright light" and we will all miss her beautiful smile and sparkling personality! Our love and respects go to her family and friends!

WILLIAM SMITH COLLEGE

Cornelia B. Wakeman from Cohasset has been enrolled in William Smith College as a member of the Class of 2003. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wakeman. You can be sure they will be making a lot of trips to Geneva New York, she will always be a true star!

AP SCHOLAR

Benjamin T. Smoot of Cohasset, a 1999 graduate of Boston College High School, has been named an AP Scholar with Distinction by the College Board in recognition of his exceptional achievement on the College-Level Advanced Placement (AP) Examinations. Approximately 23 percent of America's graduating seniors have taken one or more AP examinations. Only about 13 percent of the more than 700,000 students who took AP examinations in May, 1999 performed at a sufficiently high level to merit the designation "Scholar" and we are very proud of you Benjamin!

SHOPPING IDEA

Polly Logan has a suggestion for you for all of your holiday shopping. Go to the Cohasset Consignment Shop! Located in Tedeschi Plaza, you can find almost anything there that you will need for the event of your choice!

For instance, you can find a fur coat (mink, raccoon, coyote; and also a versatile choice trotter or stroller jacket). There is even a white faux jacket, all great for holidays and cold weather — plus, there are beautiful clothes of every size and description. The collection of platters, serving dishes, silver trays, candle sticks, crystal — the list goes on and on!

So go see for yourself and find your very own treasure to either give or keep for yourself!

OLD FRIENDS

Although the occasion was a sad one, it was so nice to see Ruthanne, Randy and Ralph Feola. It had been a long time since their return to Cohasset from various parts of the country and all loved to see Cohasset again. It's amazing how you can still go around town and point out all of the old haunts and fellow classmates' homes!

Once again, our sympathies are with you all, and we hope your hearts will mend soon!

CELEBRATING 175 YEARS

November 21 marked a very special day for the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset. They celebrated 175 years! The church was founded Nov. 24, 1824!

The occasion was marked with a special service, and most in attendance dressed the part as though they were attending at that time

A celebration indeed, and a memorable one for all of those that donned their duds as well!

JINGLE BELL WALK

We have been asked to remind you of the Jingle Bell Walk which will be held Nov. 26 beginning at 2 p.m. when Santa and his elves arrive by boat at Cohasset Harbor. The kiddos love the whole thing, from his arrival to his elves, to the walk to the South Shore Community Center. At the center there are cookies, a beverage and a holiday sing-along (Santa will be there to have pictures taken).

Then at 3 p.m. there is the "Turkey Tot Trot" for ages 3-10. During all of this you can listen to the bells of St. Stephen's (you can enjoy them while on a hayride from 3-4 p.m.). At 4 p.m. gather around the common to listen to the Rusty Skippers Marching Band; lastly the tree will be lit at 4 p.m. It is such a good event for the kiddos and adults alike, don't miss it!

Please don't forget to give me a call with all of your latest news. 'Tis the season for lots of it!! Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street or faxed to 741-2931, attn. Sallyann.

Stop by for baked goods, fancy work, gift items, children's games and a white elephant table.

TAKING STOCK

As their name implies, stock cabinets are shelved in the manufacturer's warehouse and ready for delivery. This is possible because they are constructed according to predefined standards and specifications. Generally, stock cabinet widths begin at 9 inches and increase in 3-inch increments to 48 inches. Although this represents a fairly wide range of choices, it does not make custom widths available to consumers. Semi-custom cabinets are built when the order is received, using the same wood stock, allowing for more consistent color and grain. Although these cabinets are made in the same 3-inch increments, modifications can be made for a slight upcharge.

Are you satisfied with the look and functionality of your kitchen? At THE DESIGNING WOMAN, we believe that the warmth and charm of a kitchen are built upon the personal tastes of each client. Our goal is to work with you to create a thoughtful and individualized design plan, and coordinate colors, patterns and fabrics. We order the materials needed and coordinate the work of craftsmen. Call us at 383-6411 to learn more about our services or to arrange a convenient consultation.

Hint: Stock cabinets and semi-custom cabinets are delivered boxed and installed on site.

Hurrah for the holidays

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Traditions are never more apparent than during the holidays when friends and family gather to celebrate! It's the time of year when we like to do nice things for those we love! Which always seems to go with preparing a special dish and expressing our hospitality and kindness with food. If you would like to try a special treat and you have an oyster-loving crew in your family this is perfect for you! Even if they aren't really fond of oysters, don't even tell the truth — don't say oysters just say patty shells with a yummy filling! We only get oysters on "o-months" so please take advantage and try this recipe!!

OYSTERS IN PATTY SHELLS

1 tablespoon butter, melted
1 (12-oz) container fresh oysters, drained
1-1/2 cups chopped celery
1 pound fresh mushrooms, chopped
1/2 cup minced fresh parsley
4 green onions with tops, chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
1/2 teaspoon dried whole thyme
1/4 teaspoon coarsely ground pepper
1/8 teaspoon red pepper
1 can cream of mushroom soup, undiluted
2 (10-ounce) packages frozen patty shells baked

Combine butter and oysters in skillet; cook over low heat 2 minutes. Add celery, mushrooms, parsley, onions and garlic, and cook over medium heat until celery is crisp-tender; drain. Stir in seasonings and soup; cook until just thoroughly heated. Spoon into patty shells. Serve immediately.

Should serve 12 but I guarantee everyone will want more than one!

Take advantage of the "o month," and serve these oysters as often as you can! In fact, try them first, then oring them to your table as a first course — YOU WILL BE GLAD!!

Secret Room at the Village Fair

On Dec. 4, 10 a.m., at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, the doors will open again to the Secret Room, a special feature of the Cohasset Village Fair for more than 20 years. The annual fair is a collaboration of local churches and youth groups.

"Well over a thousand Christmas gifts are selected from the Secret Room by children from ages 2 to 12. They choose presents for their parents, siblings, friends and grandparents," says Pat Baird, chairman of the event, sponsored by the Appalachia Service Project, a Second Congregational Church youth program for community teenagers. The teenagers serve as "personal shoppers" helping the youngsters select gifts that cost between 50 cents and $2.

Children arrive at the door with their parents, and they are invited to make a list of all the people for whom the child wants to buy presents. When their turn comes, they leave their parents, and with their ASP helper, make their selections. They'll choose from paper airplanes, Guatemalan scrunchies, key chains, yo-yos, inexpensive jewelry, rubber duckies, balls, magnetic games and more.

"This year there will be a few $2 gifts," Baird says "but they are mostly less. We keep the prices down so everyone can buy gifts. The best part is watching the teenagers. They put in an enormous amount of work, and they are so tender when they interact with the little shoppers. It almost makes you teary to watch them." Nearly all of the more than 100 ASP youths participate in the fair in shifts of 15 or so at a time.

Once the gifts are selected, the teenager takes the shopper to the cashier, and then to the wrapping table where each gift is wrapped and tagged, so it's ready for Christmas. Then the child is returned to their waiting parent.

ASP also sponsors Santa on the common, an annual photo opportunity young families won't want to miss.

In addition to these events, First Parish Youth Group will sell first-quality Poinsettias. Look for fresh, fragrant Christmas trees (from First Parish) and artful boxwood trees and wreaths (from the Greek Orthodox Church, whose fair location will be Town Hall).

St. Stephen's annual book sale will include CD's and videos, and live piano music played throughout the fair. A general store will feature baked goods, homemade candy, and an herbal pantry.

Second Congregational Church will sponsor a handcraft boutique as well as a spot to enjoy New England clam chowder, more baked goods or even a grilled cheese sandwich.

Parishioners of the Nativity Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church will be offering Greek pastries, jewelry and a white elephant booth at their town hall location, in addition to the boxwood items.

You'll find the aromatic favorite Swedish Coffee Shop and the funky annual Jumble Sale at First Parish, while town criers roam the common to remind you of all that's available. So, don't start your shopping yet. Wait for the bargains at the Village Town Fair to check off all the names on your list.

Santa's helper Joe Nicynski helps a young shopper chose the perfect gift at last year's Village Fair.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

A light in a time of crisis

It's hard to imagine there's a homeless crisis reaching record proportions. Most of us our fortunate enough that we can't fathom how bad it is out there.

We see the trophy houses, or McMansions, going up in record numbers. We can't travel along any main street or back road in South Shore towns and not be witness to the booming economy and its rewards: bigger and better SUVs lining driveways; home remodeling efforts to keep up with the Joneses; and major overhauls in our schools to accommodate the growing demands of families attracted to the 'burbs.

But talk to homeless advocates and providers and you get a different message. There is a serious problem and it's only getting worse.

Nearly every shelter serving the South Shore, from Quincy to Plymouth, is at full capacity every night. It is the first time in the history of Fr. Bill's Place in Quincy that the shelter has been overbooked every night for the last 12 months.

The high cost of rentals, spurred by the robust economy, and lack of funding for state programs forcing people off welfare and out of DYS programs are said to be the leading causes of the dramatic increase in homeless individuals and families. Talk to the advocates and providers and they'll tell you the situation has reached epic proportions. And some alarming statistics support their claims.

"It's scary, I don't know what we are going to do," notes one provider on the South Shore. "We are in dire need of finding solutions."

Helping with those solutions is what Community Newspaper Company's Gifts of Hope campaign is all about.

This holiday season most of us will be fortunate enough to have as our biggest worry whether we get that Pokémon our child or grandchild is looking for, or if we can stand to sit through another year of Aunt Betty telling her tired, same old stories. The majority of us won't be concerned about whether we have enough beds to house everyone seeking relief from the cold or adequate funding to keep the shelter open another month.

Those are the real concerns at Fr. Bill's Place, at Carolina Hill in Marshfield and for the South Shore Friends of the Homeless. This holiday season, our Gifts of Hope campaign will, in some small way, seek to help these organizations. Each week through Christmas we will be writing stories and asking our readers to contribute whatever they can to help assist the organizations in their very worthwhile endeavors.

All three of the charities selected are grassroots organizations whose efforts are felt and seen right here on the South Shore, whether it's assisting an individual or an entire family. Through our stories we hope you will see just how valuable their work is and how you can play a vital role in the effort.

To donate to the Gifts of Hope campaign, send your tax-deductible check, made out to one of the three charities noted above, and send to Anne Rodwell, CNC, 165 Enterprise Drive, Marshfield, MA. 02050. We will be running a list of donors in the newspaper so please indicate on a note if you wish to remain anonymous.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Jimmy Fund support is appreciated

To the Editor:

This is a special note to thank the community of Cohasset, the staff and vendors of the Cohasset Stop & Shop, and the Stop & Shop Supermarket Company for raising a record $1,687,701.50 for the Jimmy Fund through the ninth annual Stop & Shop/Boston Red Sox Triple Winner Program.

These funds support important cancer research at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and provide funding for the nationally recognized Stop & Shop Family Pediatric Brain Tumor Clinic, located in the Jimmy Fund Clinic. As we approach a greater understanding of cancer and its causes, this kind of private support aids dramatically in the efforts to find a cure for this dreaded disease.

With the completion of this year s Triple Winner Program, the total amount raised for the Jimmy Fund since 1990 by Stop & Shop has exceeded $10 million. We encourage Stop & Shop customers to join us in recognizing the support of the Stop & Shop Supermarket Company and thanking them for contributing so generously to the search for a cure for cancer.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' and senators' votes on seven roll calls from the week of November 15-19.
SMOKING CESSATION FUNDS(H 4900) House 132-26, Senate 32-5, overrode Governor Cellucci's $10 million veto reduction, from $22.8 million to $12.8 million, for the expansion of smoking prevention and cessation programs to be funded by the state's settlement from lawsuits against the tobacco companies. Override supporters said these programs have been successful and argued the additional money will reduce smoking and save countless lives. Override opponents said the $10 million is only part of a huge $90 million program which has excessive funding and often wastes money on unproductive things like newspaper ads which have no effect on smoking. They argued that all the tobacco settlement money should go into a trust fund and the interest should be used to fund programs well into the future. (A "Yea" vote is for the $10 million. A "Nay" vote is against it).	N	N
$25 SPEEDING SURCHARGE(H 4900) House 141-17, Senate 27-10, overrode the governor's veto of a new $25 surcharge on drivers convicted of speeding. The $25 will go to into a fund to develop and maintain residential and non-residential rehabilitation services for people suffering from head injuries. Override supporters said there is a shortage of housing and services for these victims and argued the surcharge is justified since speeders often cause head injuries. Override opponents said they support the increased services but said the funds should come from the general fund and not a surcharge which is a hidden tax. (A "Yea" vote is for the $25 surcharge. A "Nay" vote is against it).	N	Y
$93.9 MILLION EDUCATION AID(H 4900) House 158-0, Senate 38-0, overrode the governor's veto of $93.9 million in eduation aid to cities and towns. Override supporters said the money is desperately needed by local communities and will help children across the state get a better education. Governor Cellucci said that without the $93.9 million, the budget still increases education spending by eight percent. He noted he did not want to expand education funding beyond a level that can be sustained in future years. (A "Yea" vote is for the education funding).	Y	Y
FORMAL SESSIONS BEYOND NOVEMBER 17 House 116-43, refused to discharge onto the House floor for consideration an order allowing the legislature to meet in formal sesssion after November 17 to consider the governor's budget vetoes. Current rules require the legislature to conclude its formal business by November 17. Supporters said it will be difficult to act on all of the governor's budget vetoes by November 17. Opponents said it is premature to adopt the extension and noted the governor may file the vetoes in time for the legislature to act on them by November 17. In the end, the legislature did not act upon all the vetoes by November 17 and the ones not acted upon remain vetoed. (A "Yea" vote is for bringing the extension order to the House floor for a vote. A "Nay" vote is agaisnt bringing it to the floor).		N
POSTPONE GOVERNOR'S PAY RAISE(H 4882) House 127-31, refused to postpone until January 5 further action on a bill raising the governor's salary from $90,000 to $135,000. The measure also hikes the pay of the lieutenant governor, secretary of state, treasurer and auditor from $75,000 to $120,000 while the attorney general's pay would climb from $80,000 to $125,000. The legislation includes an "emergency preamble" which makes the hikes effective immediately instead of in 90 days. The preamble states the bill is an emergency law "necessary for the immediate preservation of the public convenience." Postponement supporters said it is outrageous that an emergency pay hike is being given to the governor and others when the chief executive just vetoed millions of dollars in funding for education, the homeless and the mentally retarded. Postponement opponents said the legitimate and long overdue pay hikes should not be delayed because of the grandstanding of some legislators who are improperly making a connection between the hikes and the vetoes. The House okayed the bill on a voice vote, without a roll call, and sent it to the Senate. (A "Yea" vote is for postponing consideration of the hikes until January 5. A "Nay" vote is against postponement).		Y
BEYOND 10 P.M. House 134-24, suspended rules to allow the House session to continue in session beyond 10 p.m. Supporters said the House should remain in session to continue to act on the governor's vetoes because the rules prohibit any action on the vetoes after midnight. Opponents said it is irresponsible to meet after 10 p.m. when legislators are tired and taxpayers are asleep. (A "Yea" vote is for continuing the session beyond 10 p.m. A "Nay" vote is against continuing the session beyond 10 p.m.).		Y
DEATH PENALTY(H 3963) Senate 21-16, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill allowing the imposition of the death penalty in dozens of cases of first degree murder incldiuing murder of a police officer, firefighter, judge or juror; murder during rape, arson or armed robbery; and murder in front of a family member. Supporters said the death penalty ensures that justice is served and guarantees that these murderers will never kill again. Opponents said the state has no right to take a life and noted the death penalty discrimintes against minorities and the poor and has resulted in innocent people being put to death. The House has already rejected the death penalty bill this year. (A "Yea" vote is for the death penalty. A "Nay" vote is against it).	Y
INSURANCE DISCRIMINATION(S 2043) Senate 37-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill prohibiting insurance companies from discriminating on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, marital status or natural origin. The measure also prohibits companies from using insurance tables and statistical compilations based on any of the categories. Supporters said this will put an end to this unfair policy and bring laws governing insurance into conformity with the 1976 Equal Rights Amendment. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y
HMO INSOLVENCY(H 4848) Senate 37-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the governor a bill aimed at protecting consumers in the event of the insolvency of their Health Maintenance Organization (HMO). Supporters said current law offers little protection and noted the bill allows the state to step in and ensure there is replacement coverage and that members are not billed for more than their co-pays and deductibles. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y

•What is our most important job?

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Not long ago Merle Brown and I were invited to speak on recycling to Mrs. Maureen Alcott's third graders at the Osgood School. Right at the outset we asked the class, "What do you think is our most important job as human beings?" Now this is a touchy question — one that some people might argue touches upon tender religious grounds and that perhaps should not be brought up in schools. But we had talked with Mrs. Alcott before class, and she said that the underlying mission of the Osgood School this year was to work on respect. So we knew we'd be OK.

Merle and I were overjoyed — surprised and reassured — to have Mrs. Alcott's students respond immediately with such answers as "To be nice to each other" and "To help one another." These came from out of the blue, so to speak. We had not yet entered into our tirade, so the class had not had much opportunity to do much more than to think for themselves, off the cuff.

We could not help saying that such answers showed thoughtful upbringing and a thoughtful teacher. And because we wanted to work inductively and not appear as though we had all the answers, we let this introductory question go at that for the time being.

Later after we had written "Why?" on the board — why recycle, that is — and heard the students' responses, we mentioned that "I've heard it said that our most important job as human beings is to care" without much fanfare but as transition to the Recycling Committee's motto "Cohasset Cares."

We explained the acronym, Cohasset Agrees to Recycle Everything, which the students thought was pretty neat, and then we were ready to move logically into the "What?"

We explained the acronym, Cohasset Agrees to Recycle Everything, which the students thought was pretty neat, and then we were ready to move logically into the "What?"

As easy as it was for these 8-and 9-year olds to answer our big introductory question, it was second nature for the kids to state also that our air is precious, our water supply precious, our earth precious. Just as they knew most of the things that can be recycled — amidst recounting the 10 percent recyclable lifestyles of the Arctic Eskimo and the Native American, including being thankful for their hunted game-food — they knew we had to protect what we have been freely given.

When we looked into those young people's faces, we could see why we must protect our air, our water, our earth. Have a thoughtful Thanksgiving. See you next time.

In top five for gridlock

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

If you're reading this while you're stalled in commuter traffic at the Furnace Brook Parkway entrance to the Southeast Expressway and you think things have gone from bad to worse, you're right.

Boston and vicinity is among the top five of 68 urban areas in the whole United States for commuter gridlock. And, believe me, that's not one of the requirements for Tommy Menino's "world class city."

The Texas Transportation Institute of College Station, Texas, has found that the average Boston commuter spends 66 hours a year in his car waiting for the line up ahead of him to get the lead out so he can get to his job on time.

(Except in Hingham, of course, where there are no commuters.)

"That's a work-week-and-a-half you could have spent in the Bahamas rather than in your car," said David Shrank of the Institute, who has a 15 minute commute to his job in College Station and presumably spends the difference in Nassau.

Boston and vicinity is among the top five of 68 urban areas in the whole United States for commuter gridlock.

Most critics attribute the rise in traffic congestion to what is called "suburban sprawl," which follows "urban flight," which occurs when city folks get tired of deadbolt locks on their doors and traveling in armed groups to the local 7-Eleven and opt out for the freedom and safety of the suburbs.

Unfortunately, their jobs have to stay behind in the city which means they either spend 66 hours a year locked in their cars or two and three times that many hours locked like sardines in MBTA cattle cars. Thus the term "commuter."

As previously noted, Boston is fifth of the 68 cities studied in commuter traffic woes. Last year, it was 23rd. Big improvement, eh? Not so. The Texas Transportation Institute changed the rules of the study so that Hub vice presidents can still tell the president, "I'm late because I was caught in traffic."

Traffic gridlock can lead to a newly discovered condition called "road rage," which was probably new when Caligula cut off Tiberius in his chariot on Interstate XIV between Rome and Pompeii. This according to newly discovered records in the clerk's office in the 2nd Municipal Court of Pompeii.

The Institute found top gridlock to be in Los Angeles where commuters had to wait an average of 82 hours a year to get to the studio. In Washington and suburbs, it's 76 hours, which some people might regard as progress since it has been proven that Congress can do less damage while its members are caught in traffic.

Last on the list of urban centers (?) is Brownsville, Texas, in the Rio Grande Valley next to Mexico. Drivers there spend an average of only three hours a year in gridlock. There's a reason.

The last time I was in Brownsville my car was the fourth vehicle in town - or the fifth, if you want to count the demo Edsel in the Ford showroom.

And gridlock was caused by a herd of sheep crossing the street against the lights.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Reward for information on Halloween vandals

TO THE EDITOR:

It is amazing that the reaction to the Cohasset vandalism is being downplayed by people such as the Cohasset students who now whine about a few bad kids causing others to be seen in disfavor. These same kids are also quick to point out that the aftermath was worse, as if sexually and violently offensive graffiti and unquestionably violent threats to children, citizens, and the police, deserve coddling and understanding.

One comment regarding the questioning of a policeman's description of the situation as a riot shows a learned behavior against public service people, one constantly reinforced by a community which cuts budgets and is constantly publicly putting down these people for their overtime, equipment needs or any slight error. If that student were in a car egged by an uncontrolled gang, not only would the student be horrified to be on that end of the situation, but he/she, and the parents would most likely characterize the situation in very similar terms.

Perhaps the kids ought to know that any stereotyping of them with their vandal peers is because they have chosen to hide the identities of those involved. As long as those identities are hidden, the aggressors are all of them. Neutrality and impartiality are teammates of the vandals, and perpetuators of the crimes. The kids who painted need some help, and until they get it, the community as a whole needs it, as we're all at risk.

In view of Littleton, Paduka and other cities where it was once said "it couldn't happen here," Cohasset ought to wake up, and tell these kids a bit more and listen (and read) from them a bit less. The thought that the community will have to devote resources to "baby-sitting" on Halloween next year is repugnant, and does nothing for the kids, as it only releases irresponsible parents from their responsibilities. Parents should be held accountable, too, their pictures next to that of their minor kids, such as the mother who reportedly bought vandalism supplies for her child. Social embarrassment is so much more effective than their blaming their kids, or the media, or anyone/anything else. What's her name? I want to know the mother who bought her kid vandalism supplies.

I am hereby offering a $250 reward for information leading to the apprehension of those responsible for the vandalism, (reportedly over $1800 in window glass alone) and will offer my time and support, in concert with others, to help those involved understand what their actions mean. As a resident I feel violated and threatened, and until I know who did it, and some do, there are over 100 in question. It's up to the kids to restore the community they showed so much disrespect towards, and they are still working very hard in their disrespect as long as those who threaten us remain anonymous. All information should go through the Cohasset PD.

Pictures of the vandalism are available for viewing at the Cohasset Police station.

Selectmen seek new train study

DEAR COLONEL OSTERNDORS:

In our joint opinion, there are serious unresolved conflicts between the data and conclusions reached in the state-level SDEIS prepared for this project, which is currently pending before the Corps of Engineers for environmental review. The ACOE has yet to commit to the preparation of a Federal Environmental Impact Report.

The aforementioned conflicts have been pointed out to your staff by citizens of Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate, by professional consultants retained by our respective communities, and by your own consulting firm.

Cohasset and Hingham consultants have questioned the MBTA's noise and vibration impact analyses. Independent experts and the Regional Office of Federal Environmental Protection Agency have questioned the validity of the MBTA's air-quality impact analysis. Berger Associates, an independent firm retained by the ACOE itself, was highly critical of the MBTA's ridership analysis for heavy diesel rail and for the alternatives. The Taubman Center for State and Local Government at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government has recently echoed concerns expressed in the Berger Report.

The MBTA's principal response to these critics has been to question the objectivity and veracity of any experts not on its own payroll. On more than one occasion, non-MBTA consultants — including the firm hired by the ACOE itself — appear to have been subjected to unfortunate personal and professional abuse for daring to question reports prepared by the MBTA's Sverdrup consulting firm.

Under the circumstances, we commend to you the reasonable suggestion made by the United States Environmental Protection Agency in its February 8, 1999, letter to the Army Corps of Engineers:

"It is essential to bring closure to the remaining legitimate, unresolved issues, and to do so both thoroughly and expeditiously, with adequate opportunity for public review and comment. In our judgment, the most appropriate way to meet this objective is for the Corps of Engineers, as the lead federal agency, and the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs in conjunction with the MBTA, to agree now to collaborate in preparing a joint EIS/EIR ... focused on the legitimate unresolved issues..."

We urge you, as ranking officer in the New England District, to act favorably on the recommendation of the Environmental Protection Agency, and to immediately direct that all "legitimate unresolved issues" be addressed, expeditiously and fairly, in an appropriate and necessary Federal Environmental Impact Report.

Female firefighter is town's only paramedic

rocketed as the minimal staffing has led to numerous callbacks.

Sullivan said she did not see the logic in adding four additional firefighters.

"I don't think the way to control overtime is to throw money at it," she said. "We've had an overtime problem in the fire department for years and I'm not sure that four additional firefighters will solve the problem. I don't think we have the money to risk on it."

As of this week's fire department payroll, more than $93,000 had been spent on fire department overtime this fiscal year. If the $100,000 warrant article is approved at special town meeting, Haddad said an additional $190,000 would be added to next year's budget for the four new firefighter/paramedics.

Morrison anxiously awaits their arrival and the implementation of paramedic care in Cohasset.

"Right now, we can only do basic life support, which includes CPR, first aid, splinting, and bandaging," she said. "Paramedics can administer medications, start IV's, and monitor heart rhythms in cases of cardiac arrest. A lot of the ambulance calls we get are chest pains, and paramedics can do a lot more for those people than EMTs trained in basic life support."

As it now stands, any resident of Cohasset requiring paramedic may wait for paramedics to arrive from South Shore Hospital in South Weymouth. Usually, the Cohasset ambulance will meet South Shore paramedics en route to save precious minutes. If someone in town had a heart attack, Morrison said even a short wait reduces the victim's chances of survival.

"In cases of cardiac arrest, for every minute you wait, the chances of survival decrease by 10 percent," she said. The paramedics from South Shore do a great job, but it's all about seconds."

Haddad said Cohasset's location makes it nearly impossible for South Shore paramedics to reach the town quickly enough in times of emergency.

"Cohasset is only 12 miles away from the hospital, but there is no direct highway access," he said. "You've got to go down Route 228, and that takes time."

Morrison said it is dangerous for the residents in Cohasset to rely on a lifesaving service shared by a number of towns.

"There are 12 communities served by one truck from South Shore," she said. Most towns around us have Advanced Life Support (ALS), which means paramedic care, or are close. But sometimes even towns with ALS will utilize the paramedics from South Shore. They're always on call."

If the town appropriates the funds for the four new firefighter/paramedics, calls to South Shore Hospital from Cohasset will be far less frequent. Morrison is excited about the possibility of being part of Cohasset's first paramedic unit.

"I've always loved ALS," said Morrison, a native of Pembroke who has been with the Cohasset fire department since January. "I became an EMT in 1988, and got my medic's license in 1995. I've also always had an interest in fire services. When the opening was available in January, I was extremely excited. This is what I've always wanted to do, ever since I was a little kid."

She said being the only female in the department has been a non-issue.

"I knew going into this that the firefighting is a predominantly male field," she said. "Being the only woman doesn't bother me. I've never had a problem with anyone. And it's not like I'm the only female in any fire department. There are two in Scituate and two in Marshfield as well. I'm just the only female in the fire department in this town."

While she may be the only female in the fire department, Haddad hopes she will soon lose her status as the department's lone paramedic.

"My goal, through attrition, is to eventually have eight paramedics," he said. "Once someone retires, I'll hire a paramedic in his place."

Morrison hoped the citizens of Cohasset understand the importance of establishing paramedic care in their town.

"I certainly hope we can get this message across to the people of the town," she said. "If it were my mother or father who had a heart attack, I'd want to have paramedic service."

Offering hope and shelter to homeless

Newspaper Company's Gifts of Hope campaign on the South Shore comes in. With the help of our readers, we are attempting to raise awareness about the plight of the homeless on the South Shore and some needed funds to help the cause in some small way. Each week through Christmas we will focus a front page story on what the homeless are up against, their struggle to find housing and the hope they cling to.

Proceeds from money raised will benefit three South Shore causes: Fr. Bill's Place in Quincy; Carolina Hill in Marshfield; and the South Shore Friends of the Homeless.

Homelessness knows no economic or social boundaries.

That's why the South Shore Friends of the Homeless, which has served more than 400 families, plays an important role in the lives of many individuals from a variety of backgrounds who are in need of housing and moral support.

SSFH has a number of local shelters, and some South Shore families participate in the organization's "homeshare program," providing temporary housing for those in need. In the past, a number of Hingham families have helped out in this way.

In May, 1998, the "Faith Place and Sheltering Home" opened its doors within the Faith Church of the Nazarene on Thaxter Street in Hingham.. The shelter has hosted six families since it opened and is currently serving two.

There are other shelters in North Weymouth, Quincy and Holbrook, and a number of host families in Dedham and Quincy. In Cohasset, the First Parish house provides temporary housing for the homeless.

"We're always looking for host families in Hingham, Cohasset and other communities," said SSFH director Dorothy Newell. "There's no better way to find support than from another family."

The Thaxter Street location provides the kind of environment SSFH aims to put families into because it offers a neighborhood setting close to public transportation and shopping.

"There's been a lot of loving support from the neighbors and church folks," said Newell. "Hingham residents have been wonderful supporters of our programs over the years."

"It's important to have shelters, because domestic violence, high rents and substance abuse are affecting families. It doesn't matter where you come from," said Newell. "The need is greater now than ever before. All our shelters are full."

And they're filling up with younger and younger people. According to Fr. Bill's Yazwinski, he is seeing teenagers in search of shelter more and more. He said there has been a "huge increase" in 18 to 24-year-olds who find themselves out on the street.

Many of them have "graduated" from the state Department of Youth Services programs or are being discharged from foster facilities.

"They just don't know where to go," he said with concern. "They don't have the resources, and in many cases, the training or life skills to get them on the right track. Their needs are ever increasing."

Couple that need with shoestring budgets and lack of appropriate staffing, and you have a difficult situation to overcome, Yazwinski said. "I've got staff people working with 30 people at a time. It's a real challenge right now. It's like I have never seen before and I don't see any relief in sight."

To donate to the Gifts of Hope campaign, send your tax-deductible check, made out to one of the three charities noted above, and send to Anne Rodwell, CNC, 165 Enterprise Drive, Marshfield, MA. 02050. We will be running a list of donors in the newspaper so please indicate on a note if you wish to remain anonymous.

GIFTS of HOPE

Those in need are closer than you think.
Your gift of hope can help.
As the economy continues to rise in the Boston area, unfortunately the number of people in need does too. Many people are looking for ways to help, but don't know how. Community Newspaper Company's Gifts of Hope can help you reach those in need in your area.
For the past seven years, readers' Gifts of Hope donations have fed local hungry families, sheltered local homeless people and brought joy to the faces of young children right in the Boston area. Another season is upon us. And more people need your help.
Please join the Cohasset Mariner and Community Newspaper Company in giving the greatest gift of all – the gift of hope. A donation of any size goes a long way in helping those in need. Here is some helpful information in planning your gift:

Harbor Walkway project wins award

Named best Coastal Access Grant project

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF) would be justified in adding the words "Award-Winning" to its already lengthy moniker.

The VRTF submitted a grant proposal in 1998 to the Department of Environmental Management's (DEM) Coastal Access Grant program. The grant was awarded and funded conceptual drawings for the VRTF's vision of a Harbor Walkway.

The proposal also won an award as the best Coastal Access Grant project of 1998.

"Last year, we received 32 proposals and funded 23 of them," said DEM coastal access planner Geordie Vining. "Cohasset's was the best of the 23 that were funded. We look at innovation, community support generated for the project, overall quality, and an ability to leverage other funding. Cohasset met or exceeded all of the criteria. It's proposal was head and shoulders above the rest."

The walkway is designed to begin at the Hagerty property and connect to Government Island. It will then head along Border Street to Veterans Memorial Park. From there, a floated boardwalk is to go behind Kimball's to Wheelwright Landing.

VRTF chairman Dean Rizzo said the award could be the impetus for learning about and receiving future grants.

"We've been able to establish a pretty solid track record with our grant applications," he said. "This will help us to get a reputation as a community that puts grant money to good use. There are a tremendous amount of opportunities out there, but it's not easy to find them. Hopefully, this will have a snowball effect and we'll learn of more programs."

> "Cohasset's proposal was head and shoulders above the rest."
> — DEM coastal access planner Geordie Vining

The Harbor Walkway is designed to attract tourists by making the area around the harbor more pedestrian-friendly. Architect Jim Shipsky designed three different visions of the walkway, from a basic, inexpensive version to an elaborate version, complete with red brick sidewalks and custom-designed lampposts.

"We would not have won the award without the wonderful work Jim did," Rizzo said. "He went above and beyond what we asked of him."

Rizzo said having three different concepts of the project in hand will allow town boards to see will give town boards more options to choose from when considering the project.

"We're giving our report to the selectmen and other town boards to gather their feeling on the project," he said. "We've got three different estimates for the cost of the project. The lowest is $300,000, the mid-range is $2.5 million, and the most expensive is $5.5 million."

Vining said the project met the DEM's primary objective of providing access to the town's coastline, while also making it attractive to those living in the area.

"We're in our sixth year of providing small-scale grants to communities who provide coastal access," he said. "We budget $100,000 a year for small planning projects. Cohasset's project was great because it established a clear-eyed vision of public coastal access to enhance the harbor and tie in with the village. It has tangible benefits for pretty much everyone involved."

The VRTF received another $5,000 grant from DEM in 1999. Coupled with Peter Roy's private contribution of $3,500, the money allowed engineers to further the work done by Shipsky with the first grant.

"Our contracted firm, Coast Line Engineering, really took the conceptuals to the next level," Rizzo said. "They did a feasibility study, drawings, and cost estimates.

If selectmen and other town groups show interest in the project, Rizzo said a number of grant opportunities exist that could help fund construction of the Harbor Walkway.

"We have private interests willing to help out and there are a number of state programs that could match Cohasset dollar for dollar," he said. "I'm not sure of the specific amount that they will fund, but it's something we'll definitely look into if the town shows interest.

The Harbor Walkway will attract tourists by making the area around the harbor more pedestrian- friendly. Here is a rendering of the walkway designed by local architect Jim Shipsky.

LIBRARY CORNER

About the Friends

As the millennium approaches, the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library look forward to an exciting new year. It has been a productive year of service to Cohasset with our recent fund drive, the annual book sale and a host of other programs the Friends have provided to enrich the library and the community.

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library was founded in 1968 as an organization of volunteers who gave many hours of help to the library, delivering books to nursing homes and shut-ins, sponsoring programs at the library, organizing book sales, purchasing books and furnishings for the library, and improving communications between the library and the community.

The Friends have since expanded their role in the community and have provided passes to numerous museums including the Science Museum, the Museum of Fine Arts, the Kennedy Library, Plimoth Plantation, and more.

This year the Children's Room was outfitted with a new computer and printer. Support continued for the children of Cohasset with a party in conjunction with the Cohasset Drama Club in this year's production of "Anne of Green Gables," complete with cast members. The summer program, "reading/puzzles" led by Deer Hill librarian, Marge Murphy, continued with the Friends' support.

Art exhibits, through the joint efforts of the South Shore Art Center, continue to enrich the library on a monthly basis. It is a wonderful opportunity for all to view the artist at leisure and for young and old to have exposure to a "gallery" setting each month.

The goal of the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library remains to support and enhance library services. With the prospect of an exciting new library, we look to new membership and welcome anyone who would like to become a part of the Friends. Please call the library if you are interested in a volunteer role with the Friends, at 383-1348.

Skippers prepare for Hull

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High football coach Tony Rolfe has heard all the nightmarish stories of playing at Hull High on Thanksgiving Day. A cold, wet and windy day on any field is tough enough, but played on Hull Gut the conditions are multiplied tenfold.

Rolfe, though, expects the biggest challenge to come from the Pirates, who head into Thursday's annual contest fully prepared to defend their home turf and end a frustrating 1-7-1 season on a high note. Hull head coach John Anderson had the Pirates right back on the practice field following the team's loss to Norton.

"It's a home game for them and they're going to come out flying," said Rolfe, whose team is looking to garner win No. 4 on the season. "We want to establish ourselves early. I'm sure John wants to do that too."

Then there's the defeat Hull suffered last Thanksgiving, ending an eight-year victory run. The Pirates haven't forgotten about the loss and are very much looking forward to get back on the winning side in front of their hometown fans.

"It's a one-game season," said Anderson. "The days of us just going out and winning on Thanksgiving are gone. We have to play with emotion. If we come out flat, they'll beat us. They played better than we did last year. Cohasset beat us fair and square."

How each team establishes itself relies very much on the weather, particularly the wind. If the wind is howling, look for both teams to stay mainly with its strong running attack. The Skippers have the advantage with Dan Trowers in their backfield. Anderson calls Trowers the "best back in the league," and a player who must be contained by the Pirates.

Cohasset captains Liam O'Donnell and Craig Parker are ready for Hull.

Hull counters with an attack that includes backs Steve Glavin, Dave Gibbons and Matt Frazier. Quarterback Rob Scully can throw and is especially dangerous when forced out of the pocket.

The Skippers' quarterback, Jason Brown, has matured over the season. He picked apart the Hanover secondary in a Skipper loss, throwing for a pair of touchdowns and having one called back because of a holding call.

"Unlike previous years, I think Hull will throw the ball too," said Rolfe. "We have to play better defense than we have."

Senior two-way tackle Greg Parker has anchored the Cohasset line on both sides of the ball and will have to be contained by the Pirates if they plan to execute their game plan.

Hull, too, will have its hands full with Trowers, who can break a game open at any time with his quick moves to the hole and breakaway speed.

Rolfe is looking to lineman Joe Carbone as the player on the Cohasset line able to open holes consistently.

"We need Joe to step up in this game," Rolfe said. "We need to give Daniel a chance to run the ball."

Senior defensive lineman Liam O'Donnell and defensive back/wide receiver Kevin Andrews should play big roles on the field in their last game for the Skippers.

Rolfe said the team has looked sharp in practice and will be ready for, what he believes, will be a very difficult game against the Pirates. He knows Hull is better than its one-win record indicates, having played several tough non-league opponents. Like Cohasset, the Pirates didn't shy away from any competition this season.

"We've crossed every T and dotted every I," said Rolfe. "This game kind of sets the table for next season."

Ready to rock

Game time: Cohasset at Hull, Thanksgiving Day at 10 a.m. at Hull High.

Records: Cohasset is 3-6 overall and 1-4 in the South Shore League, while the Pirates are 1-7-1 overall and 0-4-1 in the league.

By the numbers: The Skippers scored 144 points while yielding 212. Hull put up 69 points and allowed 151.

History: Hull leads the series 8-4. Cohasset actually won the first three games, then lost eight in a row. The Skippers ended the losing streak last year.

Who to watch: Daniel Trowers has been sensational all year long for the Skippers. The junior running back has already gone over the 1,500 yard mark and given opposing coaches fits all year long.

Despite coming off of a 19-14 loss to Hanover, Cohasset feels good about the way it is playing. Quaterback Jason Brown was solid, throwing for a pair of touchdowns, while having a third one called back.

A plethora of blockers protect Trowers and Brown, including sophomores Will Prendergast and Jari Martin, juniors Chris Golden, Jeff Scribner, Brian Krupczak, and Craig Davis, and seniors Joe Carbone and co-captain Craig Parker.

Hull has a multi-faceted rushing attack, featuring backs Steve Glavin, Dave Gibbons and Matt Frazier. Quarterback Rob Scully can throw and is especially dangerous when forced out of the pocket.

The weather could also be a big factor in the game. Hull's home field tends to be windy, which could disrupt the passing game for both teams. The Skippers seem to have the better running game and would appear to benefit from foul weather. However, with the exception of a little rain, the conditions are supposed to be fine.

Trowers leaves opponents in the dust

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Daniel Trowers. Five foot, eight inches, 165 pounds. Bench presses 220 pounds. Runs the forty yard dash in 4.6 seconds. Defenses try to bring him down but it would be easier to tackle smoke. A coach's dream? More like an opponents nightmare.

Trowers has been eluding tacklers like a pro, surpassing 1,500 yards in nine games. That is an average of over 170 yards per game. To put that in perspective for all you football prognosticators, the highest average in a season by a professional back was 132 yards per game by Eric Dickerson.

"Who wouldn't want to coach him? He's fast, he's elusive, and he's made tremendous improvements from last year."
Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe.

All year, Trowers has been banging out yards against the toughest of defenses, but his biggest accomplishment of the season came against Sandwich when Trowers rushed for an amazing 380 yards with five touchdowns.

"Every hole I hit I had room," said Trowers, who credited his success to his blockers. "Once I hit the line of scrimmage, they [the offensive line] gave me seams where I could pick up big gains."

The offensive blockers include sophomores Will Prendergast and Jari Martin, juniors Chris Golden, Jeff Scribner, Brian Krupczak, and Craig Davis, and seniors Joe Carbone and co-captain Craig Parker.

Trowers' humbleness makes him not only a good teammate, but someone who is great to coach. Coach Tony Rolfe has been working with Trowers since he came to Cohasset, and has enjoyed every bit of it.

"Who wouldn't want to coach him?" joked Rolfe. "He's fast, he's elusive, and he's made tremendous improvements from last year."

As well as being an outstanding player on the track and on the basketball court, Trowers is a great emotional leader for the football team. Trowers said that if anyone on the team makes a bad play, including himself, he does not worry about it, and let it ruin the rest of the game. He just focuses on the next play, where he can make an attempt for a big gain on the ground.

Even so, Trowers does not make many bad plays on defense or on offense. In fact, he is such a threat for a long touchdown run on every play that the coaches of some opposing teams have said they do not try to tackle Trowers so much as try to contain him.

"It is a good feeling to have that kind of respect from other coaches, and to see that my hard work has paid off," said Trowers.

Trowers leaves opponents in the dust

Cohasset had high hopes for a tremendous year from Trowers, and they got their wish. Trowers was more interested in how high he raised the bar for himself than anyone else.

"I set my own expectations at the beginning of the season," said Trowers. "I am just glad I have been able to meet them."

There is still one more task at hand this season, the annual Thanksgiving Day game, hosted by Hull.

Every year, the air between these two rivals thickens, especially this time around, coming one year after Cohasset's first Turkey Day victory in a decade.

Being the last game of the season, the records of both teams are thrown out the window. Cohasset is going to need big games from all their veterans, including Trowers.

Despite the season's record standing at 3-6, Trowers's contributions to the team have been incredible. It is exciting to anticipate what Trowers is going to accomplish when he is a senior next year.

Bus drivers needed

Morning kindergarten route lasts almost an hour

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Imagine a bus of 50 kindergarten students riding to Osgood in the morning. Fidgety and full of energy, the kids can't wait to disembark and begin the school day. Being the five year-olds they are, they have trouble sitting still for 30 seconds.

Their bus route currenly lasts an average of 55 minutes, which school superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey said is far too long for young children.

"It's been an issue with parents that we were running the A.M. kindergarten route at an hour to an hour and a half," Malvey said at Thursday's school committee meeting. "That issue is very real. We've been able to work that time down to about 55 minutes, but an hour on the bus is still not acceptable for kids that size."

School committee member Betsy Connolly said the closing of streets and rerouting of buses caused by sewer, water, and drainage projects have added to the length of bus routes.

"The amount of time these kids spend on school buses is compounded by the construction projects in town," she said.

Although Cohasset is a relatively small school district when judged against others in Massachusetts, Malvey said negotiating its streets is still no easy task.

"Event though it's a small town, there are still a lot of little nooks and crannies to get to," he said.

This winter, the school department will begin the process of bidding out its transportation service to private vendors. Depending on the quality of the bids received, the school district could either hire a private contractor or maintain its management of school transportation.

"We probably won't get going for a few weeks to a month," Malvey said. "Basically we'll put out an RFP (Request For Proposals), which is a bid document. Anyone in the transportation business can bid based on our specifications. We'll review the bids, but the school committee then has the final say. They have the right to accept or reject any bid."

The school department may expand its RFP to include field trips and athletics, but Malvey said the district's first priority is ensuring quality transportation to and from school.

In previous stints as a superintendent, Malvey used private vendors to handle school transportation

"The private vendors were more costly than having the district take care of the transportation, but it was a very positive experience," he said.

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo wondered if parents would be comfortable with new

"We are trying to do some job sharing, which hopefully will allow us to free up some of the drivers' schedules. We also have a custodian who can drive. Unfortunately, we're having to move these people around like deck chairs on the Titanic. It's a manpower issue."

School superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey faces driving their children to school.

"We're used to having drivers from Cohasset that we know," DeGiacomo said.

If a vendor were hired, the faces of Cohasset's school bus drivers may indeed be different than those parents are used to seeing. Malvey said parents would still be assured of the safety of their children, however.

"Private vendors are required to conduct criminal background checks of their drivers by law," he said.

One of the potential benefits of hiring a private vendor would be a guarantee of adequate transportation staffing. A lack of available bus drivers is at the crux of the school department's current transportation dilemma.

"We've advertised for drivers, but we haven't gotten any responses," Malvey said. "We have an extra bus that we could put on-line but we need drivers. We are trying to do some job sharing, which hopefully will allow us to free up some of the drivers' schedules. We also have a custodian who can drive. Unfortunately, we're having to move these people around like deck chairs on the Titanic. It's a manpower issue.."

School committee member Stephanie Noble said school districts across the country are facing similar shortages of bus drivers.

"I was reading an article in the New York Times about a lack of bus drivers nationwide," she said. "This isn't only a Cohasset problem."

Malvey said the school department conducts its own training of potential bus drivers.

"We'll pay for the training, which only takes a few weeks," he said. "All anyone has to do is call us at 383-6111. There are a set of rules and regulations you have to know, but the actual driving is the more difficult part."

After Malvey spoke of the need for additional drivers, DeGiacamo wondered aloud what would happen if all of the contracted drivers refused to work.

"Newton and Brookline used Laidlaw for its transportation and the company went on strike," he said. "What kind of language would we put into a contract with a private vendor to prevent something like that from happening here?"

Malvey said contingencies for work-stoppages are often included in transportation contracts with private vendors.

"We'd make sure we got some security," he told DeGiacomo. "You can put in conditions for alternate drivers or paybacks for the time the company was on strike."

Even if the driving were to be done by an outside contractor, Malvey said the increased growth of the town will inevitably be a burden for the school's transportation department.

"School transportation is customer-driven and the customer wants improved services," he said. "We've had requests for pick-ups from newcomers on Lamberts Lane, Rose Hill Road, Beechwood Street, and Brewster Road. We can count on getting similar requests from other people who move into town."

Crazy Shoes on display

Ms. Berkowitz's eighth grade class just finished its annual shoe art project. The students took an old pair of shoes and recreated them as something else. The shoes had to have a clever title and appear to be functional. There are crazy pairs such as "Hula Shoes," "Butterflies," and "Millennium Shoes."

The best 30 pairs are displayed at "The Shoe Market" in the Cohasset Plaza. This year, a contest is being held at the store. Customers can visit the Shoe Market and vote for the pair that they think are the most creative and the winner will receive a gift certificate for a pair of shoes. Take a stroll on down to the Shoe Market and pick the winning pair of soles!

Local student heads to Washington

Jennifer Chastain, a student at Cohasset High School will travel to our nation's capital as a participant in Presidential Classroom's Business and Government Program, a leading civic education program. The program, Feb. 12-19, gives scholars a firsthand investigation into the interplay of business and the federal government.

Joining hundreds of high school students from across the country and abroad, Jennifer will take part in seminars presented by leaders representing each branch of government, business, labor organizations, the military, media and lobbying organizations. Additionally, students are scheduled for a private tour of the White House, appointments with their senators' and representatives' offices and a visit to a foreign embassy. Also included in the program are half-day conferences hosted by businesses and government organizations in the Washington area.

Small-group workshops will focus on issues such as business and labor in US foreign policy, job security and private sector influence on media. Discussion and debate will be balanced with visits to Washington's monuments and Smithsonian museums, an evening of political satire with The Capital Steps and a commencement celebration.

Presidential Classroom calls for outstanding student leaders to become active citizens. To participate, students must be juniors or seniors in high school, hold a "B" average or higher or rank in the top-25 percent of their class and be involved in community or school co-curricular activities. Special town meeting should draw a crowd

Vote on school article tops the agenda

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

If you've cleared your calendar for Monday's special town meeting thinking you'll be able to vote on all 30 articles that night, Town Manager Mark Haddad would like you to think again.

"The special town meeting will definitely go two nights," he said. "You can take that to the bank."

With a $390,000 article on the warrant for architectural drawings for the Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle-High School renovation project, Haddad may well be a prophet. Other articles likely to generate strong opinions are a $100,000 article to fund four new firefighter/paramedics and an $8,750 article to hire a teen center coordinator.

"The special town meeting will definitely go two nights. You can take that to the bank."
Town Manager Mark Haddad

Town moderator George Marlette said the articles will be dealt with in the order they appear on the warrant. The article for school renovation drawings is the fourth on the warrant.

"I think we'll have a fairly large turnout when the special town meeting begins at 7 p.m. because people

Callahan and citizens debate zoning issues

Selectman wants to limit residential development

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

With recent buildout projections showing the possibility for explosive town growth, a number of town officials have argued for the creation of a master plan to guide Cohasset's future development.

One of those town officials is selectman Thomas Callahan, who crafted an article for Monday night's special town meeting which would increase the minimum lot dimensions in all three of the town's residential districts.

"The purpose of the article is to limit development by bringing our zoning into compliance with what is typical of suburban towns in Southeast Massachusetts," Callahan said at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting. "The driving force is the oft-stated complaint that we limit development by septic systems rather than zoning."

Callahan said future changes could result in Cohasset becoming more developable.

"This town could become more attractive by the presence of the train," he said. "The inability to put in septic systems in some places has controlled our growth, but that could change with advances in technology."

"The population of Cohasset has gone down by 106 people from 1978 to 1998. We've only had 15.1 new homes built per year during that time and have only averaged 14.4 new students entering the school system per year. That's less than one child per household. What the hell is the problem?"
— Cohasset resident Neil Murphy

Callahan's proposed article would increase the minimum frontage, width, and area of minimum lots in all three residential districts. The planning board has a similar article on the warrant which would increase only the required frontage for lots in those districts.

$222K SPED deficit revealed

Under-funded state mandate at heart of problem

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

School officials came to Tuesday's selectmen's meeting to explain a $222,000 special education deficit, one which they said will be a recurring problem until the state legislature adequately funds the programs that it mandates local schools provide.

"...we must provide a free and appropriate public education by law. If Bill Gates moved in to Cohasset, we'd have to pay if his children had special needs."
—Lynn Silva, director of student services

"We cannot factor in our financial resources in deciding what to prescribe for these children," said director of student services Lynn Silva, who oversees the school department's special education department. "The state does not fund the mandate they put forth. All of these kids have IEPs (Individualized Education Programs), which stipulate what services the Cohasset public schools must provide. By law, we can't take into account what those programs will cost."

Superintendent Edward Malvey said the state legislature will ultimately have to provide more special education funding for its cities and towns.

"Special education must be addressed at the next legislative session," he said. "It behooves all of

Waging war on homelessness

South Shore Friends works to attack area's 'horrendous' situation

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Dorothy Newell knows what being generous is all about.

She is one of those people who knows how to act on that spirit of generosity, rather than simply acknowledging the problems which she is faced with on a day to day basis.

Newell is the executive director of the Friends of the Homeless of the South Shore, a Weymouth-based organization which provides homeless people with shelter, and also sponsors other programs in order to fight what is a rapidly growing epidemic in Massachusetts — homelessness.

"The [homelessness] situation is horrendous," Newell said. "And it's only going to get worse. The cost of renting a home just jumped several hundred dollars a month. The economy has improved greatly, and for these [homeless] people, the cost of rent is out of their sights."

Newell said not only did rent costs across the Commonwealth go up, but they went up quickly. She noted in addition to the people across the state who are already homeless, there are a number of people and families who are on their way to losing their homes.

"Some families are just a few paychecks away from being homeless themselves," Newell said.

Troy Garron, a Halifax selectman, recently labeled homelessness as a "faceless" problem.

Newell agrees with him.

"Anybody can be in this position," Newell said. "It could be the family next store... it could be anyone. You can't always tell who's going to be the one. There are so many reasons why this kind of thing happens, but it could be as simple as a breadwinner in a given family getting fired or injured."

6 a.m. opening for retail stores opposed

At their Tuesday meeting, selectmen unanimously voted not to recommend a citizen's petition article which would allow retail stores in town to open at 6 a.m.

Currently, retail stores are not allowed to open at 7 a.m.

The petition was started by Tedeschi's manager Crystal Callahan, who had hoped to be able to serve commuters and other early-risers.

Stores that sell fast-foods, such as Dunkin' Donuts are allowed to be open before 7 a.m. because they deal primarily in items which are consumed either on the premises or fairly soon after.

The bylaw was put into effect to prevent grocery stores such as Shaw's and Stop & Shop from opening early, which would cause their delivery trucks to get there even earlier.

"If this 6 a.m. opening applies to Stop & Shop and Shaw's, I vote not to recommend the article," said selectman Ronnie McMorris.

Her fellow selectmen were like-minded.

"The 7 a.m. bylaw was put in place to protect the residents of Fair Oaks when Stop & Shop came in," Diane Sullivan said. "It's there for a reason."

Conservation article is endorsed

With a $10,000 article removed from the warrant for the Dec. 6 special town meeting, selectmen voted unanimously to reverse their earlier decision and recommend a $5,000 article for the town's Conservation Fund.

The $10,000 article for a feasibility study of the police station was dropped because the use of other town buildings has yet to be decided.

"At first, money was going to be very tight," said selectman Ronnie McMorris. "But without the $10,000 for the feasibility study, we have a little more to work with. The conservation commission would like to see these drops in the bucket."

No Turn on Red sign removed

At selectmen chairman Merle Brown's request, a 'No Turn on Red' sign has been removed from the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road.

The sign had been deemed necessary during the days of the old Osgood school, but had outlived its usefulness once the new Osgood school opened

Coalition to meet with town boards

School committee members will join selectmen at their Jan. 4, 2000, to hear a presentation from Needham selectman Jerry Wasserman from the Suburban Coalition.

The Suburban Coalition is a 52-town, grass-roots lobbying group which seeks to promote the interests of suburban communities in the legislature and the governor's office. The cost of membership is $500 per town.

Wasserman sent letters to both the selectmen and school committee asking to appear before the boards. Rather than have him come to Cohasset twice, Town Manager Mark Haddad asked the school committee to come to the Jan. 4 selectmen's meeting.

On an unrelated note, selectman Thomas Callahan reminded everyone that the Jan. 4 selectmen's meeting will not be the board's first of the new millennium.

"The millennium doesn't start until next year," Callahan said.

Selectmen to meet Dec. 20

Selectmen will meet on Monday, Dec. 20, instead of their normal Tuesday meeting date because the Board's secretary will be on vacation that week.

Another secretary will be available to take minutes on Tuesday, but would not have been available Monday.

Town Manager Mark Haddad assured selectmen that the switch had nothing to do with secret plans to watch Monday Night Football.

"I don't even want to talk about football after the last couple of Patriots games," he said.

Housing Committee needs members

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced that the new Senior Housing Committee needs members. Haddad will announce the committee's formal charge at the next selectmen's meeting.

Anyone interested in serving on the committee can contact the Board of Selectmen at 383-4105

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

LAST, BUT NOT LEAST

A tieback may be the final element to be considered when putting together a window treatment, but it should certainly not be treated as an afterthought. Its main function is to hold draperies back from the sides of the window to allow the maximum amount of light to come through the glass. This is a necessity for treatments with a fixed heading. Function aside, tiebacks also introduce a decorative element by giving draperies a graceful shape. As a result, the eye is drawn upward, thereby enhancing the elegant length and hand of the fabric. Tiebacks can be made of matching or contrasting fabrics in many shapes, with ruffles, pleats, rosettes or cord. Large tassels on cords are also in vogue.

The choice of drapery style and fabric is a very important element in the overall room design. Let THE DESIGNING WOMAN introduce you to some very creative designs with beautiful fabrics and trims to complete your rooms. Call 781-383-6411 to schedule an appointment.

Hint: Metal hold backs are a popular choice now with the use of decorative iron rods.

New committee to study options for police station

$10 K article for feasibility study to be taken off warrant

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Three officers work in makeshift offices in the damp police department basement. There are no windows, poor ventilation, and little space for the officers to work.

Safety officer Richard Yocum, school PALS (Police Assisting Local Schools) officer Lisa Matos, and animal control officer Paul Murphy share the basement. Police chief Brian Noonan described the working conditions as deplorable.

"People shouldn't be made to work in those conditions in a town like this."

— Police chief Brian Noonan

"People shouldn't be made to work in those conditions in a town like this," he said.

The reason the officers have been assigned to the basement is simple. The department has grown considerably since the building was built in 1962 and has become like the Incredible Hulk, bursting the seams of his shirt. The department is just too large for its surroundings.

To remedy the problem, a $10,000 article was to be brought to Monday night's special town meeting for a feasibility study to look at expanding the police station. However, with no definitive plan for the use of the old Osgood school, support waned among town boards for the study.

"We didn't feel we should spend $10,000 to look at the current police station until we know what's going to happen with Osgood," said advisory committee chairman Dick Avery, whose board voted not to recommend the article at the special town meeting.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested a citizen committee be created to look at how best to house the police department in the future.

"We can draft a charge for a five-member committee to look at the police station as well as other options like Paul Pratt Library and the old Osgood school. The committee could fully research if Osgood is available and could be used as a police station."

Selectman Merle Brown said the town still has the right to use the old Osgood as it wishes.

"Osgood is ours," he said. "The town only voted for drawings for a town library at Osgood. It has never voted on its future use."

While Osgood is only one possible answer to the lack of space at the police station, it may not be the most attractive to Noonan because it will be years before a new police station could ever be constructed there.

"I'm not having pipe dreams of building a grandiose police station," he said. "Our needs are immediate. We'll look at putting an addition on to this building, look at other town buildings, and may even look at building up."

Should the old Osgood school become the new town library, the Pratt Library on South Main Street would be vacant, but Noonan doesn't consider it a particularly attractive spot for a new police station.

"The library site would require way too much work," he said. "There's not much parking for the library and a police station requires at least 15-20 spaces. That's one plus about our current location. If we were at the library, we'd have no place to put our cruisers. We don't want them out on the road."

Times have changed since the department moved into its Elm Street home in 1962, and Noonan would like the police station to reflect the needs of the department as the year 2000 approaches.

"In 1962, we had two sergeants and no detectives," he said. "Since then, we've added two more sergeants, a safety officer, a school officer, and an additional detective. All of those people need space to work and we just don't have it. We have four sergeants and a secretary all assigned to one room. They're not all there at one time, but if there are even three people in there, it's cramped."

Besides the location of three officers in the basement, the most glaring problem with the building may be the lack of space for records. One filing cabinet is kept in the men's bathroom, while a hall closet is filled with boxes of documents.

Officers eat in the conference room, which is also used to interview witnesses and hold meetings.

"The conference room is always full, and there's no place to get away and do reports," Noonan said.

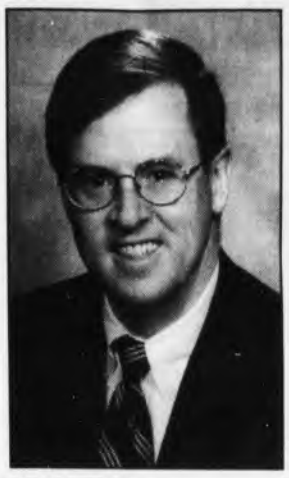
Potential senate candidates change their plans

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER



Phil Edmundson

Tim White

Two Hingham democrats who considered running for the Plymouth-Norfolk state senate seat have changed their minds.

Both say their decisions are not related to state Senator Robert Hedlund's recent loss in the mayoral race in Weymouth. Hedlund, a republican – who ran unopposed for the senate in 1998 – now plans to seek reelection for a fifth term.

Cottage Street resident Philip Edmundson, 41, a member of the Hingham School Committee, and Timothy White, 46, of Berkley Circle have decided not to seek the democratic nomination for the seat in next September's primary.

That leaves Marshfield-native Jim Cantwell, 33, now of Weymouth, an attorney, and Marshfield's Ted LeClair, 30, a cranberry farmer who grew up in Scituate, as likely rivals.

There is still plenty of time, however, for other candidates to enter the race.

Edmundson would only say his decision is due to "personal and professional commitments that are placing increasing demands" on his time.

Edmundson — who is an executive in the commercial insurance business — said he considered running to fill a void because there were no democratic contenders to challenge Hedlund in 1998. He said he is encouraged that there are other democrats in the running this time around.

White now plans to run for Plymouth County commissioner, a post that is more suited to his personal and professional life.

"It's a more manageable race," said White, an attorney. He will seek the open commissioner's seat now held by Joseph McDonough of Scituate, a democrat who plans to run for Plymouth County sheriff.

"This fits beautifully with my practice because it's a part-time job," White said. "This is the right race for Tim White in 2000." County commissioners manage the budget for the court facilities in the county.

Both men said it is too early to throw their support behind another candidate.

"Had Phil (Edmundson) run, I would have supported him," White said. "Now it's hard to say who else might get in but there will clearly be a primary between Cantwell and LeClair."

Edmundson said he would not support any candidate during the primary.

"I will support the nominee during the election process," he said. Edmundson said he will make a decision whether or not to seek reelection to the school committee in January.

Cantwell kicks off senate campaign tonight

Taking the next step in preparation for a State Senate campaign, the Jim Cantwell Committee is hosting a kick-off fund-raiser for former Marshfield Selectman and Assistant District Attorney Jim Cantwell. The fund-raiser will take place on Thursday, Dec. 2, from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. at the Weymouth Elks Hall (on Route 53, across from the old Paperama). The suggested donation is $25, $15 for students and seniors.

Jim recently left the staff of Congressman William Delahunt, where he was responsible for a variety of health care, environmental, and department of justice matters. Cantwell is a practicing attorney in the Marshfield law firm Billingham and Marzelli. He resides in Weymouth with his wife, Jennifer, and son, Christopher.

Special town meeting should draw a crowd know the school article is fourth," Marlette said. "Obviously, that article is the one which people are likely to have the most interest in. We need 100 voters for a quorum to begin the meeting, and I suspect we'll have that right away."

Should a lengthy debate on the merits of the school article cause the special town meeting to be extended to a second night, Marlette said the meeting would likely continue Tuesday night.

"If we need to continue, the usual practice is to go day-to-day," he said. "There are a lot of articles this time around. I've checked with town officials and I'm not aware of any conflicts that would preclude us from continuing on Tuesday."

Should the school article pass with the two-thirds majority necessary for a borrowing article, an override election will be held on Dec.11. A simple majority in that election would allow the appropriation of the $390,000 for architect drawings of Deer Hill and the middle-high school.

An override election is necessary for the school project because the entire project will have to be funded outside the limits of Proposition 2 1/2.

"Because the whole project will be paid for by overrides, this $390,000 has to be paid for the same way," Haddad said. "If an override on the entire project failed and we didn't do an override this time, the town would be left holding the bag for $390,000. We don't have that money available in the budget."

Should an override pass on Dec. 11, the school committee would bring an article for the appropriation of the entire renovation project to the annual town meeting in March. If approved by voters at that meeting and accepted by the state for reimbursement at 60 percent, the $41 million project would ultimately cost the taxpayers of Cohasset approximately $17 million.

While the school article is likely to garner the most attention from the town's taxpayers, the $100,000 article to fund four new firefighter/paramedics is also a hot-button issue.

Haddad said the new firefighter/paramedics will allow the town to offer better care to the town's citizens while also helping the department's bottom line.

"We've already spent $93,000 on fire department overtime this fiscal year," he said. "The new firefighter/paramedics will reduce that overtime significantly. Also, we can charge more money for ambulance runs with paramedics because we'd be providing better care. If we had paramedic care last year, we would have brought in an additional $88,000 in ambulance receipts. That money is almost entirely paid by insurance companies."

Both the selectmen and advisory committee recommended the firefighter/paramedic article, though neither did so unanimously. Advisory committee chairman Dick Avery said he felt the article was fiscally sound.

"I'm expecting the $100,000 to pay for itself within a year between the reduced overtime and increased ambulance billing," he said.

Not all town officials are convinced, however. Selectman Diane Sullivan, the lone dissenting vote among the selectmen, wasn't sure that the overtime problem would be solved with an expenditure at special town meeting.

"I don't think the way to control overtime is to throw money at it," she said. "We've had an overtime problem in the fire department for years and I'm not sure that four additional firefighters would solve the problem. I don't think we have the money to risk on it."

Though the $8,750 article to hire a teen center coordinator is not as important to the town's finances as are other articles, there are still strong supporters and detractors of its necessity.

"A lot of teenagers and adults worked incredibly hard to make the teen center a reality," said selectman Fred Koed, speaking for the majority in a 3-2 vote to recommended the article to hire a teen center coordinator. "I think they've done a tremendous job and deserve some support from the town."

Fellow selectman Thomas Callahan disagreed, saying fiscal responsibility dictates turning down some requests for town financial support.

"We have to draw the line somewhere," he said.

Marlette said he would not accept any motions after 10:45 on Monday night, which he hoped would allow the meeting to adjourn around 11 p.m.

"People tend to get a little bit punchy and gloss over things after they've been sitting there for four hours," he said. "I prefer to come back the next night when everyone is refreshed than to continue into the night."

$222K SPED deficit is revealed

us to watch that."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said $200,000 of the deficit will be included in Article Two of the warrant for Monday night's special town meeting. The school committee will come back for the balance at the annual town meeting in March.

"$170,000 of it will come from free cash, while the other $30,000 is coming from additional state aid which we recently received," he said.

Article Two, which includes departmental transfers, insurance expenses, and expenses of various town departments, is commonly referred to as a "housekeeping article." Selectman Thomas Callahan asked how the special education deficit would be funded if the town voted against the $296,000 article.

"If the town votes no, where does the money come from?" he asked. "Will it cost us a Spanish teacher or a sports team?"

Malvey said the school district would face litigation if special education funds were voted down. He said the town's state funding could be reduced as a result.

"We'd be sued and we'd lose," he said. "The money would ultimately come off of our cherry sheet."

Silva said 16 percent of students in Cohasset public schools receive special education services, just under the state average of 17 percent. Some parents do contribute toward the cost of their child's education, but the schools cannot require them to do so.

"We have parents that help," Silva said, "but we must provide a free and appropriate public education by law. If Bill Gates moved in to Cohasset, we'd have to pay if his children had special needs."

Malvey said the bulk of the special education deficit is driven by students who attend programs outside of the Cohasset Public Schools. Those programs include both day school and residential programs.

Day school students attend classes in a school outside of Cohasset or attend the South Shore Collaborative, housed at Osgood, but still live in town. Students in residential programs require 24-hour care seven days a week in an outside facility.

Much of the reason for the special education deficit is that school officials cannot accurately budget for the number of students who will require such services. Malvey said he planned on having 24 day school students when the budget was approved in March. That number has since jumped to 32.

"Some of these students started special in programs in the summer, and some came in to the district in September," Malvey said. Other students come up with problems as the school year progresses. It's impossible to predict."

Silva said many of the students receiving special education are preschoolers, whose disabilities are often seen only when a parent notifies the school department.

"Special education costs involve children from ages three to 22, and a great number of those children are preschoolers," she said. "We may not know of those children until the parents come forward. Six of the eight new day school students this year are preschoolers as are 17 of the overall 32 day school students. Many of those kids get tested over the summer, and that's when we find out about them."

Only two Cohasset students receive residential care, but the cost of the service is significant. When the school budget was completed, Malvey and Silva only planned on one student receiving residential care, at a cost of $39,000. As the need for residential care of a second child became apparent, the cost jumped to $84,000.

"It costs $84,000 to send two children out of town to school?" asked an exasperated Diane Sullivan.

Silva told Sullivan residential services are the only ones the state helps school districts to fund.

"The state pays 50 percent of the cost, while Cohasset public schools pick up the other half," she said. "You wouldn't believe how expensive these residential programs can be. There are placements that cost anywhere from $120,000 to $150,000."

The cost of contracted services, which include occupational therapy, speech and language therapy, physical therapy, and adapted physical education, has risen $19,000 from the $54,000 approved in the school department's annual budget.

Because Cohasset is a relatively small school system, Silva said the town saves money by contracting for those services rather than hiring full-time teachers to provide them.

"By using contracted services, we save on benefit costs and can request services as we need them," she said. "It's more cost effective for us to contract with the South Shore Collaborative for the services we need."

Callahan wondered why the cost of contracted services had escalated.

"Special education funding is a recurring problem year after year, and I understand why," he told Silva. But why did the contracted services go up so much? It seems to be an area you should have more control over."

Silva said plans will always be inadequate because it is impossible to predict how children will change as they develop.

"We can't always determine what services kids will need down the line," she said. "I don't like to make this comparison, but we don't control a student's needs any more than a hospital controls a patient's needs."

The final piece of the current $222,000 special education deficit is $60,000 which resulted from the hiring of four new aides at $15,000 each. Three of those aides are at Deer Hill and one is at Osgood.

"We are responsible to comply with federal guidelines to provide as much access as possible for these children to the regular classroom," Silva said. "The congressional intent is to limit the number of children who are placed outside of the district. In order to keep them inside the district, it's necessary to have aides for them. Paying $15,000 for an aide is preferable to spending $40,000 to send a child outside of the district."

Debate still rages regarding Cohasset station location

Planning board chairman prefers village site

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The right-of-way may run along the same route, but one aspect of the proposed Greenbush commuter rail line in Cohasset will be vastly different than the former train line which ran through town until Route 3 was opened in 1959.

The new Cohasset Station is slated to reside on Route 3A, at the site of the old skating rink, where Graham Waste Services currently resides The old station, in the heart of Cohasset Village, is now home to Bernard's restaurant.

Planning board chairman Al Moore wants to see the station return to the village if Greenbush becomes a reality.

"If we're going to have the train, I think it's sheer lunacy not to have it stop downtown," said planning board chairman Al Moore. "The idea of a village station was stampeded by a group of well-meaning NIMBY's who didn't do the town any favors. People talk about revitalizing the village. This is a way to keep it from decaying and make it a center of activity."

In a straw poll taken at the Oct. 1996 special town meeting, 311 voters were in favor of the Route 3A station, with 112 voting for the station in Cohasset Village. Selectmen unanimously endorsed the results of that straw poll that November.

INSIDE GREENBUSH

Selectmen chairman Merle Brown was also chairman in 1996, and explained why he and then-members Ronnie McMorris, Nan Roth, Michael Sullivan, and Peter Pratt voted for the 3A station.

"The old village station was just a small building with a little walkway," Brown said. "Because of ADA (Americans with Disabilities Act) requirements, the new station will require an 800-foot platform because each car on the strain has to be handicapped-accessible. That platform would start all the way near Pleasant Street and would have gone almost to Spring Street. We felt it would hold up a lot of traffic in the center of town. 3A seemed a better fit."

Brown also disputed Moore's notion of a village station creating a bustling downtown village district.

"North Scituate and Hingham both had train stations in the past and they've both increased business development since the train left," he said. "To entice businesses to come into the village, the planning board needs to work more closely with the chamber of commerce to limit restrictions on business development. I don't think the business community in the village would really gain that much from a train station. People might stop for a cup of coffee or a newspaper, but that's it."

Moore said he feels a train station could have a greater impact on the businesses and the village than simply helping its coffee shops.

"I think the village could be helped in a number of ways by a downtown station," Moore said. "If someone's husband or wife calls them before they get on the train and asks them to pick something up on the way home, where are they going to stop? They're probably going to stop at Tedeschi's. Also, restaurants could spring up. People might stop and eat at the Red Lion Inn. Most importantly, it creates a lot of foot traffic and window-browsing in the village."

"I think the MBTA would try to respect the wishes of the town regarding the station. My hope is the downtown stop will be revisited."
Planning board chairman Al Moore

The decision about where to place the station ultimately rests with the MBTA. If the town really wanted a village station, Moore feels the MBTA would be amenable to that suggestion.

"I think the MBTA would try to respect the wishes of the town regarding the station," he said. "My hope is the downtown stop will be revisited."

For now, however, the station is still planned for Route 3A. Should Greenbush go forward, Cohasset Mitigation Committee chairman Tom Gruber said changes will be made to 3A to accommodate the increased traffic flow caused by Cohasset Station.

"There will be a traffic light placed at the corner of 3A and the station and a right turn lane will also be added for people to turn into the station," Gruber said.

Gruber said the T originally wanted access to the station from North Main Street, but was convinced by the mitigation committee to drop the request.

"Originally, the T wanted a drop-off space from North Main, which would have enough room for four cars. The idea is that a car would pull in, drop someone off, and pull back out. The mitigation committee adamantly opposed this because people would be making u-turns on to a narrow road with lots of traffic. The police agreed with us and so the T scrapped the idea."

A drop-off space from North Main would also allow pedestrian access to the station from that thoroughfare. Gruber said the mitigation committee was able to show the T that what looked good on paper would not be feasible.

"The T is obliged to provide pedestrian access to stations," Gruber said. 'North Main Street is not the way to do it, however. It's a very dangerous street with rapid traffic. No one walks along North Main Street. It isn't a good road to have people stopping on or walking on. One of the good things about having a mitigation committee is we're able to explain those type of things to the T."

To provide pedestrian access to the station, the MBTA plans to construct a walkway from Whitney Woods to the station, which would include a crosswalk across 3A.

If a station is indeed constructed on 3A, Gruber said the mitigation committee is concerned about its potential effect upon the adjacent Woodside cemetery.

"We're very concerned about getting some trees or other visual buffers so people visiting the cemetery won't be looking at a train station," he said.

AROUND TOWN

Look for Cohasset's Lauren Albanese in Boston Ballet's "The Nutcracker."

COHASSET BALLERINAS

We have a couple of "stars" in our midst — Amanda Thompson is performing in Boston Ballet's 34th annual production of "The Nutcracker" in the role of an attendant! And Lauren Albanese will dance in the role of Polichinelle.

Lauren has been a student at Boston Ballet School for six years, and is currently enrolled in the intensive division of the school. She is a fourth-grade student at Deer Hill Schooll. She will be turning 10 years old this New Year's Eve. Lauren is the daughter of Thomas and Lori Albanese and the niece of Deborah and Jack Rota of Milton.

Amanda is a fifth-grader at Deer Hill School and this is her second year dancing in the performances. She has been a student at the Boston Ballet School for three years

We look forward to seeing you, Amanda and Lauren!

NEW ARRIVAL

We have a brand new "Cohassetite" to tell you about this week! His name is Joshua Joseph Liberty, born Nov. 10 at 10:58 a.m. Joshua weighed in at 8 pounds 2-1/2 ounces and was 20-1/2 inches long — his Mom is Heidi Pratt, his Dad is Page Liberty and they love Joshua to pieces!

Joshua has two brothers, Brian and Andrew, and a sister Samantha (and you thought you had a busy Thanksgiving) who also think the world of him — his maternal grandparents are Sandy and Donald Pratt of Cohasset (his maternal grandma was there as he entered the world) and Franklin Liberty of Maine.

Welcome, Joshua!

ROUND OF APPLAUSE

We know this isn't a sports column, but could we please take the time to give all of our teams a round of applause for the fall season? Aren't you proud of them and their efforts? Did you know that we had more fans at the Thanksgiving game than Hull did? I bet that all of last year's team was there to cheer our team on (how wonderful) sporting their "Cohasset Football" jackets.

Thanks for a great season, ladies and gents!

HOOP STAR

On the subject of sports, we have news from Plymouth State College! Remember Ryan Bishop? A Cohasset High "super star?" Well, Ryan is a junior now and they expect great things of him! The coach knows how good he is and we know that we will hear more about Ryan as the season goes on!

Have a great season, Ryan!

MUSICAL IDEA

'Tis the season! The lists are in and for the kiddos it is usually pretty easy to get their gifts — for adults it is much harder, it is the "I don't need anything." I have an idea for you — as most know, we work at the South Shore Music Circus in the summer (this is not an add) and if you could see the number of happy people who received gift certificates to enjoy a show, you would be amazed! Not only is that a perfect gift, you don't have to go to the malls to purchase it!

There is always a show for everyone, from kiddies to teens to every age — the perfect gift and, honestly, everyone will love it!

SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY

I always ask you for your latest news, this time I have some of my own! Clark and I celebrated our 36th anniversary Nov. 28 — we are proud of that; we are proud of our love — may I please let everyone know, I love you, Clark!

RIGHT ON RIPLEY

Although we have a hard time driving "around town" with all of the road construction going on, here is a bit of good news — we can now go right on red at Ripley Road! Sounds like not much, but it does free you up — just don't go too fast!

WE LOVE HAROLD!

Yeah, Harold!

Harold Litchfield has agreed to stay on as DPW Superintendent for another year — lots of us were concerned that he might retire, but he will be with us!

By the way, Harold, hope all is well with your recent surgery!

ON THE MEND

Speaking of surgery, Peter Laugelle had shoulder surgery last week. We hope all is well and that you are in shape within a couple of days — you will be!

HOUSE TOUR

Please don't forget the Community Garden House Tour Dec. 8 — they will be "Decking the Halls" with a holiday musical theme in each home, what fun! It is always nice to get good ideas and the Garden Club provides all of that!

Advance tickets are $15 ($20 on tour day) and are available at the South Shore Community Center — have a "Very Merry House Tour!"

VILLAGE FAIR

Finally, don't forget our local fairs that will take place next Saturday — what fun! What does one need more than good friends, good buys, good fun for our children? GO!

Please call with your news, I cannot wait! Nor can anyone else! I have a machine, so I will return your call ASAP — get your news in print! Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News, 3 Brook St. or sent by fax to 741-2931, attn. Sallyann.

Cinnamon ornaments for the Christmas tree

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

I thought that this week I would get you into the holiday spirit, one that can involve your young ones! I am hardly a Martha Stewart, but I do believe that getting them involved in "cooking" cannot begin too soon!

Satisfy your handcrafting urge by making fragrant cinnamon ornaments. They're not edible, but all of the ingredients (except the wire loops and ribbon) come from the kitchen. Hang them on the Christmas tree, tie them on packages or give them as gifts!

CINNAMON ORNAMENTS

3/4 cup ground cinnamon
1 tablespoon ground allspice
2 tablespoons ground cloves
1 tablespoon ground nutmeg
1 cup applesauce
copper wire
1/8-inch or 1/4-inch satin ribbon

Combine spices, mixing well. Stir in applesauce; mix well. This mixture will be stiff — roll out to 1/4-inch thickness on an ungreased cookie sheet

Using small or medium size cookie cutters, cut dough into desired shapes. Peel away excess dough and reroll as necessary.

Cut wire into 2-inch lengths as needed. Bend lengths of wire into horseshoe shapes and insert into tops, leaving half-circles of wire exposed. Let ornaments dry uncovered for four to five days.

To hang, cut ribbon into 10-inch lengths as needed. Fold ribbon in half, knot ends together and pull tight. Push loop of ribbon under wire, and pull knotted ends of ribbon through loop. Use additional ribbon to tie at top of wire, if desired. After ornaments are dried, store in sealed plastic bags until ready to use

This batch will yield 25 small ornaments or 18 medium ornaments.

I hope that you have a great time with this "recipe." I know you will love the aroma — and, if you decide to give them as gifts, the recipients will love them!

The holidays have begun!

The Village Fair is Saturday

Bell-ringing town crier, handmade ornaments, pillows, table decorations at the Second Congregational craft fair; the fabulous and famous secret room at St. Stephen's where children can shop for their parents in secret; grilled cheese sandwiches and Greek pastries; used books and movies, jumble sale treasures, and lots more—all on Saturday, Dec. 4, from 10 to 3; all part of this year's annual Village Fair on Cohasset Common. The fair is a collaboration of five of the town's churches. Santa will be on the common for photo opportunities. Come on down and enjoy.

Christmas trees and poinsettias at fair

A family tradition, bringing home the Christmas tree, is now a traditional walk for many who select their pre-ordered or cash-and-carry tree at the annual First Parish Christmas tree and ornament sale, part of this Saturday's Village Fair. Families with wheelbarrows or wagons choose from fresh balsams, 5 to 9 feet tall. All trees are $35 and an additional $10 gives you one of the last five trees remaining at the end of the sale at the Parish House, 234 North Main St., across from the common.

First Parish Youth Group will offer beautiful poinsettias in 6-inch pots, red or white, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. The holiday plants are $10 each, three for $25 while they last.

How did something so small feed so many?

Easy. It was part of something special called the Thanks for Giving program. The Greater Boston Food Bank and Stop & Shop teamed up with our generous partners to ensure that hungry people in our communities had turkey on Thanksgiving.

When shoppers used their Stop & Shop card this holiday season, they helped us provide Thanksgiving dinners for over 100,000 people. That's a large number, but nothing we couldn't handle. In fact, the Greater Boston Food Bank is New England's largest distributor of food for the needy, supplying food to over 900 different agencies.

We truly appreciate our partners for their contribution to the Thanks for Giving program and for their understanding of the true meaning of Thanksgiving. Thank you.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

A real barn burner

Town meeting groupies won't want to miss the special town meeting starting at 7 p.m. Monday in the high school gym. But we sincerely hope that we'll see far more there than the familiar faces which attend religiously and form the backbone of our town government.

The warrant, which arrived in your mailbox last week, is full of business items affecting your pocketbook and quality of life. Therefore, it is critical that you attend and let your voice be heard and your vote counted.

Tops on the list of hot items is surely the article asking for $390,000 to pay for architectural drawings that could set the stage for renovations and additions to the Deer Hill and middle-high schools. What makes this so controversial is the combination of the $41 million price tag before state reimbursement to rehab both schools and the fact that the school buildings have been so poorly maintained over the years.

Town meeting provides a forum to fully air the issues. Under the guidance of Town Moderator George Marlette, all sides are given the chance to explain, clarify and persuade. That's what makes attendance so beneficial. Often citizens walk in with a particular mindset only to vote the other way after they've heard the debate.

Schools aren't the only item likely to stir debate. A majority of selectmen and the town manager would like to see paramedic service in town. They say the $100,000 needed to get started this year would be better spent for additional staff — that could also provide Advanced Life Support — than in the high overtime costs the fire department now incurs.

Can the town afford to pay $8,700 for a part-time adult coordinator for the new "Teen Garage" this fiscal year? With the apparent lack of places for kids to hang out in town — can it afford not to? That issue will also be decided on the floor of town meeting.

For those that want to watch the proceedings from the comfort of their living rooms, town meeting will be televised live on Channel 22. Mr. Marlette takes the articles up in the order that they appear on the warrant. Therefore, if you don't want to sit through the entire proceedings, you could come down just before the article that you care about comes up.

A few bad apples

Some students at Cohasset High School think the Mariner over reported the Halloween night teen frenzy in the village. What happened was deplorable, the teens said, about the graffiti and vandalism that occurred, but was the result of the actions of about five or 10 teens and not the entire group.

On Cohasset Talks, the weekly call-in show hosted by Wigmore Pierson and Nan Roth, student council president and guest panelist Ben Peterson and two other seniors in the studio audience said the vast majority just went out to have fun with their friends that night and were not involved in the illegal activity.

They said the Mariner stories gave all Cohasset teens a black eye and said newspapers don't report the good deeds that students do.

While we dispute the claim that we don't write positive articles about teenagers, here at the Mariner, we will not overlook a major news story, such as the Halloween night melee.

As the old saying goes — it is always a few bad apples that spoil the bunch — and the sad fact of life is that the entire bunch ends up paying the price for the harmful behavior of a few.

Police are still looking for those responsible for the graffiti which was obscene for the most part and sadly, covered the swim center parking lot and the Osgood PlayPark where small children might have seen it the next day. So we hope some of the good kids at Cohasset High will call the police anonymous tip line at 383-9406 with the names of the perpetrators and place the black eye right where it belongs.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Support our schools

TO THE EDITOR:

This is a letter in response to Mr. Joe McElroy's letter in the Nov. 11 issue of the Cohasset Mariner.

Mr. McElroy . . . it is also a "no brainer" that people do not move to a small community like Cohasset to have their children "bussed" to the neighboring towns! Parents do not like the idea of their high school students driving all over the South Shoe in all kinds of weather and "car pools" in order to lower your taxes. Is it true that you do not have a child in the high school? Should I, as a parent and taxpayer, listen to your pontificating about how few children will graduate . . . there are many reasons, as you well know, that people choose to send their children out of town. Economics can change in a heartbeat . . . and then those paying high tuition costs may be back on the school doorsteps.

I would like to propose this . . . that we continue to place value on our community, life in our community, and excellence in education for all our children, in all grades.

You get what you pay for, and there is no free lunch! I am a parent of four future CHS graduates!

Support for senior citizens

TO THE EDITOR:

In the Nov. 25 issue of the Cohasset Mariner a person was quoted as urging her fellow taxpayers to stop putting off the rehab of our schools. "Thank God we have one done," she said.

Yes, we have one done, but we have not started to pay for it.

The person was quoted as saying, "Everywhere I look in this town, I see new cars, people going on vacation. We can pay for this. What would be a better time?"

We all know that there is a lot of new money in Cohasset and good luck to those who have it. However, please remember that more than 22 percent of people in Cohasset are over 60 years old. A person over 70 and lived in Cohasset over 50 years, has paid for those 50-year-old schools once already.

I love Cohasset as much as anybody, I know something has to be done with the schools, but remember, everybody is not driving a new car or going on vacations.

Remember, some people have been here a long time, they have helped build this town. They should be able to enjoy their senior years along with the people with their new cars.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes and local senators' votes on three roll calls from recent legislative sessions. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.
FREEZE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE(H 4867) House 154-0, gave near final approval and sent to the Senate a bill freezing unemployment insurance premiums paid by employers at 1999 levels instead of allowing an automatic scheduled increase from an average of $308 per employee to $356 per employee to take effect in January. The payments go into a fund which pays benefits to laid off workers. Supporters said the fund is flush with money because of low unemployment. They noted this affordable freeze will save employers about $119 million and ensure that the state remians business friendly. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).		Y
AFL-CIO(H 4867) House 110-43, approved a motion to send to a study committee an amendment allowing the AFL-CIO to have input into who is appointed to represent workers on the state advisory council which sets unemployment insurance policy. Current law allows the governor to appoint two workers to represent the interests of workers across the state. The amendment permits the AFL-CIO to submit three workers' names from which the governor must choose two to serve on the council. Supporters of the study committee said a study will determine the impact the AFL-CIO input will have on the unemployment system. They also noted that the AFL-CIO is not the only labor representative in the state. Opponents of the study committee said it essentially kills the amendment. They noted that AFL-CIO input will ensure that minimum wage workers have a voice in the unemployment insurance system. (A "Yea" vote is for the study committee. A "Nay" vote is against it).		Y
BEAVER TRAPS(H 3525) House 89-64, gave near final approval to and sent to the Senate a bill allowing the unrestricted use of bodygrabbing devices known as conibear traps to trap and kill beavers. Current law, approved by voters in 1996, prohibits the use of these traps unless non-lethal traps fail and the trapper receives a permit to use the connibear ones. Supporters said the restrictive law and lengthy permit process have lead to an explosion in the beaver population and flooded roads and basements. Opponents said the bill overturns the will of the voters who clearly approved restrictions in the use of the cruel connibear traps which often capture and kill non-targeted animals. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill allowing the unrestricted use of connibear traps. A "Nay" vote is against the bill).		N
OUTSTANDING ARREST WARRANTS(S 1990) Senate 37-0, gave near final approval and sent to the House a bill making major changes in how the state deals with outstanding arrest warrants. The measure gives the state police the authority to receive addresses held by other state agencies in order to locate fugitives with outstanding warrants. It also provides for suspension of drivers' licenses, benefits such as unemployment benefits and professional licenses of the fugitives as well as the withholding of their tax refunds and lottery winnings. Supporters said the state has a backlog of more than 300,000 outstanding warrants and argued the bill will ensure that the state has leverage to bring these fugitives to justice. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y
REFORM UNEMPLOYMENT SYSTEM(S 5) Senate 36-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill making several changes in the administration of the unemployment insurance system. Provisions include excluding work performed by prisoners from covered employment for unemployment purposes and permitting employers to make voluntary contributions beyond their mandatory rates in order to build up account balances and enable them to earn lower rates in future years. Supporters said these and other changes will make improvements in the system and benefit both employers and workers. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y
$42 MILLION SUPPLEMENTAL BUDGET(S 2049) Senate 37-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a $42 million fiscal 2000 supplemental budget. The package includes $37 million for emergency road and bridge repairs and $5 million for improvements to the Registry of Motor Vehicles' telephone system. Supporters said the package will help repair many crumbling and dangerous roads and bridges. They noted it will also upgrade the registry's phone system and pointed out that only one out of ten callers get through to the registry on the first attempt. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).	Y

'Ho Ho Ho! buy recycled products'

RECYCLING

CLAIRE SULLIVAN

Santa was feeling guilty. It seemed that his Christmas Eve generosity was having some undesirable side effects. Last year he had hung around for a few days after his gift-giving spree, and he discovered colossal heaps of discarded gift wrap, packaging, and dead batteries all over the earth. So he dispatched four elves to find solutions to his gift-giving-garbage glut. They contacted the South Shore Recycling Cooperative, which was thrilled to hear from such a major producer of the nation's waste.

To the first elf, Reid Deuce, the SSRC recommended that when choosing gifts, Santa should avoid items hidden within large layers of packaging. Reid was surprised to learn that almost half of America's garbage is packaging waste. The Cooperative also asked that Santa go easy on the battery-operated toys. Besides weighing down the trash with toxic heavy metals, batteries deliver only 2 percent of the energy required to make them.

To the second elf, Ray Hughes, the group suggested that St. Nick wrap his gifts in the Sunday comics and glossies or use recycled gift wrap. Bows and ribbons could be saved and used again. He could pack delicate items in old newspapers rather than plastic packing peanuts or bubble wrap. And if Santa is looking for an environmentally friendly gift for hard to please older kids, battery chargers, canvas grocery bags and travel coffee mugs are great ideas.

The third elf, Reese I. Kohl, was instructed to choose useful gifts in packages that can be recycled easily, such as corrugated cardboard boxes cushioned with newspaper. Gray chipboard boxes can be recycled with the newspapers in many towns. Some nifty gift ideas to help the good girls' and boys' parents recycle are retractable utility knives to break down all that corrugated cardboard, recycling bins, and compost buckets and bins. Composters are the gifts that keep giving; compost is the best and cheapest fertilizer around, so the recipient can enjoy the "fruits" of his or her recycling. And it keeps a lot of smelly garbage out of the garbage bags.

The Cooperative informed the fourth elf, Byron Seicle, that Nov. 15 is Massachusetts Recycles Day, and the theme this year is "For Our Children's Future . . . Buy Recycled Today." They gave him a pledge card and asked him to tell Santa to look for recycled products. There is a wide array of paper products which contain our old newspapers and office paper, including Christmas cards, stationery and journals, which make great gifts and can be wrapped in recycled gift wrap too. Aluminum and steel products have a high recycled content, so when Santa entertains, he should serve his drinks in aluminum cans rather than plastic bottles. Clothing made with Polartek by Malden Mills and Fortrel EcoSpun is made from PET soda bottles, as are hats, mittens and blankets made by Berkshire Blanket. And if Santa looks, he can find recycled plastic products such as outdoor furniture, planters recycling bins and composters. Signing an America Recycles Day pledge card will also make Santa eligible to win an American Green Dream House, a recycled plastic kayak from Walden Paddlers, two spa renewal passes from Canyon Ranch in the Berkshires, or two recycled plastic "Earth Machine" composting bins from Norseman Plastics.

Santa was pleased with the elves' research, and this year he will feel even better about his holiday benevolence. He has added Planet Earth to his gift list and wishes everyone a green holiday season.

Claire Sullivan is the regional planner with the South Shore Recycling Cooperative that serves Abington, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Plymouth, Rockland, Scituate, and Weymouth.

Bureau checking on Oswald call

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Recently released documents left over from the Kennedy assassination have shown that a telephone call to the Soviet embassy in Mexico City by a man who identified himself as Lee Harvey Oswald was not made by Oswald at all.

This, of course, indicates to freelance investigators that the President was killed by a conspiracy made up of Richard Nixon, Lyndon Johnson, Fidel Castro, Martha Stewart and/or the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

You'll recall that the Bureau was set up to investigate assassinations throughout history and, where possible, prove that the assassin didn't do it, that he was helped by conspirators or, in some cases, that he wasn't assassinated at all.

All of which calls for a renewed probe by my Assassinations Bureau.

You'll recall that the Bureau was set up to investigate assassinations throughout history and, where possible, prove that the assassin didn't do it, that he was helped by conspirators or, in some cases, that he wasn't assassinated at all.

Already my Assassinations Bureau has discovered that Julius Caesar was slain, not by Brutus, but by a Roman courtesan named Ruth and that, contrary to Shakespeare, Caesar's last words were not "Et tu, Brute" but "Et Tu, Ruthie."

Right now, we are looking into a report that Abe Lincoln was not slain by John Wilkes Booth but by a man with a musket from a grassy knoll overlooking the balcony of Ford's Theater in Washington and Martin Luther King was . . .

But I digress . . .

Actually, we at the Bureau were tipped to the Oswald phone call to the Soviet embassy in Mexico City a few years ago by a man who had previously given us good information on the assassination of the Archduke Ferdinand.

We were just about to announce our findings in that case - Kaiser Wilhelm did it with his rifle on a grassy knoll overlooking Sarajevo — when the Kennedy thing broke. Since then, our phones have been ringing off the hook with tipsters.

A day in the life of my Assassinations Bureau goes something like this:

"Assassinations Bureau. How may I help you?"

"Did you know that J. Edgar Hoover made a telephone call to Buffalo the night before JFK was killed?"

"No."

"And you call yourself an investigator! Don't you know that Buffalo was the place where President McKinley was assassinated?"

"And?"

"Doesn't that make you at least a little bit suspicious?"

"We'll get on it right away. Assassinations Bureau. How may I help you?"

"I think my uncle killed Kennedy."

"What makes you think so?"

"He was in Dallas at the time."

"So were a couple of million others."

"He confessed to me."

"Let me talk to him."

"I can't. It was a deathbed confession."

"We'll get on it right away. Assassinations Bureau. How may I help you?"

"I did it."

"Who are you?"

"Lyndon Johnson."

"He's dead."

"Oops. I mean I'm Richard Nixon."

"He's dead, too."

"Then I'm Ronald Reagan. I'm still alive, aren't I?"

"We'll get on it right away. Assassinations Bureau. How may I help you?"

"About the Harding assassination . . . "

"He died of a stroke, didn't he?"

"That's how much you know! Have you checked that last glass of milk Mrs. Harding gave him?"

"We'll get on it right away. Assassinations Bureau. How may I help you?"

Well, you get the idea.

Working toward a better record for Massachusetts

LOCAL VIEW

LUCY HORWITZ

This is the time of year when a deluge of catalogs clutters our mailboxes, our living rooms and finally our wastepaper baskets. There is one catalog, however, that reflects the spirit of the season at its best; and that we at Wellspring, along with 99 other organizations, hope will not meet the same fate. The third annual edition of The Catalog for Philanthropy has just appeared, and we are in it, so is the Hull Lifesaving Museum. Three hundred charities from across the state applied for inclusion, and only 100 were chosen.

The catalog is an interesting experiment in getting financial resources to smaller charities that, like Wellspring and the Lifesaving Museum, spend most of their time and energy on programs and have little left over for fund-raising. Take Wellspring for example, our annual fund-raiser, though eminently successful, still only raises a fraction of our operating budget. You might be surprised at what it costs to run the food pantry, thrift shop and adult learning, domestic violence intervention, and crisis counseling programs. If it were not for some grants and a lot of unsolicited donations from generous institutions and individuals, we'd never be able to do it.

The Catalog Project was initiated and coordinated by the Ellis L. Phillips Foundation, with many co-sponsors and collaborators. It was inspired in part by the sad state of charitable giving in the New England states. In particular, Massachusetts residents should hang their collective heads in shame. While the state is near the top in income, it is near the bottom in giving. According to IRS statistics for 1997 (the most recent year available) Massachusetts ranked third among the 50 states in income and 40th in itemized charitable contributions. The catalog lists these statistics and also calculates what it calls a "Generosity Index." This is a number that compares actual donations to what people could afford to give, based on their income. Massachusetts ranked 48th on the Generosity Index. Dismal as this performance is, it is a step up from 1996, when Massachusetts ranked dead last. This and other interesting information comes as a bonus in the catalog which details the work of 100 worthy organizations in a beautifully printed and illustrated format. Our only gripe is that they got our phone number wrong. It's 781-924-3211 for the record.

According to IRS statistics for 1997 (the most recent year available) Massachusetts ranked third among the 50 states in income and 40th in itemized charitable contributions.

The catalog will be mailed to more than 100,000 Massachusetts families in the top income brackets. If you happen not to be a member of this elite group, you can still get a catalog. Drop in at Wellspring, 814 Nantasket Ave., Hull, and we'll be happy to give you one. While you're here, you might also look around and see what a lot of interesting things are happening in our various programs. Who knows, you might even be inspired to make a contribution—of time or money.

This is the time of year when many of us make our annual donations. Let's see if we can't contribute to a better record for Massachusetts, but more importantly, help some of the wonderful charities that the catalog describes. There are so many options it is hard to decide where to give first, but, of course, I always start with Wellspring.

Lucy Horwitz is a member of the board of directors at Wellspring.

Wellspring help appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Wellspring clients, we are writing to express deep thanks to all who have made donations to Wellspring during this year's Mission Possible fund-raising. People have contributed a record amount this year—more than $17,000—which enabled Wellspring to receive an additional $10,000 matching donation. These funds will be put to use by Wellspring to provide important "bootstrap" services to people in need. Many, many thanks to all contributors, Mission Possible ambassadors and volunteers.

Halloween Fair thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

For nearly 25 years, the Halloween Fair on the Common has been both a fall tradition and the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's single largest fund-raiser. Once again it was a delight to see the children in their costumes scurrying across the Common, parents in tow, eager to participate in the activities and games. And, as in previous years, it was equally wonderful to sense the feeling of community that the fair creates as families and friends met and mingled.

We couldn't have asked for a more beautiful autumn day or a more beautiful place than the Common to hold our event.

On behalf of the staff of the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, I'd like to thank the small army of people who banded together to make our fair a reality. With each year the fair grows and becomes more successful because of the efforts of these volunteers.

This year's fair was our most successful ever, and I remain overwhelmed by the support and generosity of businesses, parents, students and friends. Many, many thanks are due to Arlene and Bob Fiori of Fiori's Exxon Station, Andrea and Joe Kinnealey of Kinnealey Meats, Dan Belz of Atlantic Bagel, John Bellas of Dunkin Donuts, and Denise and Gary Bismore of The Silver Spoon for their generous donations.

We also owe much to the students of the Deer Hill Middle School, and high school who—through their affiliation with churches, volunteer projects and scouting—staffed the activities and games.

And finally, a thank you to our nursery school parent volunteers for their time and tireless energy on behalf of the school and to the families who each year make the Halloween Fair on the Common a part of their Halloween celebration. The funds and fun raised through this effort do much to help raise our community's children.

Callahan and citizens debate zoning issues

"I don't think you can just change the frontage," Callahan said. "You have to change more than one dimension."

Fellow selectman Ronnie McMorris will join Callahan in meeting with members of the planning board before the special town meeting in an attempt to merge their similar articles into one which all parties can agree to.

Cohasset resident Neil Murphy, a local engineer, didn't see the need for the increased lot sizes which Callahan proposed.

"I'm confused as to why we need these zoning changes," Murphy told selectmen.

Armed with a poster board containing statistics to prove his point, Murphy recounted figures showing Cohasset's history of moderate growth.

"The population of Cohasset has gone down by 106 people from 1978 to 1998, according to the town clerk's records," he said. "We've only had 15.1 new homes built per year during that time and have only averaged 14.4 new students entering the school system per year. That's less than one child per household. What the hell is the problem? Show me a reason we need these changes through a good master plan."

Callahan agreed Murphy's statistics showed a pattern of moderate growth, but said those figures do not guarantee a continuation of that pattern in the future.

"Cohasset has grown very slowly," Callahan said. "Mr. Murphy's figures don't lie. But last year we had 32 new houses, which I know is unusually busy. My concern is that development is denser than I particularly think it should be in areas like Rose Hill. With advances in sewer technology, the rules may change. The train changes the dynamic as well. I'm not willing to take the chance that everything will work itself out."

Murphy said increasing lot sizes is not the answer to limiting development.

"By increasing lot sizes, you're forcing the developer to go with a higher density, and that means subdivisions," he said. "I was on the Scituate planning board in the 1960's and I brought a 100-foot frontage requirement to the town. All it did was force developers to put in roadways and create subdivisions."

Agnese Froio, 321 Forest Ave, said increasing the minimum frontage at her property to 200 feet would decrease the value of her land.

"I'm a single parent who has raised five children by myself in this town," she said. "My property is all I have to give to my children. I have six acres and I've had many offers to sell over they years. I've always said no because I wanted my children to have the property. I've paid for new schools and libraries and what do I get in return? A loss of value on my property? I'd like to see the 200-foot frontage requirement dropped. It's ludicrous."

Callahan said he is concerned that Froio's taxes will go up along with everyone else's in town if there is more residential development in Cohasset.

"More residential development is not necessarily good thing," he said. "The houses we've seen going up lately are of the $600,000 or $700,000 variety. Even if those houses generate $10,000 in tax revenue, if the families living in them have school-age children, the town could actually lose money. It costs the town approximately $6,300 per year to educate a child. If a new family moving in has two kids, the town is already behind the eight-ball."

With an already tight municipal budget, Callahan said taxpayers should be wary of increased residential development.

"Last spring's town meeting made it very clear that residents are very concerned about their taxes," he said. "If you look at the hew houses being built, its primarily young people with families moving in. Even on a $700,000 house, the taxes aren't enough to pay for sending two kids to school."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said her board should not be placing a zoning article on the warrant for the special town meeting.

"I don't support this board doing the work of other elected boards," she said. "The planning board takes care of zoning articles."

Callahan said selectmen have a responsibility to act in the best interests of the town.

"We don't have a narrow jurisdiction," he said. "We're essentially the executive officers of the town and we're elected to set policy for the town. We've certainly interjected ourselves into the school budget discussions. That's the jurisdiction of the school committee, but we involve ourselves because it affects the financial health of the town."

Support American Service members

Christmas is a time for family and celebration, but our service members deployed overseas do not have the luxury of spending time with their families. To ensure that members of the United States Armed Forces are not forgotten, the American Red Cross asks for your support in raising morale and participating in the "Quality-of-Life" campaign.

The "Quality-of-Life" campaign will provide service members overseas with items that they cannot get where they are stationed. Simple items such as hot chocolate and cider mixes, tea bags, coffee, candy, toiletries, current VHS movies, board games, blank holiday cards, stationary, and letters are greatly appreciated by members of armed forces.

Items can be sent to the following locations:

Kosovo: American Red Cross, Attn: Station Manager, Task Force Falcon (Forward), Camp Bondsteel, APO AE 09340-0001.

Bosnia: American Red Cross, Station Manager, HHC 10th Mountain (Tuzla Main, Eagle Base), Operation Joint Forge, APO AE 09789-0001.

South Shore Friends work to attack area's 'horrendous' situation

the Homeless.

She explained the main premise of her job entails housing the homeless in various shelters the organization uses, and also in private homes around the area. The organization's use of private homes is something Newell refers to as "faith home sharing," a concept she says is innovative throughout organizations such as hers on the South Shore.

"The home sharing is a unique thing," she said. "I don't know of an organization around the South Shore that does it." Newell said when she first started getting involved in her line of work in the early 1980's, she was actually one of these private home hosts.

"After I did it," she said, "we knew other families were capable of doing it too."

Of the faith home sharing concept, she said "even though it is the natural thing for people to do, it's not being done." Most of the private homes which host homeless families are in such towns as Weymouth and Holbrook, but some of the homes are as far as Dedham, New Bedford, and Fall River. Newell said sometimes, moving to communities which are far away is even tougher for homeless people and families who have lived on the South Shore their whole lives.

"Our [homeless] families realize they may not be able to live where they were before," Newell said. "That's hard for them, but they have no choice but to accept it.

"A big part of my job is to oversee our goals of providing enough homes," she added, "and matching up these [homeless] families with the right homes."

Newell added that in addition to putting homeless people into private homes, the organization also houses them in various shelters South Shore Friends works with such as the Faith Nazarene Church in Hingham and the First Parish Church in Cohasset.

"They're churches that have shelters within them," Newell explained.

Newell said there is a definite lack of space for all the homeless families, and the process of getting all of her "candidates" sheltered is indeed a difficult one. She added the process of "matching up" homeless individuals with host families is also a challenging task.

"We receive referrals from the welfare department [about particular homeless candidates]," Newell said, "and then we interview those people. After that, we decide which host family would be the best for them."

All housing which South Shore Friends provides is temporary, Newell said. She noted a given homeless person or family stays within the organization's provided housing until they can afford an apartment of their own. However, Newell said, finding an affordable apartment is a difficult task in itself, and that is where one of the major problems lies.

Another problem Newell pointed out is the concept of these homeless people actually moving into a given shelter, a process which she noted can often be disorienting.

"We try to make it as smooth as possible for them," Newell said.

Newell said her efforts are complimented by the various staff members of South Shore Friends, and a large number of volunteers. However, she said, more community assistance is needed to further assist her organization, and other ones like it.

"Communities in general are not really taking responsibility for the [homelessness] problem," she said, noting most communities in the area do not concentrate enough on providing low income housing. "It's their responsibility to have housing for all levels available. There's a void in many communities, and a resistance. You need that kind of diversity, and it seems that people don't realize that we have to make provisions for those who are less fortunate."

She added, "People need to support the efforts of those who are willing to develop low-income housing in given communities, like fair housing committees in various towns. Communities definitely need to be more welcoming of these kinds of projects, because the overall atmosphere is just negative."

Although the main concentration of South Shore Friends is housing the homeless in private homes or other shelters, the group also initiates other programs such as charity events, fund raisers, and the like.

Some programs include providing counseling and special needs education for the people who need it, and holding "clothing closets" to provide free clothes.

Newell said her organization also has a "furniture bank" in North Weymouth which enables homeless people to acquire sofas, chairs, and other types of furniture.

"The public donates furniture, and we give it to the families we represent, or other needy families," she said. "First, we help our families, but then we help other ones [outside the organization]."

Newell said during Thanksgiving, a large number of turkey dinners were donated to the organization by the public. Although most of the dinners were given to families within the South Shore Friends program, other families in need around the area also received some.

Newell said her organization also sponsors a Christmas party for the homeless, and also lets the public adopt various families' "wish lists."

"A lot of groups want to help in some way," Newell said, "and adopting a homeless family's wish list is one of them," she said. She explained the process entails a given family buying gifts for a homeless family based on a list which the latter presents to Newell's organization.

Some of the groups around the area who adopt the wish lists include various businesses, real estate organizations, Scouts, and schools.

"Last year, more than 230 wish lists were served," Newell said. "People can just call us, and say they want to adopt one of the wish lists."

In regards to public donations to the organization's causes Newell said "We're always happy to receive donations. It's been very gratifying to see how generous people have been over the years. It always amazes me, not only through the holiday season, but all year long."

She noted most of the organization's funding comes through donations from the public.

As with most jobs, there comes triumphs and tragedies. For Newell, witnessing the ups and downs of the human spirit is an everyday experience.

"The hardest part of my job is to see the impact homelessness has on the lives of children," she said. "The older the child is when that kind of crisis occurs, the harder it is. For me, the whole situation overall is just heartbreaking, but watching children struggle is even sadder."

However, the gratification Newell receives from her job is something which she holds very close to her heart.

"Some of the people who come to us never had a real home," she said. "I think the greatest part of my job is playing a part in getting them a stable home. It's a thrill to provide a small piece happiness in the lives of these people. Of course, in matching these [homeless] people up with homes, there's no sure thing. You just do the best you can, and say a lot of prayers."

For information on being a host family, adopting Christmas wish lists, or simply asking questions, call Newell at (781) 340-1604.

To donate to the Gifts of Hope campaign, send your tax-deductible check, made out to one of the three charities noted above, and send to Anne Rodwell, CNC, 165 Enterprise Drive, Marshfield, MA. 02050. We will be running a list of donors in the newspaper so please indicate on a note if you wish to remain anonymous.

River Marine Railway still chugs along

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The boat yard at the Mill River Marine Railway Inc., has proved amazingly resilient given that it was evicted in 1994. At the end of 1999 the boat yard remains open and in the same spot it has occupied for approximately 30 years. And as for the future of the boatyard — well, who knows?

"As far as I know, the eviction is still in appeal and on hold," said Michael McNabb, a boat-builder and hull specialist who does subcontracting work for the boatyard. "The last visit to the [appeals] court was in the spring. The property has been up for sale. Some architects came out and inspected the property for interested buyers."

William Hanney, president of Stoughton-based Entertainment cinemas still owns the waterfront property that includes the boatyard, some other businesses, and some residential units. Hanney bought the property in 1993 for $350,000 at a Bank of Brockton auction. One of the terms of that sale stipulated that the property be free of tenants. Initially, that seemed to indicate that the boatyard —owned by Frank Carey — would have to vacate the premises. Hanney said he planned to build a large, private home for himself. But he abandoned that plan because of opposition from neighbors. Instead, he proposed a plan to allow the Lobster Pound store to remain, and to build a smaller boat yard, three condominiums and some retail space.

Carey refused to leave, and in 1994 Dedham Superior Court Judge Elizabeth Donovan upheld the eviction. Carey appealed the eviction, which marked the beginning of a series of events that have stalled Hanney's plan to renovate the property. Fisherman and boaters have voiced their opposition to Hanney's plan.

Hanney has also met resistance from state officials over a Chapter 91 permit to conduct business and perform building renovations in a water-related area. Carey operates his boatyard with a Chapter 91 permit which allows private, water-dependent uses on public waterways. The area between the annual mean high tide and low tide watermark is public property, and Carey operates part of his yard within this area. Chapter 91 is a state law addressing waterways, and permits used to be granted for 99 years for a small fee. In the mid 1980s, the Department of Environmental Protection took over the Chapter 91 permitting process and issued permits only for 10-30 years and under a different payment plan. DEP, however, grants 99-year amnesty licenses for landowners proposing renovations that make no changes to existing water-related uses. Hanney's attorneys argued that his proposed renovations would not alter existing water-related uses. State officials from DEP and Coastal Zone Management have indicated that evicting the boatyard might constitute a change in use and grounds to deny the Chapter 91 permit.

Hanney also attempted to build the condos by claiming that a building on the property had been used in the past for residential purposes. Hanney's attorneys argued that the condos would be consistent with existing usage. But state officials have not been swayed by that argument.

"The apartment they are referring to was not occupied during the timeframe for the amnesty application," McNabb said. "Basically, he was applying for amnesty that did not exist. Chapter 91 amnesty still has not been granted."

The future of the boatyard is still unclear. McNabb said several buyers have expressed interest in the property. Hanney does not appear to be actively pursuing his condo and renovation project at this time.

"The boatyard is doing great, and going gangbusters," McNabb said. "Other than that, things are pretty dead as far as the condos and the rest of the project."

Peter Eely, attorney for Mill River Marine, said his client is waiting for a hearing on the appeal that is slated for after the first of the year.

Hanney's attorney, Donald Kaiser of Brockton, said his client always wanted to make the site "mixed use" with a lobster pound, ship's chandelry and residences. He said Hanney is also awaiting a decision by the appeals court.

Skippers break out holiday tie

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

For the first time in seven years, the Cohasset High football team had more to lose in its annual Thanksgiving Day game against Hull. The Skippers, after all, put a stop to the Pirates' annoying eight-game win streak in the holiday rivalry by pulling out the victory last season at home. And with just one win this season, Hull was going to pull out all stops to end, what has been a hugely frustrating season, on a high note.

What's more, Cohasset had to travel to hostile Finlayson Field on Hull Gut, making the prospects for heavy winds, rain and cold, raw conditions weigh heavily in the Pirates' favor.

Save for a strong wind, the weather conditions never came into play as the South Shore League rivals battled to a 14-14 tie in front of a crowd of 2,000. The stalemate left Cohasset with a 3-6-1 record while Hull finished up at 1-7-2.

"I don't think anybody had anything fall into their laps," said Skippers coach Tony Rolfe, minutes after the game's conclusion. "It was exactly what I expected; no surprises here."

Neither Rolfe nor Hull head coach John Anderson were "surprised" by the play of Cohasset running back Dan Trowers. The leading ground gainer in the SSL, the speedy junior accounted for both of the Skippers' touchdowns and rushed for more than 140 yards.

Anderson knew one of the keys to the game would be to contain Trowers and stop him from making the big play against the Pirates. Trowers, though, has been stinging teams all season with his ability to break tackles and outsprint defensive backfields, and Hull wasn't spared from a highlight-reel play.

With Cohasset holding onto a 7-6 lead late in the third quarter, Trowers took a handoff from Skipper quarterback Jason Brown and surged quickly through a hole off left tackle and raced 53 yards for the score. Chris Golden split the uprights with his second extra-point kick of the game for a 14-6 lead.

Both coaches marveled at Trowers's Thanksgiving Day performance on the field.

"Trowers is just awesome," said Anderson.

"We just look for ways to get him the ball," added Rolfe.

The Pirates sent Cohasset a message early that they had every intention of defeating the Skippers on their home turf. Halfback Mike McNamara broke a 50-yard run on Hull's first play of the game, setting up fullback Matt Frazier's touchdown plunge from the two yard line, just 55 seconds into the first quarter. The Pirates' conversion play failed, but Hull had the early lead it was looking for, 6-0.

The six-point advantage, though, was gone in a hurry as the Skippers put together a successful offensive series of their own. On the ensuing kickoff, Hull was assessed a personal foul penalty, giving Cohasset the ball at midfield. Brown proceeded to connect with Dan Mulligan for a 45-yard touchdown and Golden nailed the point-after kick for the 7-6 lead with a full 8:16 remaining in the quarter.

After Cohasset failed to move the ball effectively on its next series, the Pirates garnered excellent field position when the wind knocked the Skippers' punt down at their own 9-yard line. Cohasset defensive end Derek Thayer brought down McNamara for a five-yard loss and Trowers, playing at his defensive back position, dropped Hull quarterback Rob Scully for a loss of five more yards. Hull was forced to attempt a 35-yard field goal, but Tom Fleck's kick was well off.

Cohasset running back Daniel Trowers had another big day for the Skippers against Hull.

Hull continued its stubborn play on defense, led by defensive tackles Fleck and Brendan McKee. Trowers, though, was starting to warm up with a number of broken tackle runs that put him well into the Pirates' backfield. Trowers ended the first half with a 15-yard run where he broke away from a pair of Hull tacklers and deked his way past another.

Neither team was able to do much offensively until Trowers's TD run with 37 seconds remaining in the third quarter put the Skippers up by eight points. Hull's defense saved another possible touchdown when safety Steve Glavin and linebacker Rob Munn leaped high to deflect Brown's pass intended for wide receiver Nick Bolster.

The Hull passing game that Rolfe knew would be more prevalent than in past seasons came alive halfway through the fourth quarter. After Glavin picked up two yards on a rush, Scully hit tight end Chris Rand on a quick out pattern for an 11-yard gain. Scully went to Rand on the very next play, this time for 22 yards. With the ball at Cohasset's 23-yard line, Scully hooked up with his favorite receiver again and Rand raced into the end zone with 5:31 left. Cohasset called a time-out prior to the conversion play, but halfback Matt Neal busted his way through the line for the score, tying the game at 14.

Dean and Mitchell McNary try to stay warm at the football game.

The Skippers continued to threaten with just over three minutes remaining. Brown picked up seven yards on a keep then hit Bolster for a five-yard gain. Trowers dashed 12 yards to give Cohasset a first down on Hull's 35-yard line.

Defensive tackle Jason O'Hare pulled Trowers down in the backfield for a loss of four, but Trowers scampered eight yards on the very next play. Brown couldn't find an open receiver on the next play and ran for two yards before being pulled down. Faced with a fourth-and-15 from the 41 with 1:49 left, Hull's Paul Dunn intercepted Brown's pass to end the Cohasset scoring bid.

The Skippers had the crowd on the edge of its seat when Scully's pass on the second play from scrimmage was intercepted by defensive back Kevin Andrews after the ball popped loose on a hard hit to Rand.

Cohasset moved the ball well with an eight-yard completion to Andrews and another to Trowers. The Skippers lost the battle against the clock and time ran out on Cohasset and its shot to pull out the win.

Rolfe said he was happy with the way his team played and was already looking ahead to next year.

"We had to start off from scratch this year" Rolfe said. "We have some work to do. I don't have any problems with this team. I really don't. The kids know what we have to do to get better."

Cohasset Harborfest committee disbands

Donates remaining funds to a variety of town groups

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

. The Cohasset Harborfest is no more.

That realization became official last week when the Steering Committee of Cohasset Harborfest, which organized the annual weekend event, decided to disband.

Harborfest was held on the same June weekend as the South Shore Art Center's Festival on the Common from 1990-1998. Last summer it was held earlier in June.

Harborfest committee member Jack Worley said the event wasn't as popular as committee members had hoped.

"It didn't really generate enough interest to stand on its own," he said. "Running it in conjunction with the art center also became difficult because the town got really crowded. Between parking and the use of the common, it just got too crowded for both events to be held on the same weekend."

Harborfest events included a Friday night luminaria, chowder fest, pancake breakfasts, musical events, a blessing of the fleet, and a parade.

Committee member Bob Martin said the event started rather informally in 1990.

"It was formed basically by us and the late Rev. Ed Atkinson, the former minister of First Parish Church," he said of the committee, which included Jim Lagrotteria, Don Harrold, and the Rev. Gary Ritts. "We thought it would be a great way for the town organizations to participate in something together. Town organizations have their own fish to fry, and we thought it would be a unique chance to come together."

From donations and the sale of Harborfest buttons, the committee had $3,400 left when it decided to disband. The committee decided to disburse the funds among the Teen Center, Council on Elder Affairs, Cohasset Historical Society, South Shore Habitat for Humanity, and the Rusty Skippers Marching Band.

The Rusty Skippers, formerly known as the Harborfest Marching Band, was conceived by Atkinson in 1995 as a town marching band that could march in the event's parade.

Harborfest events included a Friday night luminaria, chowder fest, pancake breakfasts, musical events, a blessing of the fleet, and a parade.

"We thought Ed had a great idea, and so we all agreed," Martin said. "It worked so well. Ed was the drum major that first year, and he had a wonderful time."

Atkinson passed away later that year, but the band continued through First Parish. Flute player Betts Murray said Deer Hill instrumental music director Steve Biagini helped keep the band going.

"He helped us with music, got us instruments, and was extremely generous with his time," she said. "He and the music specialists at the high school helped us from the very beginning."

At first, the band played only the Harborfest, but they have played other town events during the last couple of years.

"Last year, we played for the Christmas tree lighting, and some of us even played while riding on a fire truck," she said. "This year, we played in the Memorial Day parade, which was probably the most meaningful for our group. We really felt like the hometown band and it was nice to be able to honor the town's veterans. We played the Star-Spangled Banner with students from Deer Hill at the War Memorial. That was very special because some members of the band played alongside their children."

The 35 members of the Rusty Skippers range in age from high school students to senior citizens. The 'Skippers' is an homage to the town's high school nickname, while 'Rusty' notes how far removed some members are from their days in high school or college bands.

Murray said the group has more musical ability than its lighthearted moniker might imply.

"I know our name says we're 'Rusty,' but we're better than that, she said. "Some of the people in the group are very, very talented."

Thanks to the donation from the now-defunct Harborfest committee, the rusty Skippers may have more opportunities to show off that talent.

"We'd like to play more frequently, and hopefully that money will contribute toward us becoming an ongoing town organization," she said. "We might also use it to buy some sort of uniform."

The band will no longer play in the Harborfest, where it began, however. Despite the fact that it will no longer be an annual event, Martin enjoyed it while it lasted.

"We had some fun with it," he said.

Sheriff presents PALS grant

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti recently gave a $1,000 check to the Cohasset Police Department to be used for the PALS programs—PALS means Police Assisting Local Schools and is a DARE-like program in Cohasset. Police Chief Brian Noonan and PALS Officer Lisa Matos received the check at a luncheon at the Norfolk County Correctional Center.

"DARE has been an effective tool in persuading our young people to stay off drugs and avoid violence," Sheriff Bellotti said. "Like other community policing resources, DARE has played a role in our declining crime rates."

At a recent luncheon attended by most of the 28 police chiefs and their DARE officers in Norfolk County, Bellotti distributed checks for $1,000 to each department.The sheriff's office donated a total of $28,000 to DARE programs throughout the county.

Minors arrested at Milliken Field

Responding to complaints about ongoing disturbances and vandalism at Milliken Field, police arrested five Cohasset teenagers at about 6:50 p.m. last Wednesday in the dugout at the field.

The youths were found with several cans of Budweiser, a fifth of Captain Morgan rum and a half-gallon jug of Southern Comfort whiskey.

Arrested and charged with minor transporting alcohol and public drinking, which is a violation of town by-laws, were: Matthew J. Pescatore, 17, of 12 Lantern Lane; Nicholas T. Pestone, 17, of 69 Nichols Road; Krysten Taylor Considine, 17, of 8 Forest Ave.; Kerry Ann McCarthy, 17, of 155 Fairoaks Lane and a 16-year-old juvenile.

"Teens partying and leaving a mess is a constant problem up there," Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Police received two more calls about subsequent disturbances at the field which is off Bancroft Road that night but were too tied up booking the five teens to make more arrests.

Nevertheless, Noonan said in light of the Halloween night ruckus when about 100 teens wreaked havoc in the center of town, police will take a hard line with lawbreakers.

"It's going to be zero tolerance from now on," he said.

Teen retaliation is suspected

Police think a broken picture window at Cohasset Hardware in the village was caused by an act of retaliation.

A Cohasset teen, who is the suspect in the vandalism, allegedly purchased a funnel and plastic tubing at the hardware store last Friday to make a "beer bong," a device to get beer into the body faster, police said.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said the store owner later put "two and two together" and broke up a teenage party being held at a residence that afternoon by contacting the homeowner at work. The store owner discovered the broken window Saturday morning and reported the incident to police. Replacing the window will cost about $1,500.

"She tried correcting the situation and as a result may have paid a price," Jackson said.

Reached by telephone, the store owner — who asked that her name not be used — declined to comment.

Vandalism at Deer Hill

Police are investigating incidents of vandalism at Deer Hill that occurred over the holiday weekend. Sgt. Robert Jackson said a window was broken at the school and the lawn was torn up by a vehicle "doing a donut."

Garden club's house tour next week

"Deck the Halls," is the theme for this year's biennial holiday house tour sponsored by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

Five beautiful homes will be decorated with a musical theme and open for viewing Wednesday, Dec. 8, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The featured homes and themes are:

"Let Heaven and Nature Sing," this home, located within sight of the ocean, is contemporary and informal with more than 60 undraped windows to bring in nature's treasures in every season."

"The Holly and Ivy" is a recently renovated Summer Street Victorian home. Tiles made in Chelsea in the 19th century surround the three original fireplaces. A circular herb garden and a woodland cottage are backyard focal points.

"The Twelve Days of Christmas" is a South Main Street residence styled after an English carriage-house. The decor is eclectic, beginning with a Kenya-inspired foyer.

"Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men" is an expanded 1904 New England farmhouse in the village. Renovations, meticulously planned by architect owner, include a kitchen featuring Italian marbled work surfaces and a working fireplace with a roasting spit, a living room with a paneled fireplace and a drafting-media room.

"Angels We Have Heard on High" is a Nicols Road home set high on a ledge overlooking Little Harbor. Floor to ceiling windows offer views of the ocean and terraced landscaping leads down to the water. The contemporary home is furnished with antiques and heirlooms.

Tickets are available for $15 in advance at the Community Center, 3 North Main St., or by calling 383-9348. On the tour day, tickets will be $20 at the center or at the Congregational Church.

Proceeds from the house tour will be used to support the numerous projects of the Garden Club, which include historic restoration and preservation, civic beautification, scholarship grant and community education programs. The club also contributes time and money to various environmental and conservation agencies. The tour is a walking tour for adults only and is not wheelchair-accessible.

Making the grade

MCAS results top state average

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The latest MCAS results are good news for Cohasset.

Cohasset students exceeded the state averages across the board finishing 12th overall and its 10th-grade students scored better than their counterparts in any other public school system in the state.

"The Boston Globe called to congratulate us," Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said Tuesday.

But rather than being ecstatic about the news, Malvey was reflective.

"That's great, we're very happy with it (results)," he said. But Malvey was quick to share the credit with the community.

"People do value education here, despite what we're going through," he said. Malvey said educational expectations are high in Cohasset.

"We live and breathe it," he said. "It is as simple as putting your shoes on in the morning and having dinner at night."

MCAS testing is supposed to help school districts align their curriculum so that certain subject matter is covered at a particular grade level no matter what town the student lives in.

More than 200,000 students in the fourth, eighth and tenth grades took the test last spring as part of the requirement of the 1993 Education Reform Act. This is the second year the test has been administered.

The Class of 2003 will be the first class required to pass the MCAS as tenth-graders in order to graduate.

Malvey said MCAS results are being mailed to parents this week. Deer Hill will host a discussion on MCAS results from 8-9 p.m., Tuesday, Dec. 14. The middle-high school MCAS night had not been scheduled by press time.

At the school committee meeting that gets underway at 7:30 p.m., Dec. 16, the MCAS results will be discussed in depth with a full-blown comparison of this year's scores versus last year's, Malvey said.

School article sails through

Override is scheduled for Saturday

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

After months of debate on the merits of a project to renovate both Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle-High School, a vote on a $390,000 article for construction drawings of the project did not even warrant a hand count at Monday night's special town meeting.

The two-thirds majority necessary for a borrowing article easily approved the funds for construction drawings, yet one hurdle is left to climb before the money is appropriated.

A final vote on the $390,000 will occur at Saturday's override election. That election is necessary because the future school construction project will have to be funded outside the limits of Proposition 2 1/2.

Because the whole project will be paid for by overrides, this $390,000 has to be paid for the same way," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "If an override on the entire project failed and we didn't do an override this time, the town would be left holding the bag for $390,000. We don't have that money available in the budget."

While a two-thirds majority was required for passage of the article at the special town meeting, only a simple majority is needed at the override election. Polls at Town Hall are open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Absentee ballots are available until noon on Friday at the Town Clerk's office.

"We've only gotten 25 absentee ballots back so far," said town clerk Marion Douglas on Wednesday. "Usually we have more absentee ballots back than this. At the last election, we had a 29 percent turnout, with 5,228 voters registered. I hope we at least get that, but I'm predicting a low turnout."

Town accountant Michael Buckley said the impact of the $390,000 on the tax rate would be minimal if it is part of a larger construction project.

Town approves four new firefighters

Cohasset should have paramedic service by January

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Come January, Cohasset should have paramedic service.

Voters approved a $100,000 article to hire four new firefighter/paramedics at Monday night's special town meeting, opening the door for the fire department to be able to offer paramedic service in its ambulance.

The state requires that a town have a minimum of three paramedics to offer paramedic service. The department already had one firefighter/paramedic, Laura Morrison. The addition of the four new paramedics would bring Cohasset's total to five, making the town eligible to operate the service.

Though the fire department has to apply for a waiver from the state to offer paramedic service, Town Manager Mark Haddad sensed the process would be completed within a month.

"I'm psyched," Haddad said Tuesday. "I signed all the paperwork this morning to bring the new paramedics on board. I interviewed all of the candidates last month, but they understood it was up to town meeting. We need to get the waiver from the state and have the new firefighters take their physicals, but I expect to have them on board by the first week of January."

"I'm thrilled that we can offer this service on our own ambulance for about the same cost as we've been spending on the fire department."
Selectman Ronnie McMorris

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, the loudest voice on the board in favor of hiring the new firefighter/paramedics, was also excited following the town meeting vote.

"I'm thrilled that we can offer this service on our own ambulance for about the same cost as we've been spending on the fire department," she said.

The new firefighter/paramedics should help reduce an overtime budget in that department which has been a source of concern for Haddad. He provided voters at town meeting with a cost analysis of hiring four firefighter/paramedics, saying the additional manpower would put an end to skyrocketing overtime expenditures.

"So far this fiscal year, the town has expended $93,000 in overtime through five months," he wrote. "Based on current trends, the town can expect to spend an additional $100,000 in overtime in FY (Fiscal Year) 2000. That additional overtime money can be more effectively spent by hiring four additional firefighter/paramedics. Not only will this provide additional manpower, but it would provide better medical service to the residents of Cohasset."

Haddad said the cost of the four firefighter/paramedics in FY 2001 will be approximately $190,000.

Though bringing on four additional firefighter/paramedics should substantially reduce overtime in the fire department, their importance as paramedics may be more crucial to the town.

Morrison had been prepared to speak in favor of the hiring of the new firefighter/paramedics at Monday's town meeting, but the article was passed without debate. She said paramedic service would allow for improved care of Cohasset's residents.

Dealing with tragedies, overcoming the odds

Local woman beats death and two instances of homelessness

GIFTS of HOPE
YOUR COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER CARES

[Ed. Note: The name of the main subject of the following story was changed to protect her identity.]

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Beth Rogers of Cohasset has experienced the true meaning of loss. Once, she almost experienced death.

She has hit life's rock bottom by twice finding herself homeless during the course of her 40 years on earth.

Now, despite her personal tragedies, Rogers is rebuilding her life, her body, and her past. What's more, she is doing what nobody ever thought she would: living.

"When a lot of people think of the homeless, they tend to think of someone who lost all they own because of things like drinking and drugs. That is not always the case."
— Beth Rogers

Rogers said she owes much of her current stability to The Friends of the Homeless of the South Shore, an organization which tries to place homeless people in private homes, and equips many of the area's less fortunate people with such novelties as food and furniture.

"[Rogers'] story is one of God's true miracles," said Friends of the Homeless executive director Dorothy Newell.

For Rogers, the word "miracle" is an understatement, because overcoming two instances of homelessness was something she thought she'd never do.

"When a lot of people think of the homeless," she said, "they tend to think of someone who lost all they own because of things like drinking and drugs. That is not always the case."

She added, "The first time I became homeless, I was renting a house with an option to buy. The landlord went bankrupt, but the thing was, the landlord never told me that. I woke up one Saturday morning to an auction in my front yard."

Rogers said her landlord informed her she had a month to leave the premises. Rogers had no other option, she said, because she had already paid the landlord

Kindergarten bus improvements discussed

At last Thursday's school committee meeting, superintendent Edward Malvey said it will cost $3,000 to add a third bus to the kindergarten bus route.

That route has been averaging nearly an hour, which members of the school committee have said is far too long for five year-olds to sit on a bus.

"With a third bus, we could probably shave a good 15 to 20 minutes off the route, even if we students back on the run whose parents drive them to school," Malvey said. "Unfortunately, we don't have $3,000 available in the budget to do it now."

School committee member Betsy Connolly said programs such as school transportation suffer when budgets are tight.

"This is where the budget cuts really make me angry," she said. "Maybe we could have some sort of fundraiser to get this money."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said a third bus will likely be added when the school department budget is revisited.

"It's safety to say that this is a high priority of the school committee," he said.

Osgood security lights to stay on

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the exterior lights outside of Osgood will stay on for security reasons, while a bank of indoor security lights will cost more to turn off than they do to stay on.

Some residents have asked if the overnight lights are costing the town money, but DeGiacomo said the costs of operating them are minimal.

"The indoor lights are energy efficient and it would cost $1,000 to fix them," he said. "It would take years to make that money back."

School committee member Stephanie Noble said citizens concerned about the cost of operating the lights would be better served if the lights remain on.

"The people asking the questions are concerned about costs, and we've found the costs are minimal," she said. "We've found that the $1,000 to fix the lights may not be money well spent."

DeGiacomo said there were other options if citizens still want the lights turned off.

"We could go to the advisory committee for a $1,000 transfer from free cash," he said.

Grocery stores may open at 6 a.m.

Citizens at Monday's special town meeting approved a bylaw change to allow retail food stores to open at 6 a.m.

The previous bylaw did not allow such stores to open until 7 a.m. The change came as the result of a citizen's petition article brought by Tedeschi's manager Crystal Callahan of Hull. Callahan wished to open an hour earlier in order to serve morning commuters and other early risers.

Selectman Merle Brown suggested an amendment to the article which would only allow stores with five or less employees to open at 6 a.m., but withdrew the amendment when it received lukewarm support from the assembled citizens.

"Why can't we just vote on the article as it is," said Michael Dick, 3 Arrowwood Road. "Some may feel the large stores should be able to open earlier as well."

Brown had been concerned about early deliveries to Shaw's and Stop & Shop, but advisory committee chairman Dick Avery said deliveries will still begin at 7 a.m.

"This bylaw change only affects when the stores can open," Avery said. "It does not deal with deliveries."

Teen center coordinator approved

Town meeting voters approved the transfer of $8,750 to the youth resources committee for the purpose of hiring a teen center coordinator.

Recreation director Jack Worley said the youth resources committee is shooting for a grand opening during Christmas vacation so college students who worked on the project may attend.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the youth of the town need a place to call their own.

"The effort expended by these youngsters in getting this place going has been tremendous," she said. "This place will be a town resource, because there's not a heck of a lot for kids to do in this town."

Youth resources committee member Anthony Carbone said a coordinator is essential to the viability of the teen center.

"Volunteers get burned out," he said. "It's a tough job watching these kids. The teen center will not succeed without a full-time coordinator."

Now that a coordinator will be hired, selectman Ronnie McMorris is excited about a grand opening in the near future.

"I'm working with four high school juniors who are working on the opening for their community service project," she said. "They're putting together an activity survey for middle school kids. The kids need a place to get together in town and now they'll have one."

$30K Town history article approved

Town meeting approved $30,000 Monday night to pay for the production and writing costs of volume three of the Town History.

Volume three will cover the period from 1950 to 2000.

The volume is being written by Jackie Dormitzer and edited by Molly Hochkeppel. The town history committee also plans to produce a CD-Rom edition of the book.

Citizens appropriate new fire vehicles

Far more than the two-thirds majority needed voted to approve borrowing $360,000 in order to purchase a new pumper truck and multi-service truck for the fire department.

239 citizens voted in favor of the article, with only 25 citizens voting against.

Fire chief Roger Lincoln had told selectmen of the need for three pumping engines. Before Monday's appropriation, the department only had two, which Lincoln said could hurt the town's insurance rating.

"We cannot meet ISO (Insurance Service Organization) requirements for insurance purposes with two pumping engines," he said.

The new pumping engine will replace a 1979 model, and will be pressed into service immediately.

"This will become the new front-line pumper," Lincoln said. "That will allow us to get more life out of the other two pumping engines."

Zoning article is voted down

A citizen's petition article which would have rezoned the light industry district along Route 3A as highway business was defeated at Monday night's special town meeting.

Water commissioner John McNabb, the impetus behind the article, wanted to prevent landfills in Cohasset by removing the light industry district. Landfills are a permitted use in light industry districts, but are prohibited in areas zoned as highway business.

"The only reason I'm not trying to prohibit landfills in town altogether is that a 1987 state law doesn't allow us to do that," McNabb said. "This town has made a decision to recycle and there's no need for a landfill in Cohasset."

Planning board member Robert Sturdy said he does not favor a change in zoning aimed solely at prohibiting landfills.

"When we start manipulating zoning for non-zoning purposes, it's an inappropriate use of the zoning bylaws," he said. "I'm hesitant to say there won't be a need for a light industry district in Cohasset."

John Seavey, owner of Seavey Engineering in Pembroke, which used to be in the light industry district, said Cohasset should not lose opportunities for future manufacturing in an attempt to prevent landfills.

"This is a quality of life issue," Seavey said. "How many people in this room would like to work in a computer start-up or biotech company in town? I appreciate what Mr. McNabb is trying to do, but there has to be another way to do it."

Voters agreed with Seavey's sentiment, voting down the proposed zoning change.

Court sides with MBTA in Greenbush lawsuit

Federal judge now to hear case

By Carol Britton Meyer and Mary Ford
STAFF WRITERS

The MBTA took the lead in its legal battle with Hingham over the Greenbush project with last week's clerk magistrate decision in federal court siding with the state agency.

But Hingham isn't about to surrender.

The town will exercise its right to have the matter heard by a federal judge, selectmen chairman Michael Holden said.

Holden, an attorney, said the 1996 lawsuit – which alleges the MBTA "segmented" Greenbush from the other two Old Colony projects to avoid federal environmental review – is unique.

"The clerk magistrate is not someone who is really in much of a position to take on a novel issue with any sort of authority," Holden said.

MBTA spokesman Joseph Pescaturo said the MBTA was not surprised by the ruling.

"We have said all along that the T acted within the law when it decided not to apply federal funds to the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Line," he said.

Greenbush, which has been mired in controversy and feasibility studies for well over a decade, is the third leg of the Old Colony Project, whose Middleboro and Plymouth lines started service in September 1997.

Hingham filed the lawsuit in 1996 accusing the MBTA of trying to skirt strict environmental laws under the Transportation Act by changing tracks, so-to-speak, part way through the process — deciding to use state money to pay for the project rather than federal dollars. The intent of the lawsuit was to make sure the project would be subject to federal environmental review, with the hope of forcing the T to look at alternatives to at-grade rail through Hingham.

But in a 25-page decision, Chief U.S. Magistrate Robert B. Collings said, "the MBTA has never applied for, nor has the FTA (Federal Transit Authority) allocated, any federal funding at any time for the Greenbush line."

"We have said all along that the T acted within the law when it decided not to apply federal funds to the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Line."
— Joseph Pescaturo, MBTA spokesman

Collings went on to say that it doesn't follow that because the federal government participated in the main (leg from Braintree to South Station), Middleboro and Plymouth lines that any reconstruction of the 17-mile Greenbush line is a federal action.

Hingham Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan said he wished the decision had gone in the town's favor.

"I'm not happy about the recommendation," he said. "I would have preferred another one. We're in the sixth inning of this (Greenbush) proposal with the score tied, and it would have put us in a very commanding position if we had received a positive recommendation."

Holden explained that Hingham will submit a brief outlining where "we think the clerk magistrate missed the mark." The federal judge reviewing the matter could take several months to render a decision. Once that happens, both the town and MBTA have the right to appeal.

"The issue is whether or not the Greenbush project was improperly segmented from the whole Old Colony project," Macmillan said. "Our argument is that this is all one project. Magistrate Collings avoided dealing with the segmentation issue as demonstrated by the history of the entire project."

Nevertheless, Macmillan is hopeful a decision will ultimately be made in favor of the Town of Hingham.

"If the Federal Transit Authority were in the picture, there would be stronger environmental laws (to abide by) and that would be a slam-dunk for the tunnel (under Hingham Square)," he said.

Pescaturo said while legal challenges never help, the project is moving ahead. Current estimates are that Greenbush will be rolling by 2005.

"We're proceeding as if everything is a go for Greenbush," he said. "We'll let the court matters handle themselves but we're going to proceed as if Greenbush is a reality." Pescaturo went on to say that the MBTA sees the decision as good news for the project because a "non-partisan individual has come down on our side here.

"It's a real morale boost for us," he said.

While the MBTA breathed a sigh of relief following Collings' recommendation, it still has a number of hurdles to overcome, including determining whether or not a costly tunnel should be built under Hingham Square as well as an extensive historic review process.

The cost of the Greenbush battle

As of Nov. 9, Hingham has spent more than $331,000 fighting the proposed restoration of the Greenbush line through the heart of its downtown.

Voters there approved a special town meeting article in 1995 to appropriate $100,000 to fight the project, other funds have come from the legal budget and surplus revenue.

Expenditures so far total $331,850 and include:

•$81,963 to Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan from 1997-1999;

•$11,619 to consultants Fannin & Lehner relative to addressing the issue of the National Register Historic District, which would be affected by rail restoration; noise consultants Cambridge Acoustical; and engineering firm Horsely & Whitten, which performed a study on Town Brook as it relates to Greenbush;

•$9,000 for a study of the proposed rail restoration project conducted by Harvard University;

•$27,000 for lobbyist services;

•$26,363 to Andrea Ferster, Hingham's attorney relative to Greenbush; and •$18,533 to Fannin & Lehner, historical consultants.

MBTA spokesman Joe Pescaturo said the T has spent $260,000 in legal fees relating to Greenbush over the past 3-1/2 years. "$140,000 of that is directly attributable to the different motions filed by the town of Hingham," he said.

Euthanasia possible solution for feral cats

But health board to review legal opinion first

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The James Lane cat colony may get a stay of execution if the town can find an agency willing to take the animals.

In response to complaints from the neighbors, the health board recently voted 2-1 to trap the cats and have them put down if no one claims them after three days.

The ruling upset volunteers with CATS (Cats Around Town Society) who have spent time and money out of their own pockets to "manage" the colony. Their efforts have involved trapping the feral cats, having them altered and returning them to the same area.

But at its previous meeting, the health board thought it had a solution to the feral cat problem on James Lane that would be agreeable to the neighbors, who want the cats removed, and those advocating managed care. The board asked the volunteers to help trap the cats so they could be tagged, treated and neutered. The board offered $500 in seed money and wanted the cats quarantined for 30 days probably at the dump until a solution could be found.

But Gail Whitehouse of Ash Street and Elsa Miller of Reservoir Road who would volunteer to carry out the 30-day plan said they wanted no part of it.

They warned that removing the cats wouldn't work because more cats will move in to replace them. Only by spaying and neutering the animals and returning the cats to the same area can their population — currently estimated at 17 to 20 cats — be controlled, the women said.

So the health board took steps to resolve the neighbors' complaints and sent a letter to the five James Lane and Cushing Road residents who signed the Sept. 20 letter asking the health board to take action.

Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the letter asked the neighbors if they approved of the "managed care" plan. The board received two responses. Both respondents said they wanted the animals removed from the area and one said that euthanasia was the answer.

"The board wanted to find out if the plan to manage the feral colony in the James Lane area was acceptable to them as a means of settling their complaint," Godzik said. "At the time of the (Nov. 23) meeting, two of the neighbors disagreed with the plan."

The health board then took the stance of asking the animal control officer to trap the animals and have them put down, Godzik said.

The following day, Godzik said some of those trying to protect the cats sought legal advice. That's when Town Manager Mark Haddad conferred with town counsel who explained that the health board had the right to trap and euthanize the cats.

Haddad pointed out that the James Lane neighbors have rights and the health board is responding to their complaints that include property damage along with nuisance and odor problems.

In a letter to Godzik and the health board, Miller — founder of CATS and a proponent of the "managed colony" approach — said killing the animals is sending the wrong message.

"How can the town maintain integrity with this violent action?" she asked. "What kind of message does a mass killing send to the children of our town?"

She said the action would bring negative publicity and could cost the town thousands of dollars in legal fees.

Miller asked that the health board give CATS, which is a new group, more time to tackle the problem.

"Meet with us, in a non-adversarial forum, to discuss alternative methods that will solve the complaint," she wrote. "Our ultimate goals are the same."

Godzik said health board member Stephen Bobo cast the dissenting vote. Bobo felt the managed colony was a reasonable plan that should be given a chance, Godzik said.

The health board was slated to take the feral cat issue up again at its meeting last night after the Mariner went to press. Godzik said he wanted the health board to have a chance to review town counsel's letter on the issue before asking the animal control officer to go forward.

Godzik said the health office has contacted several agencies, but to no avail.

"The problem is these folks are inundated with cats," he said.

School article sails through town meeting

another question, it would only add about a penny to the tax rate," he said. "If it's part of a state-reimbursed construction project, then it would be paid back over 20 years and be reimbursed at 60 percent."

Buckley said the impact on the tax rate would be greater if the $390,000 for architectural drawings was not part of a school construction project.

"If that $390,000 had to stand on its own, it would have to be paid back much sooner," he said. "You can pay back state-reimbursed construction projects over 20 years, but engineering funds have to be paid back in five years. If you're looking at $80,000 a year for five years, the impact on the tax rate would be much more significant."

Should the override pass, a final plan for the renovation project will be brought to the annual town meeting in March. That project is estimated to cost approximately $41 million. With 60 percent state reimbursement, the cost to Cohasset will be approximately $16 million.

Though the school facilities committee must await the results of the override election before moving forward with architects from Strekalovsky and Hoit on developing specific renovation options for the March town meeting, chairman Rob Spofford was excited by Monday night's approval of funds for the construction drawings.

"I was a little nervous before the meeting started," he said. "When we got the two-thirds majority, I was pretty pleased."

In arguing for support of the article at town meeting, school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said there should be few arguments regarding the need for upgrades at Deer Hill and the middle-high school.

"This really isn't a hard vote," he said to the group of over 300 citizens at the high school's Sullivan Gymnasium. "A substantial amount of work has to be done to these schools, and this is a vote acknowledging that the work is needed. This $390,000 will give the town the information to make an informed vote on the entire project in March."

"These schools are 45 or 50 years old, for the most part. The time is now to make these changes, especially when we can get the state to help pay for it."

Selectman Thomas CallahanSelectman Thomas Callahan

The advisory committee, selectmen, and capital budget committee all recommended appropriating the money for construction drawings, which DeGiacomo said was a realization of the need to fix the schools now.

"The selectmen are in complete and unanimous agreement on this, and I think we know how rare that is," he said. "They've toured the buildings and have seen the town's history of putting off capital projects and paying more money down the road."

The advisory committee toured the schools along with selectmen, and advisory committee chairman Dick Avery said its members were convinced of the need for renovations.

"All of us agree that some repairs are needed," he said. "The infrastructure is both obsolete and worn out. Both buildings are inaccessible to students, teachers, and visitors with handicaps. What's wrong with these schools is not the students' doing. Adults have allowed this to happen, and adults should do something about it."

Speaking for the selectmen in favor of the article, Thomas Callahan said improving the condition of the schools is in the best interests of the town.

"The board believes it is fiscally responsible to protect the town's financial assets," he said. "This is an age-driven project. These schools are 45 or 50 years old, for the most part. The time is now to make these changes, especially when we can get the state to help pay for it."

Many people in town, including selectmen, have voiced concern about a lack of appropriate maintenance at Deer Hill and the middle-high school. Avery went so far as to say he may not have recommended the $390,000 article if maintenance continued to be handled as it has been in the past.

DeGiacomo announced the school department would no longer handle maintenance.

"You may feel the school buildings should have been better maintained in the past," he said to the town meeting crowd. "Starting next year, the maintenance of all town schools will be transferred to the DPW."

Should voters approve the $390,000 appropriation for construction drawings at Saturday's override election, Spofford said the school facilities committee will spend the next eight weeks narrowing down renovation options in preparation for the March town meeting.

"We'll be looking at two options," he said. "One option is to renovate both buildings without any expansion to meet enrollment needs, which would not be reimbursable by the state. The second option is to renovate the schools and add additional spaces to meet enrollment and program needs. We've been assured that this option will be reimbursed by the state at 60 percent."

Gary Vanderweil, 500 Jersusalem Road, wanted to make sure citizens will be presented with both options at the annual town meeting.

"I want to clarify the scope of what we're voting for," he said. "As it is written, the article talks about construction funds and bid documents. That means we're only looking at one project. Mr. Spofford said two options would be brought to town meeting. I want to ensure that we get two options in March."

Spofford said the school facilities committee would settle on one recommended option, which would be reimbursable. He added, however, that the basic renovation option would be brought before town meeting as well.

"We have to give the architects some direction by the end of January, and we'll have to settle on a recommended option by then," he said. "For that chosen option, we have to have design fees and [illegible] cost estimators to town meeting. We will also fully explore the basic renovation option and bring those cost figures to town meeting as well. We're committed to thoroughly study this thing and bring two options to town meeting."

A successful vote on that option at the March town meeting would set up an override election for the entire amount of the project, currently estimated to be $41 million. Should voters approve that override, the school facilities committee would be on track to meet the state deadline for school construction projects in June.

Should the renovation projects get on the state list by June, Superintendent Edward Malvey said the earliest Cohasset students would be in the renovated schools would be the 2002-2003 school year.

"We'll be submitting our plans to the state in June 2000," he said at the school committee's Nov. 10 meeting. "We'd be able to go out to bid that fall and can probably break ground early in 2001. Construction will probably take about two years, which would hopefully allow us to be ready for 2002-2003."

Citizens will be able to stay up to date with the school facilities committee's progress on the project, as their Wednesday meetings will be televised on cable channel 3. The committee will not meet on the Wednesday between Christmas and New Year's.

Town approves four new firefighters

life support, which includes CPR, first aid, splinting, and bandaging," she said. "Paramedics can administer medications, start IV's, and monitor heart rhythms in cases of cardiac arrest. A lot of the ambulance calls we get are chest pains, and paramedics can do a lot more for those people than EMTs trained in basic life support."

As it now stands, any resident of Cohasset requiring paramedic care may wait for paramedics to arrive from South Shore Hospital in South Weymouth. Usually, the Cohasset ambulance will meet South Shore paramedics en route to save precious minutes. If someone in town had a heart attack, Morrison said even a short wait reduces the victim's chances of survival.

"In cases of cardiac arrest, for every minute you wait, the chances of survival decrease by 10 percent," she said. The paramedics from South Shore do a great job, but it's all about seconds."

Fire chief Roger Lincoln said the hiring of the new firefighter/paramedics will be doubly beneficial to the town by reducing overtime and allowing the department to offer paramedic care.

"Hiring four people as paramedics would fulfill a long-term goal of establishing paramedic service and it would reverse the action taken in 1995, when four firefighters were eliminated," he told selectmen before town meeting. "That decision is the reason for the overtime problem we have today and the new firefighters would solve this problem."

The additional firefighters would allow the department to carry four six-man groups as opposed to the four five-man groups which currently exist. It is the policy of the fire department to keep four firefighters on duty at all times. With crews of five firefighters, the absence of a single firefighter for reason of injury, sickness or vacation already puts the staffing at its minimum limit.

When two of those four firefighters leave the station for an ambulance call, two off-duty firefighters must be called in to replace them. The off-duty firefighters who come in accrue a minimum of two hours of overtime pay for filling in. Overtime expenditures have skyrocketed as the minimal staffing has led to numerous callbacks.

Those callbacks should be significantly reduced as a result of the four new firefighter/paramedics. Haddad said additional paramedics will be added to the department upon the retirements of current firefighters.

"My goal, through attrition, is to eventually have eight paramedics," he said. "Once someone retires, I'll hire a paramedic in his place."

Special town meeting starts with a bang

Sullivan challenges the funding of SPED deficit

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

What's a town meeting without a few fireworks? Before some citizens had even settled into their seats at Monday night's special town meeting, selectman Diane Sullivan proposed an amendment to Article Two, catching some town officials off-guard.

Sullivan had previously cast the lone dissenting vote in the 4-1 decision of selectmen to recommend the $296, 782 article, which was to transfer funds from two accounts, surplus revenue and additional state aid, to cover expenses of a number of town departments.

The largest expense included in the article was a $200,000 deficit of the school department, which was incurred due to special education costs.

Sullivan suggested the article be reduced by $200,000 in order to remove the school department expenses, saying she wanted to wait until the March annual town meeting to fund the special education deficit.

"Last year we had some issues on an override, and the town finally improved a lesser amount of $380,000," she said. "The school department did not increase the special education budget and then they tell us they have a deficit of $200,000?

"I see that as $380,000, plus $200,000, plus whatever they need in the spring. I have concerns and want to see the entire budget. There's no harm in waiting until the spring."

After announcing her proposed amendment, Sullivan returned to her seat amidst applause from some like-minded citizens.

Fellow selectman Fred Koed was next to the podium and explained to citizens why he and others on the board had recommended the article.

"I want to remind everyone that it was a 4-1 vote by the selectmen to recommend this article," he said. "The rest of the board feels the school committee thoroughly explained the reasons for the special education deficit. These are programs mandated by the state. The school committee didn't know what would happen beforehand and couldn't predict these costs."

Advisory committee chairman Dick Avery told citizens the bulk of the special education budget is used to send students to programs outside of the Cohasset Public Schools.

"We have to cover these costs. It's a state mandate. If funds were held back, we'd have to put a freeze on other budget items. The school committee is unanimously opposed to this outrageous amendment."
School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo

"The advisory committee unanimously recommends the full amount of this article," he said. "This town is responsible for students with special needs from the ages of three to 22. Most of the money is spent to place students in out-of-district programs."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo, obviously angered, spoke next and responded to Sullivan's proposed amendment.

"Ms. Sullivan is aware that we have an agreement on special education costs," he said. "In many towns, school committees increase their special education budgets in anticipation of increased costs, but selectmen have asked us not to do that. As costs increase, we have to transfer money from free cash or new revenue sources."

DeGiacomo said waiting until March to fund the special education deficit is not an option.

"We have to cover these costs," he said. "It's a state mandate. If funds were held back, we'd have to put a freeze on other budget items. The school committee is unanimously opposed to this outrageous amendment."

As Sullivan did when after proposing the amendment, DeGiacomo left the podium to applause.

Sullivan and her fellow selectmen first learned of the special education deficit at their Nov. 30 meeting, where superintendent Edward Malvey, director of student services Lynn Silva, and DeGiacomo appeared to explain additional expenses which had been incurred since the school department budget was completed in March.

During the presentation to selectmen, Malvey said much of the reason for the special education deficit is that school officials cannot accurately budget for the number of students who will require such services.

"Some of these students started special education services in the summer and some came to the district in September," he said. "Other students come up with problems as the year progresses. It's impossible to predict."

At town meeting, Malvey explained the unpredictability of special education costs to the assembled citizens.

"Special education drives the school department deficit this year, it did last year, and it will continue to do so in the future unless the state steps in," he said. "We did not know about these costs when we budgeted. We have an increase of 11 students this year who are legally, morally, and ethically allowed to have these services."

A majority of those at town meeting apparently agreed with Malvey's assessment, defeating Sullivan's proposed amendment by a vote of 199-88.

Following the defeat of the amendment, a simple majority approved the appropriation of the full $296,782 included in Article Two.

AROUND TOWN

A VISIT WITH OLD FRIENDS

Oh, do I have a surprise for you! As many might know, I graduated from Cohasset High School in 1962 (never mind trying to do the math on that!) — During the hunt for fellow classmates, the committee found Dennis Buckley in Newport News, Virginia! We were all so excited and hoped that he could make the "date," but he had previous plans that he could not change. (He did send us his "update" and a contribution to our great event!).

Fellow classmate Andrea Murphy and her husband Bunt planned ahead and decided to meet them for brunch while on vacation in Virginia, and Andrea was thrilled to see Dennis and his wife, Susan. Andrea reports that Dennis looked wonderful, is so happy with Susan and his two daughters who live right by him! Andrea also was thrilled to get to know Susan, a wonderful, nice and friendly lady!

Here is the proudest thing I report — as they were leaving, Andrea's husband Bunt noticed Dennis' license plate and saw that he had a Purple Heart on it from the Vietnam war! Doesn't that give you goosebumps and a feeling of pride for Dennis?

Good to see your picture, Dennis and Susan, hopefully we'll see you soon!

TRUE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

What an exciting week for Cohasset, it was really special! With the Village Fair (complete with Santa) and the Snowflake Fair (complete with the famous Beach Glass candy) — between the chowders, the candy and the fudge, we have begun the "battle of the bulge" for the holiday season!

We congratulate all the men and women who made our town a holiday town and for giving us so much fun!

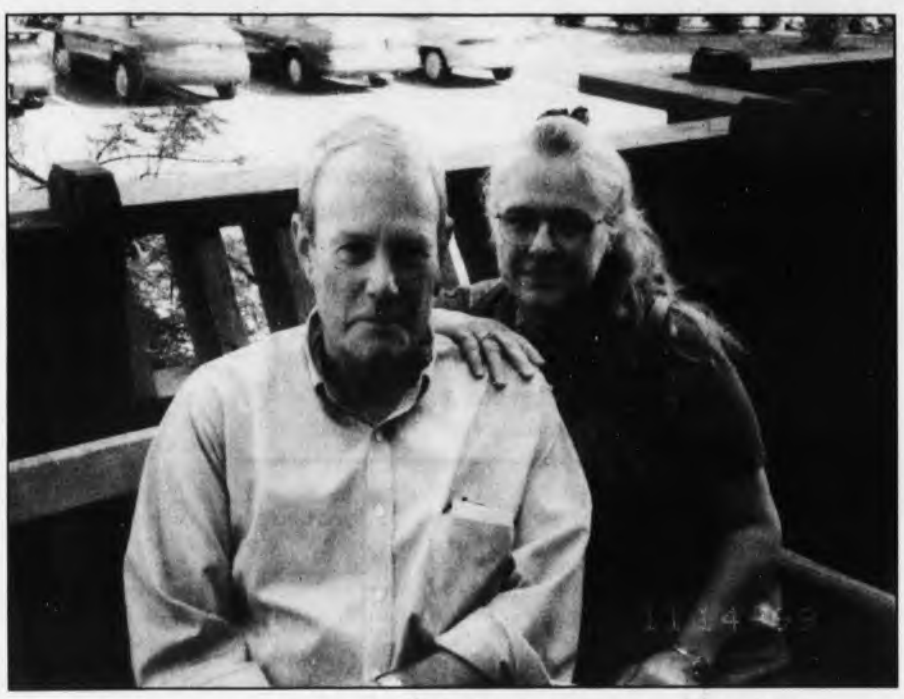
True Christmas Spirit!

SUPPORT TEEN CENTER

Here is a question for you! We are an "affluent" town, a town that most would give their "eye-teeth" for — what can we do for our teens? The vandalism at Deer Hill School, the breaking of the window at the Cohasset Hardware, the arrests at Milliken Field — oh, the list goes on and on!

Let us please support the Teen Center (if not with money then with our presence) or let us please support the sports programs that enable them to have quality time!

Put on your thinking caps and do something, they are our future!



Old friends, Dennis and Susan Buckley, live in Virginia. Dennis graduated from Cohasset High in 1962.

MEMBERS WANTED

Our seniors need a hand — Town Manager Mark Haddad informs us that the new Senior Housing Committee needs members and that anyone who is interested in serving should call the Board of Selectmen at 383-4105.

GRAND HOUSE TOUR

Hope you attended the Deck The Halls House Tour, put on by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset!

All reports were grand, the five houses were said to be spectacular and everyone got ideas for decorating their homes for the Christmas season.

The club's members worked hard and it has paid off big time! If you missed it, remember, the next one will be in two years and it is wonderful!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy birthday to Roger Pompeo!

ON THE MEND

We wish Mrs. Chet Brown the best as she recovers from her surgery — as you read this, we know that you are getting stronger and stronger — you have to. Santa is watching!

Get that hip all better!

ANGELS WANTED

Would you like to be an Angel? A book Angel? Then head for Buttonwood Books, where they are giving a 15 percent discount on books which will go to children served by Wellspring in Hull and the Friends of the Homeless in Weymouth.

After six years in the program, Book Angels is a huge success (600 books donated last year)! A great idea; just put your favorite child's name as the donor!

Call Buttonwood Books at 383-2665 for more details and make a child happy!

CHARLIE WILL BE MISSED

It is with regret that we say "goodbye" to Charlie Butman, one of Cohasset's finest gentlemen!

Charlie erected landmarks (he built Cohasset's first tugboat, the town pump replica and numerous boats), so he certainly leaves a legacy!

You will be missed, and always thought of, always loved. Goodbye, our friend!

PLEASE RETURN SIGN!

The "Sparky Drive" sign is missing from 144 Beach St. It has a green background with white border strip and lettering. There's a broken dog biscuit in the lower right corner. It was removed from the tree and driveway sometime over Thanksgiving. If you should see this sign, please call 383-0586.

Whoever took the sign, please return it!

That's all the news that's "fit to print;" hopefully you will share yours with us next time! A phone call is all that is necessary, although a photo is an added item that all adore (as long as it is clear, it can be used — no need for black and whites anymore).

A food gift is the perfect choice

MAY I PRESENT
SALLYANN CHATTERTON

When you're invited to a dinner or a special weekend at someone's home, when you bring a homemade gift, it is truly appreciated! A food gift makes a perfect choice!

The only thing to remember is that it's something that can be served anytime and is not something that is to be included with the meal (the meal has already been carefully planned, the oven is full).

One idea is "Cranberry Conserve," made with fresh cranberries and pecans. These ingredients are mixed with apple, orange and raisins to make a tangy condiment that goes well with ham, chicken and turkey (all holiday mainstays that are likely to be served).

Here we go:

CRANBERRY CONSERVE

4 cups fresh cranberries
1 cup water
1 orange
3-1/2 cups sugar
2 cups peeled, diced apples
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup chopped pecans

Combine cranberries and water in a large saucepan; bring to a boil. Cover, reduce heat, and simmer 6 to 8 minutes or until cranberry skins pop.

Grate rind of orange; peel, seed and dice orange. Add orange, rind and remaining ingredients to cranberries; mix well. Cook, stirring often, about 30 minutes or until mixture thickens. Remove from heat, cool and spoon into jars or refrigerator containers. Store in refrigerator.

This yields 6 cups.

You will like it as will your hostess!

Really Great Pizza has a recipe for success

Couple has no regrets about career switch

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Chris Peterson used to count money. Now he counts pepperoni slices.

Peterson, 34, a former bank vice president for the South Shore Cooperative Bank, can be found behind the counter of Really Great Pizza five days a week grilling gourmet pizzas along with his wife, Jennifer, and mother, Nancy. Switching from banker to pizza man was not a case of lowered expectations for Peterson. It was the fulfillment of a dream to be his own boss and own a thriving business.

Chris and Jennifer Peterson have built Really Great Pizza into one of the most popular restaurants in Cohasset Village. The pizzas at Really Great Pizza are different than the usual cheese-with-toppings varieties offered at most other restaurants. The Petersons grill their pizza crusts on an open-flame barbecue. The crusts are cooked first on one side and flipped over. Toppings are applied to the cooked side, and then the raw side is cooked. The result is crispier and thinner than traditional pizzas. Customers can purchase traditional cheese or pepperoni pizzas, but the gourmet pies comes in unusual varieties such as bacon, lettuce and tomato, spinach and Portabello mushroom, and potato ranch. The Petersons also offer a popular line of grilled wraps, and fresh salads.

Pizza sauce seems to be the chief ingredient in Peterson's blood. His passion for pizza, the most popular American food, began in college. Peterson was a penniless and hungry senior at the State University of New York in Oswego living off campus when he made his first pizza. He was dating his future wife, another penniless and hungry college student, and looking for an inexpensive way to eat like a king. Peterson decided to bake pizzas in the oven in his apartment.

"It was as simple as being a poor college student who couldn't afford to buy a pizza," Peterson said. "I decided that I could make pizzas myself."

The two hungry seniors didn't know they were laying the seeds for their future careers as restaurateurs. Peterson made his own dough, which he topped with sauce from a jar and cheese Jennifer had liberated from the college cafeteria. The couple quickly realized that they could make three large pizzas for less than the cost of one commercial pizza. Other students loved Chris's pizza so much that they asked him to make pizzas for them if they bought the ingredients. Pretty soon, Chris had amassed a collection of books, cooking stones and other pizza-making paraphernalia. Both he and Jennifer began to realize that they might be able to be their own bosses in the future doing something they loved — making pizza.

"We planned this for a long time," Jennifer said. "We talked about doing this when we were still in college."

After college, the Peterson's settled into a typical American life. Chris Peterson began working in banking, and Jennifer worked in sales. Peterson knew he didn't want to work in banking forever. He started saving money, even if it was just a few dollars a week from his starting salary of $18,000.

Peterson did well as a banker, eventually rising to vice president. Jennifer excelled at sales. And they continued to save money. Then they hit their thirties, had a daughter, Hannah, now 3-1/2, and felt time was running out for them to pursue their dream.

Jennifer and Chris Peterson — with their daughter Hannah and Chris' mother Nancy Peterson — stand outside Really Great Pizza in the village.

"Banking has become so volatile, and we knew there was no job security for Chris," Jennifer said. "Just the fact that he could project his pay increases each year left us a little insecure and bored. We were looking for a situation where we didn't know what next year would bring. We wanted a dream that contained a dose of the unknown. And we wanted to be our own bosses, and to enjoy the freedom that could give us. We figured we were in our thirties, and we should do it now before we hit our fifties and regret not having tried"

"We figured we were in our thirties, and we should do it now before we hit our fifties and regret not having tried."
— Jennifer Peterson

The Petersons decided to fulfill their dream last year. They started by attending the world Pizza Exposition in Las Vegas, an trade international convention. Chris and Jennifer attended classes on making pizza dough, choosing the right ingredients, setting up a successful business and assembling a quality menu. Grilled pizza is a growing trend in the United States, but few East Coast restaurants offer the crispy alternative. The Petersons decided to open a grilled pizza restaurant to distinguish their establishment from the typical cheese-and-toppings stores on the South Shore.

Once Chris and Jennifer had their idea, they worked on making it a reality. The success of Really Great Pizza might look effortless to some. But a lot of hard work went into the early stages of the business. The Peterson's had to learn how to make grilled pizza, and how to make it taste delicious. They had to come up with an interesting menu filled with appealing dishes. And they had to find a location, get all the necessary permits, open and advertise.

One thing Chris and Jennifer decided early in their planning was that they would open the restaurant only five days per week so they could have time for their family life.

"We didn't want to put Hannah in daycare all day, and we didn't want to work there every day and end up hating our business," Jennifer said. "That's why we're closed on Sundays and Mondays. A lot of people urge us to open on Sundays to capitalize on the football crowd. But part of the reason we opened the restaurant was to be our own bosses. We decided that Sundays and Mondays would be for our family, and we've stuck to that."

They began working Really Great Pizza in February, 1998, and by June Chris had to quit his banking job to devote all his energies to the new restaurant, which opened in August, 1998.

Now, 15 months later, the Petersons have surpasses all their first-year business goals. The restaurant has been successful because of hard work and a commitment top quality, Jennifer said.

"One of us is there all the time, and the other one is with Hannah," Jennifer said. "And my mother-in-law works there 35 hours a week and has really helped us succeed. We physically handle everything that goes out our door."

Like any business, there have been a few problems. Jennifer said it is difficult finding good employees. Most of the employees at Really Great Pizza are teenagers who work for a few months, then have to leave for team sports or some other extracurricular activity. She said she is fortunate to have a couple of dependable students who have worked at Really Great Pizza for about a year.

For now, the Petersons are content to work on improving their business for the next couple of years. Eventually, they would like to hire a manager to open the restaurant on Sundays and Mondays. If all goes well, they might even try to open more stores in the future, or establish a franchise. Jennifer said she and Chris love what they do, and have not no regrets about their decision to open a pizza restaurant.

"So many people say they want to do something different with their lives, but they never do it," Jennifer said. "We didn't want to end up like that. You have to take risks. If you get rid of the steady income from a job, work hard, make a good product, and embrace an unknown future, you can succeed and have a very exciting experience. All-in-all, it's been a great experience and we're so happy we did it."

Heroes in the truest sense

By now much has been written about the six firefighters who lost their lives battling a fire Friday night at the Worcester Cold Storage and Warehouse Co. building.

But because this particular tragedy was so horrific it almost defies description, we here at the Cohasset Mariner also would like to offer a few words about what happened.

Certainly this was a news story that touched countless individuals throughout the city of Worcester, the state of Massachusetts and even in other parts of the country. Communities throughout the United States—from California to the 13 South Shore towns covered by the Mariner Newspapers—are protected by firefighters, men and women who often risk their safety and well-being to protect ours and our property.

The homeless often are among the most forgotten groups in our society, but when the members of the Worcester Fire Department saw the building that was going up in flames, they didn't forget. They remembered. And as a result, they lost six of their own.

Anyone who works or has worked in that profession, as well as their friends and family members, are no doubt profoundly affected by the tragedy in Worcester. Indeed, firefighters from across the nation are expected to attend a special memorial service at the Worcester Centrum in honor of the victims today at 11 a.m.

And realistically, of course, anyone with any human compassion whatsoever can't help but feel at least a sliver of their pain. When I first heard the story, I found myself getting choked up — and my only connection to firefighting is that my wife has a friend whose brother works for a department on the South Shore.

The six men who died last Friday night did so in the line of duty, adding to an already lengthy list of firefighters from around the world who have been lost while they were simply doing their jobs. That is enough tragedy in itself.

But what makes the heroic actions of the Worcester firefighters so stunning, in particular, is the fact that they sacrificed themselves for the homeless.

The burning building was known to have been a haven for the city's homeless population. And so the firefighters — without confirmation anyone was inside, let alone a second thought — charged into a raging inferno in the hope of bringing someone out alive.

The homeless often are among the most forgotten groups in our society, but when the members of the Worcester Fire Department saw the building that was going up in flames, they didn't forget. They remembered. And as a result, they lost six of their own.

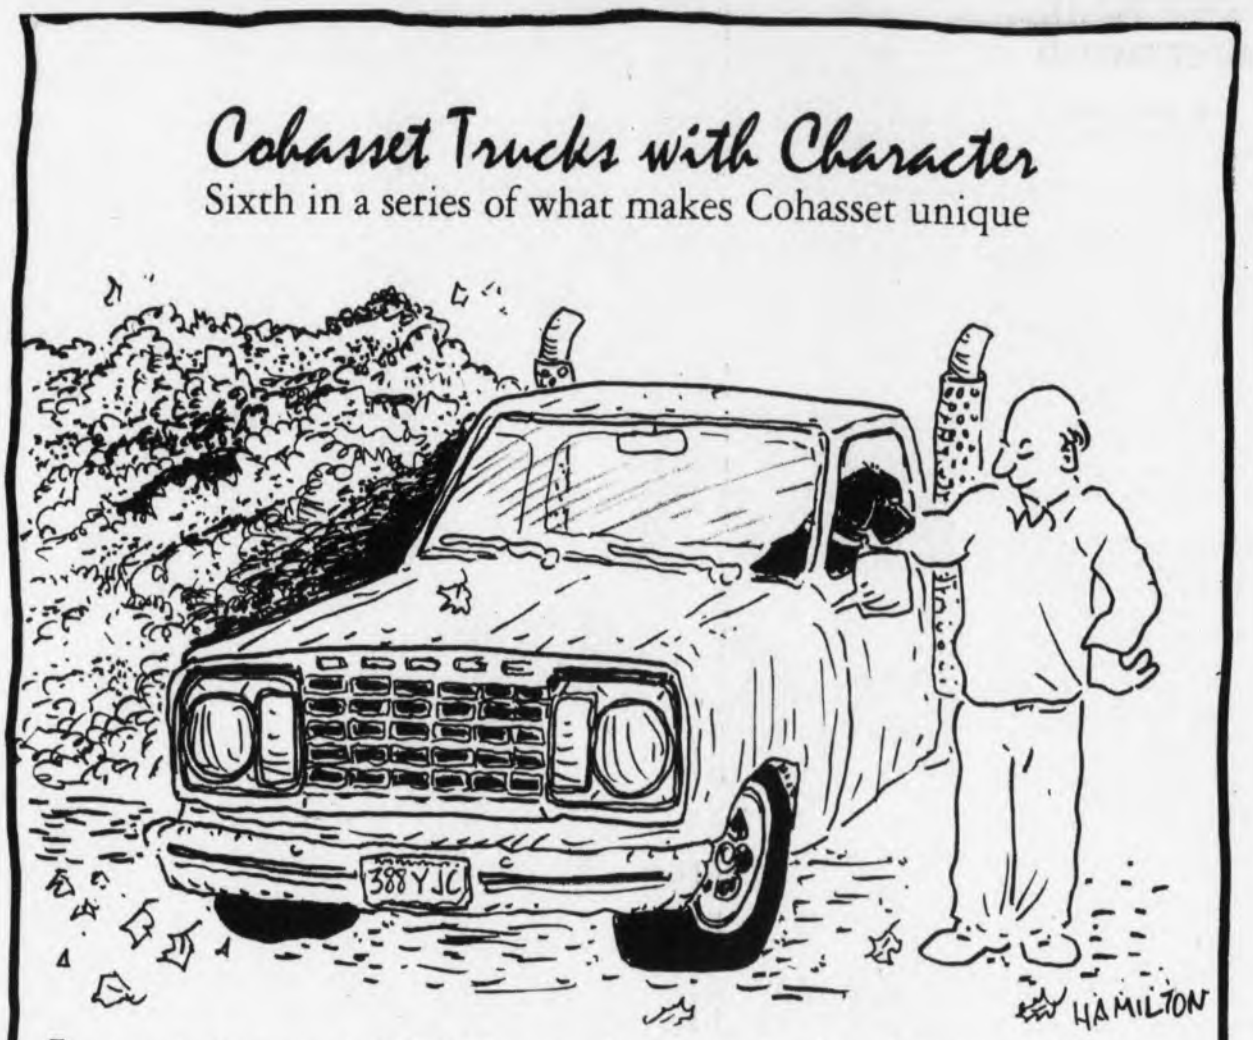
That's something that those of us at the Mariner Newspapers, who have started this year's "Gifts of Hope" holiday campaign to help the homeless, can only admire and respect.

To say they were heroes is probably an injustice, since what they did goes above and beyond the call of ordinary courage. But I'll say it anyway: Those six men are heroes in the truest sense of the word, as are all of those in their noble profession who routinely risk their lives for the rest of us.

Our deepest condolences go out to the families and friends of the victims, who left behind a total of 15 children in addition to the rest of their loved ones.

The Salvation Army has established a relief fund for their families which was aided by an anonymous donation of $10,000. Donations may be sent to: Salvation Army, Worcester Fire Relief, P.O. Box 16924, Worcester, MA 01601.

A similar fund has been started by the Worcester Telegram & Gazette, which made an initial contribution of $6,000. Donations may be send to Firefighters Fund, c/o Flagship Bank, 120 Front St., Worcester, MA 01608 (or via the newspaper's Web site at www.eWorcester.com).



Just imagine how surprised Nick Manganaro's wife was when he and six-year old Nick Jr. went down to Raynham to buy a car and came home with their Dodge Lil Red Express Truck Limited Edition! This big V8, bright red pickup with its twin chromed pipes was a feast for the Manganaros' eyes and the low, throbbing rumbling from those twin pipes was sweet music to their ears. That was 1978 and 60,000 miles ago. Since then, Nick's wife has forgiven him, little Nick has grown up and the truck transports leaves and lab Holly to the RTF.

Opposes school projects

TO THE EDITOR

Town Meeting last night voted to offer an override this Saturday to spend $390,000 for plans to reconfigure the schools again. Unfortunately, debate was cut short, as the advocates had the necessary votes to pass the measure. I believe that the override is hasty and misdirected.

The plan is to move the third grade out of our new Osgood school to Deer Hill, and the sixth grade from Deer Hill to the High School. It seems to me that we have a planning problem if we need to undertake such expensive and disruptive changes so soon after building a new school.

The serious problem with our schools are poor building maintenance and poor educational results (as measured by MCAS). This override does nothing to fix either problem, but rather provides yet more space. Twenty-five years ago, Cohasset had 1,917 students. Ten years from now, it is projected we will have only 1,436.

Why the massive building program?

I urge responsible voters in Cohasset to say no to the construction plans override, and instead demand plans for adequate maintenance and improved academic performance.

Doesn't make 'cents'

TO THE EDITOR:

Only three percent of responses to the 1995 "Cohasset School Survey" expressed support for a grade configuration of K-2, 3-5 and 6-12. Despite that fact, the school committee is recommending exactly that with the caveat that 6-8 will be a middle school within the same building as 9-12. This approach contradicts the adamant approach of proponents for the New Osgood School who contended they needed a "campus" environment with K-3 physically separate from 4-6. Now, it is being suggested that the New Osgood is already "under-sized."

Clearly, the current plan is being driven by putting additions on the Deer Hill and middle/high schools in order to qualify for state funding. The danger with this approach is that we will have cavernous edifices that are costly to operate and maintain. Let us not artificially enlarge these buildings and create added utilities, custodial and maintenance costs.

The fact is that the New Osgood, Deer Hill and middle/high school currently comprise 248,804 gross square feet. Based on the state of Massachusetts' space construction criteria, that is enough square footage to house more than 1,900 students. That is 45 percent more than the current Cohasset school district enrollment. At last night's town meeting, the chairperson of the building committee rejected the idea of limiting architectural plans that would allow for up to a 45-percent growth in school enrollment. That does not make sense.

Making a difference

DEAR PARENTS:

I am writing this letter on behalf of the Osgood students and staff to express our thanks to the many parents who joined four staff members (Mr. Weydt, Mrs. Ogden, Mrs. Hanson and Mrs. Fennessey) and me as we volunteered at the Osgood School for "Make A Difference Day" Saturday, Nov. 6. We would especially like to thank Sarah Porter who gave hours of her time to organize this wonderful event!

The ninth annual Make A Difference Day was held Saturday, Oct. 23 (our day was Nov. 6 due to rain). You were part of the nation's largest day of community service. Last year, 2 million people helped 14 million people to support a charity/cause important to them. Volunteering, working with people is wonderful ... not only are you helping others, you get to meet other nice folks. Despite our booming economy, there is need. For more information, check the website: www.makeadifferenceday.com.

We chose to focus on "schoolwide" jobs that benefit the entire school on this day: cleaning win-

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413E

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) (617) 722-2400 Room 134

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE, BHRC records local representatives' and senators' votes on four roll calls from recent legislative sessions. All four roll calls are on overriding Governor Cellucci's vetoes of items in the $20.8 billion fiscal 2000 state budget. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

STATE WORKERS' HEALTH INSURANCE(H 4900) House 158-0, Senate 35-2, overrode Governor Cellucci's $25 million veto reduction (from $569 million to $544 million) in funding for health insurance for state employees. The governor also removed language providing that state employees continue to pay 15 percent of their premiums with the state picking up 85 percent. Override supporters said this unfair $25 million reduction will result in reduced benefits or a hike from 15 percent to 25 percent in the percentage of the premium paid by thousands of hardworking state employees. Override opponents said many state workers have received substantial raises in recent years and noted private sector businesses have also begun asking employees to share the rising costs of their health insurance. (A "Yea" vote is for the $25 million funding. A "Nay" vote is against the $25 million funding).	Y	Y
HUMAN SERVICE WORKERS(H 4900) House 154-4, Senate 37-0, overrode the governor's $6.5 million veto reduction (from $28 million to $21.5 million) in funding for pay raises for human service workers earning less than $30,000 per year. Override supporters said this will allow long overdue pay hikes for hardworking, underpaid human service workers who provide valuable services to thousands of citizens across the state. Override opponents said even without the additional $6.5 million, the funding for this item has been increased over last year. (A "Yea" vote is for the $6.5 million funding. A "Nay" vote is against the $6.5 million funding).	Y	Y
SCHOOL HEALTH CENTERS(H 4900) House 158-0, Senate 37-0, overrode the governor's $2.5 million veto reduction (from $5 million to $2.5 million) in funding for the expansion of school based health centers. Override supporters said this money will fund additional placement of trained nurses in many public and private schools across the state. They noted that these nurses are very important to many students who do not have and health insurance and do not see a doctor regularly. In his veto message, Governor Cellucci said he reduced the funding to the amount of money projected to be necessary to fund the program. (A "Yea" vote is for the additional $2.5 million funding).	Y	Y
SUMMER JOBS(H 4900) House 158-0, Senate 31-6, overrode the governor's $1.37 million veto reduction (from $3.05 million to $1.68 million) in funding for a summer jobs program for youths at risk. Override supporters said the funding is necessary to ensure that sufficient money is available to put these youths to work in unskilled jobs. They noted the jobs benefit cities and towns by helping them clean up their parks and beaches. Override opponents said the additional funding is not necessary and noted there are thousands of private sector summer jobs available for these youths. (A "Yea" vote is for the $1.37 million funding. A "Nay" vote is against the $1.37 million funding).	N	Y

Time has come to renovate schools

How lucky we are to be a community that is free of tragedy today. Our greatest concern right now is whether or not we will have the voter support needed to go forward with renovation plans to create updated, enlarged, safe schools for the children of Cohasset.

EDUCATION MATTERS

BETSY CONNOLLY

At the Special Town Meeting on Monday, Dec. 6, the voters approved the request for $390,000 for the architects to continue their work on renovation plans for the Deer Hill and Middle-High Schools. The School Committee, the Board of Selectmen, the Advisory Committee, the Capital Budget Committee, the Town Manager and the School Facilities Committee all recommended passage of this article.

Cohasset has much to be proud of: the new Osgood School, our students' accomplishments, our dedicated staff, parent volunteers, our technology labs, the language lab, the newly renovated auditorium, alumni field and community support.

As we prepare to move into the next millennium, we also acknowledge that there has been a need to renovate our nearly 50-year-old buildings for too long. These plans have been discussed for many years through school committees, school facilities committees, school councils, strategic plans and school improvement plans. With very slow progress, we are now faced with the reality of having to move beyond talk for many reasons.

The American Disabilities Act requires us by federal law to make our school's facilities fully accessible to all citizens. The Deer Hill and the Middle-High Schools are not. The study done last year revealed that just bringing these schools up to federal and state code could cost the town as much as $12 million.

Due to increased state education mandates over the years, school maintenance has often been under-funded. Acknowledging this shortfall, the School Committee has agreed to shift this responsibility to the town's Department of Public Works. Specific, ongoing maintenance plans are now required for renovation and construction project approval by the Department of Education.

A demographic study was completed by the New England School Development Council in November. The enrollment projections indicate a decade of continued growth with a need to expand the Deer Hill and the Middle-High Schools to accommodate present and future students. The Osgood School is large enough for the increased population, but the other two schools are not.

We need to create a substantially separate learning environment for our proposed grade 6 through 8 middle school within the existing building. This definitive separation is imperative to ensure that their learning, social, emotional and developmental needs are met in an age appropriate environment.

Cohasset High School is an outdated educational facility with many safety concerns. The science labs have 1950s ventilation, gas systems, leaking sinks and faucets. The ceilings show the pains of repeated leaks and the original floors are patched in all corridors. The fire detection system does not indicate the location of a warning alarm and the intercom system is so old, they no longer make parts to repair it. The Sullivan gym has a roof that sags from the weight of snow in the winter and spectator stands that have caused many injuries to students year round. Our locker rooms and bathrooms with no ventilation or windows are an embarrassment. Visiting sports teams often refuse to use them.

Energy efficiency is not possible with very outdated boilers, leaking skylights, single panel windows, rusted doors and window frames and poor ventilation. The roof has existed beyond its life expectancy and it is growing its own cemetery grass. The wiring and technology access needs are not sufficient throughout the buildings.

Cohasset High School will be evaluated by the Department of Education and a state visiting team in a couple of years for reaccredidation. We need to demonstrate to the state that we are actively completing the building requirements of this process through our renovation project.

At this time, Dr. Malvey has been told by the Department of Education State Inspection Official that the Deer Hill and Middle-High Schools meet the criteria for approximately 60 percent reimbursement for renovation or building projects. This was based on the age of the structures, the outdated systems and the disrepair of the building. The need for enlargement due to increased population projections and new programming plans aligned with education reform also were taken in to account for eligibility. We know that the state has money now for school construction and renovation, but we don't have any guarantees that it will be available years from now.

Many citizens have toured the buildings with Mr. Collins and Mr. Callahan. They know first hand why we must renovate the Deer Hill and Middle-High Schools as soon as possible. Others have come to forums to hear information and ask questions. If you have any questions, call the School Committee. Your support is needed this Saturday, Dec. 11, at the Town Election.

Please vote "Yes" because education does matter!

Betsy Connolly is a member of the school committee.

Paul Revere's expense account

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The first time I made out an expense account, I came up $15 short. I knew I spent the money but I couldn't remember just when or why. So I put down "Miscellaneous - $15." The expense account was back on my desk before the ink dried.

"We don't do miscellaneous," the auditor, an otherwise inoffensive gentleman named Pat. explained to me in the haughty manner that CPA's have when they're dealing with those of us who are baffled by amounts over two figures.

I thought of my first brush with an expense account the other day when I learned that the expense account for Paul Revere's midnight ride had turned up in the Massachusetts state archives.

He billed the colony 5 shillings a day for himself and for the use of Deacon John Larkin's horse over several weeks of hard riding in April and May, 1775. Whoever audited Paul's creation, perhaps some early day ancestor of Pat, cut the stipend to 4 shillings a day.

If I had my druthers, I'd collect all the expense accounts I could and publish them in hard cover. The volume would certainly win the Pulitzer Prize for creative writing.

In a way, I was glad to see that. I thought the newspaper business was the only one in which coffee and a cruller cost $15 at an out-of-town Dunkin' Donuts. Expense accounts are the life blood of the news business.

If I had my druthers, I'd collect all the expense accounts I could and publish them in hard cover. The volume would certainly win the Pulitzer Prize for creative writing.

A friend of mine named Dave once went to a small town in Vermont to cover the first meeting of pen pals, an English girl and a Vermont boy, who were to be married the next day.

Dave arrived by cab from Burlington. He told the cabbie to wait. He went into the house to find that the bride was changing her mind about marriage. Feeling the whole story being yanked out from under him, Dave spent the next few hours convincing her to go through with it.

Meanwhile, the cabbie was still waiting with his meter running.

It took several months of intense negotiations with the auditors to convince them the cab fare was legitimate. Still, shortly thereafter, a edict came down from the seventh floor that all "unusual" cab fares had to be backed up by a receipt.

In his memoirs, Gene Fowler, who worked for the Rocky Mountain News in Denver, recalled agonizing over an expense account for an assignment in Alaska that was coming up $100 short.

He thought and thought, finally came up with — "$50, death of lead sled dog." He thought and thought some more and arrived at an expense item that became legend in the business —"$50, flowers for bereaved bitch."

The elderly among us will remember the late John Gillhooley, a sports columnist for the Daily Record when it was owned by William Randolph Hearst

One day John found himself making out an expense account for a trip to Quebec. He was coming up short by some $150 when he was overcome by a stroke of genius.

"$150," he wrote, "limousine to the Shrine of Ste. Ann de Beaupre to pray for the continued success of the Hearst newspapers in Boston."

There wasn't an auditor in the company who would touch that one.

Sixth graders visit RTF

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

We wish to acknowledge the successful RTF field trip that occurred Thursday, Dec. 2, when our sixth graders toured the various fascinating stations up on Cedar Street. Thanks to Mr. Paul Callahan, Principal, and the sixth-grade teachers, who did such a great job preparing the students, who were ready with notebooks open; thanks to you sixth graders, the hope of the future, who were so interested and polite; thanks to Mr. Arthur Lehr and Mr. Merle Brown for facilitating the event; and thanks to the other Recycling Committee members for volunteering to man the various areas and explain how COHASSET AGREES TO RECYCLE EVERYTHING!

We took a lot of pictures. You may see these in subsequent issues of the newspaper or elsewhere. Remember a prize will be given to the student who is able to grow the biggest sunflower over the winter using RTF compost!

We all had a great day. See you next time.

dows, vacuuming floors, installing tether balls, painting sidewalk games, planting trees in the Playpark, painting the playhouse, raking and mulching the Playpark and cutting a new Nature Trail for Osgood and Deer Hill! During challenging fiscal years, it is discouraging to be unable to complete items that improve the quality of life for our students. The morale boost that you have given Osgood students and staff is wonderful! Please know that your efforts have helped Osgood as well as started to change the world to make it the way you believe it should be: fairer, cleaner and happier. Most of all, you have modeled caring for our young children and supported our Osgood Mission statement.

Osgood expresses thanks to each of you that "Make A Difference" in our lives. Osgood parents volunteer in many ways: Room mothers, field trips, classrooms, the library, the publishing center, Family Math and Science Evening, fundraising etc., as well as every time you help your child with his/her homework. The hours you volunteer on special days (as well as every other day) help us to create the best learning environment possible for our young children. Research shows that children are more successful learners when parents work in partnership with schools.

If you volunteered on this day, please tell somebody else what you did and maybe next time they'll help, too. Giving is contagious. All of us at Osgood are truly thankful for your support! Have a wonderful holiday with family and friends!

RR suit without merit

TO THE EDITOR:

Commuter rail is coming. It's time now for Hingham officials to get down to the business of dealing with mitigation issues and to stop wasting time and taxpayers' money with further futile delaying tactics.

The federal magistrate's ruling was clear and unambiguous. Hingham's legal challenge is without merit.

Opponents of commuter rail have had their day in court. The recent rulings of the federal magistrate and the Army Corps of Engineers make it clear there is no legal reason to delay any longer.

We now need to make sure that the trains that will serve Hingham and the South Shore operate as smoothly and with as little disruption as possible. Hingham town officials refused to discuss mitigation issues while their lawsuit was pending. Hingham's town leaders now need to show real leadership, acknowledge that commuter rail is coming, and get on with serious planning for mitigation.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce was the first to advocate the restoration of commuter rail service in the 1980s. Since then, no one has proposed any realistic alternative that would do as much to relieve congestion on our roads or would move people more efficiently between their homes and their jobs.

Commuter rail is a vital component of a balanced transportation network in our area. It has been a terrific success along the Plymouth and Middleboro lines for the last two years. It has worked well elsewhere in eastern Massachusetts. And it will be a tremendous net benefit to the towns along the Greenbush corridor. Hingham's town officials owe it to the residents and businesses of the community to plan responsibly for day rail service returns.

South Shore Chamber of Commerce

KEDS rates won't go up this school year

School committee cites implied contract with parents

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Despite a unanimous request from selectmen asking for rates of the school department day care program to be increased by January 1 to cover $14,000 in benefit costs, the school committee elected last Thursday night to hold off on a rate increase until next September.

The town actually pays $28,000 per year in benefit costs for the program, but a January 1 rate increase would cover the $14,000 in benefits for the second half of the school year.

Offered by the school department since 1987, the Cohasset Enrichment Programs provide tuition-supported day care before and after school as well as afternoon care for students attending morning kindergarten and vice versa. The entire day care program is better known as KEDS, which stands for Kindergarten Enriched Day.

Prior to this summer, both the selectmen and school committee believed the program, including benefits, was entirely supported by tuition. In August, the selectmen were alerted to the $28,000 in annual benefits being paid by the town to the program's employees.

Selectmen, in turn, notified the school committee, which was unaware of the discrepancy because the KEDS program is not part of its annual budget. Because it was believed to be entirely self-supporting, the program has been run though the superintendent's office since its inception.

The school committee voted in September to increase tuition rates to cover the program's benefit costs, with the new rates to take effect at the beginning of the 2000-2001 school year.

Acting on a desire to remove KEDS benefits from the town's balance sheet sooner rather than later, selectmen unanimously requested that tuition rates be raised by Jan. 1.

To accomplish that task, KEDS director Elizabeth Alpert said the program's tuition rates would have to be increased 18 percent.

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun said it is unfair to raise rates on a month's notice when many parents depend on the program for child care and have planned their budgets accordingly.

"I can't see, in four weeks time, giving parents notice that rates would go up 18 percent," she said. "I do feel the program should be self-sustaining, but we cannot pull the rug out from under parents who use the program."

One such parent is Kim Orner, 26 Heather St., who has two children in the program. Orner came to Thursday's school committee meeting to explain her reliance on the program.

"This child care is a lifeline for me," she said. "I work every day and I don't get 18 percent raises. I'm paying $600 a month for the program as it is. If the rates go up, I'd have to weigh my salary against what it costs to work. I'd have to see if I could still afford to live in this town."

Sharon Curry, 580 Jerusalem Road, also has a child in the KEDS program. She said a $28,000 cost to taxpayers seemed reasonable when considering the program's importance to the town.

"This seems like a small amount for the whole town to absorb for such a wonderful program to exist," she said. "It makes the schools more attractive."

School committee member Pat Martin told Curry that some others in town do not wish to support the program with their tax dollars.

"We're under fire from taxpayers who want to know why they should have to foot part of the bill for your child care," she said. "The selectmen say the money has to come from somewhere."

Alpert said benefits for school department child care programs are paid by a number of towns.

"In Hingham, Weymouth, and Duxbury, the town pays the benefits for the program's employees," she said. "In Scituate, the town pays half of the benefits."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said it was interesting to hear that Cohasset has not been alone in having the benefits for its school department day care program paid by the town.

"While we have agreed to pay all of the costs of the program, it appears we are one of the few towns in the area to do that," he said. "There are similar programs in other towns which aren't self-supporting."

The Hanover school department day care program is one that does cover its own benefit costs in its tuition rates.

"The benefit costs are included in the nominal fee that parents are charged for the program," said Hanover superintendent Ken Johnson. "Those fees cover everything except the use of the room, heating, things like that."

As they have stated previously, the members of the school committee said the benefit costs for the Cohasset day care program should be paid through increased tuition. They agreed unanimously, however, that increasing those rates in January is unfair to parents who rely on the program for their child care and have budgeted accordingly.

"Doing it now is the wrong thing to do," said school committee member Stephanie Noble.

When signing up for the program at the beginning of the school year, parents were given a fee schedule, which they signed and returned. Alpert said the program has a responsibility to carry the current rates through the end of the school year.

"Parents have enrolled their children and made financial plans," she said. "We gave them a handbook with the rates, and they signed it. To me, that's an implied contract."

School committee members agreed and unanimously voted not to enact rate increases until the 2000-2001 school year. School committee member Mark DeGiacomo cautioned, however, that parents should plan on budgeting for next year's KEDS program with an 18-percent increase in mind.

"Come Sept. 1, this program will be totally self-sufficient," he said. "Today is Dec.2, and this is fair warning. Ten months from now, this is going to happen. The school committee is not going to change its mind."

Upon hearing that the school committee chose not to follow the unanimous recommendation of selectmen to increase the program's rates as of Jan. 1, selectman Diane Sullivan was dismayed.

"I'm enormously disappointed that the school committee took that position," Sullivan said last Friday "This is supposed to be a self-supporting program, and they've apparently ignored that issue for the time being. They're coming to the town on Dec. 6 with a $200,000 budget shortfall and have already said they're going to come back again in March.

"How can you justify coming back to the town over and over when you don't take a chance to return at least some money to the town? For them to reject the idea of making the program self-supporting in January is outrageous. They're completely ignoring the unanimous request of the selectmen, which I think is most unfortunate."

DeGiacomo seemed to sense what position Sullivan and her fellow selectmen would take regarding the Jan.1 deadline.

"If selectmen make a request, it's the responsibility of the school committee to consider it and we've done that," he said.

DeGiacomo disputed Sullivan's contention that the school committee had a responsibility to meet a Jan.1 deadline to pay KEDS benefits because of a budget shortfall, one which is due largely to special education. Sullivan's was the lone dissenting vote in a 4-1 vote by selectmen to recommend including the $200,000 special education deficit in Article 2 at Monday's special town meeting.

"Mrs. Sullivan voted against the transfer of special education funds before we voted on the deadline for KEDS," he said. "This is an attempt to rationalize an irrational vote on her part. Most people understand that the spiraling costs of special education is not a school problem, it's a town problem. It's better to work on lobbying the state legislature than to place blame on the school committee."

Malvey said he supports the MCAS as a way to improve curriculum.

"I see it as a vehicle for curriculum improvement rather than the be all and end all," said Malvey, who opposes using the test as a cudgel over a student's head to withhold a diploma.

Malvey, who had not had time to fully digest the MCAS results at the time of the interview, said there were "some ups and downs."

He was pleasantly surprised at how well the fourth-graders did (now fifth-graders) and praised the teachers for their hard work.

SALESMAN

Every Friday afternoon a salesman from the plumbing supply house in Boston would pay his visit to inform us of the specials he might have on sale, and to see if he could sell us more products. This particular salesman was of the sort who tried to force things on you; and we had often ended up ordering far more than we generally needed. Needless to say we hated to see him come in the door. His grating personality and his lack of cleanliness added to our amazement that he was a salesman at all. Anyway, one notable Friday we spotted him coming across the street from the parking lot. I quickly locked the door and the secretary and I hid behind the oak knee-hole desk. We heard him knock at the door then tap on the window and try the latch. We said nothing and then waited a few more minutes to make sure that he had left. Just then the back door opened and there stood the salesman staring at the two of us hiding beneath the desk. My secretary quickly remarked that we had dropped something or other and we were looking for it. He said he was delivering a part that one of the men had ordered and he had left it out back. We felt a little sheepish then, but he didn't bat an eye. He still came every Friday. This story is in memory of my Uncle Evan.

KEDS rates won't go up this school year

School committee cites implied contract with parents

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Despite a unanimous request from selectmen asking for rates of the school department day care program to be increased by January 1 to cover $14,000 in benefit costs, the school committee elected last Thursday night to hold off on a rate increase until next September.

The town actually pays $28,000 per year in benefit costs for the program, but a January 1 rate increase would cover the $14,000 in benefits for the second half of the school year.

Offered by the school department since 1987, the Cohasset Enrichment Programs provide tuition-supported day care before and after school as well as afternoon care for students attending morning kindergarten and vice versa. The entire day care program is better known as KEDS, which stands for Kindergarten Enriched Day.

Prior to this summer, both the selectmen and school committee believed the program, including benefits, was entirely supported by tuition. In August, the selectmen were alerted to the $28,000 in annual benefits being paid by the town to the program's employees.

Selectmen, in turn, notified the school committee, which was unaware of the discrepancy because the KEDS program is not part of its annual budget. Because it was believed to be entirely self-supporting, the program has been run though the superintendent's office since its inception.

The school committee voted in September to increase tuition rates to cover the program's benefit costs, with the new rates to take effect at the beginning of the 2000-2001 school year.

Acting on a desire to remove KEDS benefits from the town's balance sheet sooner rather than later, selectmen unanimously requested that tuition rates be raised by Jan. 1.

To accomplish that task, KEDS director Elizabeth Alpert said the program's tuition rates would have to be increased 18 percent.

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun said it is unfair to raise rates on a month's notice when many parents depend on the program for child care and have planned their budgets accordingly.

"I can't see, in four weeks time, giving parents notice that rates would go up 18 percent," she said. "I do feel the program should be self-sustaining, but we cannot pull the rug out from under parents who use the program."

One such parent is Kim Orner, 26 Heather St., who has two children in the program. Orner came to Thursday's school committee meeting to explain her reliance on the program.

"This child care is a lifeline for me," she said. "I work every day and I don't get 18 percent raises. I'm paying $600 a month for the program as it is. If the rates go up, I'd have to weigh my salary against what it costs to work. I'd have to see if I could still afford to live in this town."

Sharon Curry, 580 Jerusalem Road, also has a child in the KEDS program. She said a $28,000 cost to taxpayers seemed reasonable when considering the program's importance to the town.

"This seems like a small amount for the whole town to absorb for such a wonderful program to exist," she said. "It makes the schools more attractive."

School committee member Pat Martin told Curry that some others in town do not wish to support the program with their tax dollars.

"We're under fire from taxpayers who want to know why they should have to foot part of the bill for your child care," she said. "The selectmen say the money has to come from somewhere."

I quickly locked the door and the secretary and I hid behind the oak knee-hole desk. We heard him knock at the door then tap on the window and try the latch. We said nothing and then waited a few more minutes to make sure that he had left. Just then the back door opened and there stood the salesman staring at the two of us hiding beneath the desk. My secretary quickly remarked that we had dropped something or other and we were looking for it. He said he was delivering a part that one of the men had ordered and he had left it out back. We felt a little sheepish then, but he didn't bat an eye. He still came every Friday. This story is in memory of my Uncle Evan.

Dealing with tragedies, overcoming the odds

$8[illegible] in rent. She had no money to secure any sort of down payment on the house she was living in.

"I had the money," Rogers said, "but I couldn't get it back. There was nothing I could do."

Rogers said she left her home "with a suitcase in [her] trunk," and found herself applying for a Section 8 voucher, which is used to assist someone in getting a home in a more efficient manner.

Her young daughter, who had lived with Rogers in her previous home, was sent to live with Rogers's ex-husband. Rogers said she has two other daughters, but they were living on their own at the time because they were older.

"I was basically just trying to move around," Rogers added. "I was homeless, and it wasn't a good feeling."

She explained while she was homeless, she would stay at relatives' houses for short periods of time, but she never stayed in any one place for long.

It took her weeks to find a new apartment, but eventually she did, even without the assistance of her Section 8 voucher. Her daughter moved back in with her. Reflecting on the end of her first period of homelessness, Rogers said she had a lot to be thankful for at that time.

"Homelessness is not just what you see on TV," Rogers noted. "A lot of times it's just nobody's fault. It's out of your hands."

For the next six years, Rogers tried to forget about her previous bad luck. She got engaged. She moved into a home with her significant other. Her daughter, 15 at the time, also moved in with Rogers and her new fiancé. Life was good.

But a year ago, bad luck caught up with Rogers again, this time for the worse.

"I was in a really bad car accident last year," she explained. "I still don't remember two months of my life."

Rogers said her car hit a wall, and she had to be airlifted to Beth Israel Hospital in Boston. She noted she had to be revived from death three times as a result of the accident, including two revival attempts in the life-copter in which she was transported.

"I don't remember how the accident happened," Rogers explained, noting she went into a coma for a week as a result of the accident. "When I came out of the coma, I was alert, but I can't remember anything that happened for the next two months. Everybody was saying I did everything, but I just don't remember."

After Rogers came out of the coma, she was treated in the hospital for several months. Her injuries were severe. She couldn't walk very well, she had torn lining in her lungs and her heart, and she also suffered from a blood clot in her brain.

"I had so many broken bones," she added. "I had such massive injuries that nobody, including the doctors, thought I was going to make it. I couldn't walk, and I couldn't function normally for a long time. Right now, I have so much metal in my body that I feel like the bionic woman... except I don't have any special powers. Every part of my body is covered with scars."

But physical scars were not the only problem which stemmed from Rogers's accident.

Because of various ramifications of the car accident, Rogers' fiancé broke off their engagement. And because of various altercations resulting from that particular incident, Rogers found herself completely isolated from her family.

In addition, when Rogers left the hospital, she found out her 15-year-old daughter was living with her ex-husband, and she had to go through a bitter battle to get the girl back.

And what's more, she found herself homeless again, because she was not on speaking terms with her family and she could not go back to the place where she previously lived with her former fiancé.

Rogers also discovered while she had been in the hospital, members of her family had given away her personal belongings, furniture, and other items. She also discovered certain members of her family had reserved a room for her in an assisted-living facility because of various doctors' reports which said she would never function normally, or be able to make do for herself.

"In every way, my relationship with (some of) the members of my family, and my ex-fiancé, changed," she said, noting her relationship with her daughters remained intact. "I went from having a pretty normal life with kids and planning a wedding to having absolutely nothing."

"There was something wrong," she added. "When I got out of the hospital, things were just totally wrong, and I knew it."

She had nothing, and nowhere to go, but fortunately for Rogers, right when she left the hospital, the Section 8 voucher she had applied for six years before unexpectedly came through, and she managed to find a small apartment, a place where she still lives now.

But despite finding an apartment, she had no belongings to put in it. No bed. No sofa. No anything. Her belongings had simply been dispersed while she was in the hospital.

"I still haven't found my stuff," she said. "As far as I know, there's things I owned everywhere. [My family] just didn't think I would need any of it. Nobody expected me to prove them all wrong."

That's when Rogers decided to call for help. She had heard of the South Shore Friends of the Homeless organization through word-of-mouth, so she called and she reached staff member Gloria Burke. Burke, in turn, put Rogers in touch with Newell.

"[Burke] gave me [Newell's] name," Rogers said. "It was really hard for me to make that call. I went from having everything to having nothing. I never had to worry about depending on everyone else. I got all of my essentials from [Newell]. When I had nothing in my apartment, I found myself sleeping on the floor every night, and because of my injuries, it was quite uncomfortable."

Rogers said Newell's organization provided her with a couch, a sofa, a double bed, linens, dishes, and other necessary household items.

"I got pretty much everything I needed," Rogers said. "One of the best things I ever did was call [Newell] and ask for help. Not only did she help me get what I needed, but to this day, she still calls and checks on me. When all this first happened, I had nothing, so it was good to have someone calling me, letting me know they cared. She is a godsend, and if it wasn't for her, I don't know what I'd have. It made a big difference."

After Rogers got the essentials she needed, another positive turn in her life occurred. She was able to get her 15-year-old daughter back home. The two still live together to this day.

Rogers thinks more people who find themselves homeless should be willing to ask for help, despite the courage it actually takes to make the initial call.

"I want people to know about [Newell's] organization," she said. "It was very hard for me to ask for charity, but I knew I had to get over that. [Newell] was the best thing for me, and all I had to do was make the initial phone call. I certainly got a lot more than I expected. They went over and above what they had to do for me."

Every day is a day of rebuilding for Rogers, as she still has to undergo minor surgeries and practice physical therapy techniques. But the fact she is rebuilding her life is something nobody ever thought she would do.

"I'm getting there," Rogers said. "I still have ongoing care, but I'm up and walking and I can drive again. This is stuff that nobody expected me to do. I'm living a normal life."

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

ATTENTION TO DETAILS

When selecting upholstered furniture, look beyond the choice of the main fabric and pay close attention to the decorative details. Such upholstery trims as welt, fringe, tassels, flat braid, and decorative tacks are centrally important to the overall design. It is often best to allow the shape and style of the upholstered piece guide the choice of trim options. To outline cushions and overall furniture contours, the choice of welt or braid will highlight shapes without distracting from them. By trimming the edges in a fabric that contrasts with the main covering, it is possible to sharpen the lines of the furniture's geometry. Decorative fringes are best saved for skirts or loose pillows. Tassels can be added to large buttons and on corners of skirts.

At the end of a long day, it can be comforting to retreat to a beautiful home and comfortable furniture. The interior designers of THE DESIGNING WOMAN can take the mystery out of the furniture selection and coordination process. Our services include creating a thoughtful and individualized design plan for any room in your home. We can also advise you on window and door replacement, and other remodeling techniques. Call us at 781-383-6411 to arrange a consultation.

Hint: Reserve the use of brass tacks as a trim element for masculine pieces with large mass, such as a big wing chair or a leather club chair or sofa.

Mendel Road residents bring septic dilemma to town meeting

Sewer commission still has final say

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A majority of voters at Monday night's special town meeting may have sympathized with the desire of Mendel Road residents to be included in the town's central sewer district, but the vote was essentially one of confidence rather than a mandate. Unless sewer commissioners change their minds, those on Mendel Road will remain on the outside looking in.

Mendel Road residents started a citizen's petition article to seek inclusion in the central district, but Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said decisions on sewer district boundaries must be made by the elected members of the sewer commission.

In a citizens petition article, which includes the condition set forth by DeRensis, the residents of Mendel Road offered to pay $20,000 to the town in order to be connected to the town sewer. The $20,000 would cover all costs incurred with the connection.

Mark Brennan, 2 Mendel Road, said he and his neighbors have been facing a septic dilemma since their joint system failed a Title 5 inspection last year.

"We have a health emergency on Mendel Road," Brennan said. "In 1998, Paul Robbins was attempting to sell his house and the system failed the inspection. Since then, we've put in two other systems, neither of which have worked. We're looking for a solution."

Paul Jenner of Weymouth, a state-certified Title 5 inspector who originally failed the Mendel Road septic system, said another Title 5 system on Mendel Road will likely fail.

"It's my personal opinion that it would be a great injustice to make these people build another system that probably won't work," he said.

The sewer commission has denied repeated requests of Mendel Road residents to be included in the district, saying a working Title 5 system could be constructed.

"The sewer commission believes the situation on Mendel Road is no different than that in other parts of town," said sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil. "They have a Title 5 design in hand. It may cost $100,000, but that's split between five houses. Many people in town have had to pay upwards of $20,000 to build a Title 5 system."

"Given our set of circumstances, who in this room would not do what we're doing?"
Susan Kent, 3 Mendel Road

The central sewer district, which Mendel Road residents seek to join, is made up of existing homes and buildable lots. Vanderweil said the sewer commission made a conscious decision to reserve capacity for buildable lots, even though they now sit vacant.

"The sewer commission had to decide whether to include vacant lots or deny the Mendel Road application," he said. "If we included Mendel Road, we would have to turn down future requests from people on lots that are too small to build a Title 5 system."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said it made more sense to sewer existing homes than to reserve capacity for vacant lots.

"It's reasonable to add these existing homes with a health emergency," she said. 'It makes more sense to solve existing problems than to worry about new ones."

Advisory committee member Sue Turgiss disagreed, saying an inclusion of Mendel Road in the central sewer district could lead to future request from other residents in similar situations.

"What about other adjacent residents who might have failed systems," she said. "This could present a precedent for additional requests or litigation. I'm hesitant to second-guess the sewer commission in its decisions on capacity, which are determined by buildable lots and existing homes."

Michael Sullivan, 21 Gammons Road, said the previous inclusion of the Newtonville subdivision, off Atlantic Ave., in the central district set a precedent which should be used for Mendel Road.

"There's only one other instance where a septic emergency has been brought to the town meeting floor, and that's Newtonville," he said. "This is only the second time this has happened in 12 years. We included Newtonville, and we should do the same here. This is a very simple situation. We have to protect these people."

Vanderweil said Mendel Road and Newtonville are two different situations.

"Newtonville had absolutely no other options, while Mendel Road can build a Title 5 system," he said. "Newtonville had no possible Title 5 solution and was an immediate threat to the health of Cohasset Harbor."

Kirk Bukowski, 4 Mendel Road, disputed Vanderweil's notion that a working Title 5 septic system could be built for him and his fellow residents. He said those on Mendel Road are not worried about the cost of a working system.

"We're not worried about the money," he said. "$20,000 is a drop in the bucket compared to what we've spent already on two failed systems. We want a solution."

Sewer commissioner Ray Kasperowicz urged his fellow citizens to let the commission perform its elected duties.

"I wish this town meeting would allow us to act unemotionally, unpolitically, and deal with objective facts," he said. "I've heard talk about the poor soil conditions up at Mendel Road. Give me a break. This whole town has inadequate soil. That's why Title 5 was created in the first place. The health emergency at Mendel road can be solved with a Title 5 system.

While Kasperowicz had urged citizens to form an unemotional opinion on the issue, Mendel Road resident Susan Kent took the opposite approach. In an impassioned plea, she urged others in town to sympathize with the dilemma of those living on Mendel Road.

"The last system we tried to put in was never operational from day one, and now we're looking to put in a third system," she said. "we're spending a tremendous amount of money trying to solve this problem. We're willing to pay whatever it costs to hook us up to the sewer. Given our set of circumstances, who in this room would not do what we're doing?"

Kent left the town meeting podium to applause, signifying the empathy which many residents said they shared with the situation of Mendel Road residents.

Voters showed that empathy by passing the citizen's petition article, after which Mendel Road residents hugged each other in triumph.

Only the sewer commission, however, can ultimately decide if they win inclusion into the central sewer district.

Annual clothing drive at CHS

The Social Awareness Organization, a student group at Cohasset High School, will hold its annual clothing and toy drive through Dec. 17. All donations would be greatly appreciated, especially any winter coats for the cold months ahead. Please, only new toys in their original packaging (and no gift wrapping as we must see the gift in order to give it to the correct age group). Drop-off sites will be at the main entrances of Cohasset Middle-High School. All donations will benefit the Pine Street Inn.

Toys for Tots donations sought

In conjunction with the US Marine Corps Reserve, Cohasset police are collecting toys for the Toys for Tots program. A collection bin is available in the lobby of the police station on Elm Street. Toys may be dropped off there 24-hours-a-day until Christmas, Officer John Small said.

Boys basketball looks to run and gun this year

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Despite the warm temperatures, it is winter. And that means a season of varsity basketball.

The Skippers are looking to rebound from last year's disappointing sub .500 season.

"I'm looking forward to this year," said coach Ron Ford. "We've got a great bunch of kids who work hard."

Ford is going to try to take on opponents with athleticism and speed, utilizing a full court press and a motion offense.

"Our strength is in our speed," Ford enthused. "Everything has to be up tempo."

Leading the way in that department will be juniors Daniel Trowers at point guard and a third year starter, and T.J Bilodeau, a three-point threat at the shooting guard position They combine to make a great backcourt duo.

Junior small forwards Doug O'Brien and Eric Shea both have varsity experience and provide dribbling, passing and shooting talent for the Skippers at that position. With seniors Craig Parker, Khalil Madyun, Jake Nohe, and Kevin Andrews splitting up the roles of center and power forward, the Skippers have some of the quickest, most mobile big men in the league.

"I'm looking forward to this year. We've got a great bunch of kids who work hard."
Basketball coach Ron Ford

Ted Gledhill, a shooting guard, is a junior with good hands and dribbling skills, and Matt Bilodeau, a sophomore, will back up Trowers as a point guard. The only freshman on the squad is Ben Lynner, a strong rebounder, and tough offensive player inside. Sophomores Nick Bolster and Liam Martin will swing throughout the season from junior varsity to varsity.

Not only does Cohasset have speed in mind as one of its assets, but defense is also a major factor that Ford emphasizes heavily. The defensive practices are some of the hardest anyone can endure, as the players, with bricks in their hands, go through the necessary footwork of tough, tight defense.

Another key to success will be the three-point and perimeter shooting.

"We got a lot of great looks at the basket [last year] from long range," Ford said. "Hopefully this year they will be able to knock them down."

Needing a .500 record to qualify for the tournament at the end of the year, Cohasset hopes to win many more games than last year. They have talent, experience, and only lost three seniors last year.

If the offense and defense do as well as Ford is anticipating, this should be a great year.

Ford summed it up. "These guys weren't picked to do a whole lot, but I think we can surprise some people."

Skippers hockey to bring back alumni game

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High opens its varsity hockey season Tuesday night.

A simple line, but a line that couldn't be written two years ago.

The reason, there was no Cohasset High varsity hockey team to write about.

The reason, a lack of hockey players.

Today, varsity hockey is back at Cohasset, and it's back with 22 kids trying to make the team.

And, something else is also back at Cohasset, an alumni hockey game! The first alumni hockey game in 15 years and it will be held New Year's Day at the Hingham Rink starting at 7:20 p.m. Twenty-four players have already accepted.

Last year was a growing season for the Skippers. They took their lumps as they worked their way back to varsity play.

How much the team has grown will be determined Tuesday night when the Skippers take on a hybrid Abington High team that has joined forces with East Bridgewater High for the purposes of fielding a varsity hockey team.

Abington had a team but with few players. East Bridgewater had no team but it had kids who wanted to play hockey. As a result, the two schools combined forces for hockey.

The opening game has experiment written all over it. The Abington/East Bridgewater thing is one experiment.

Then, there's Cohasset.

Coach Dennis Walsh has a shiny new goalie in Steve Mikkanen, a sophomore. Last year's goalie Chris Caron was out of position. Chris is a skater and did not want to play goal. But, he did so for the good of the team.

This season, Caron will be back where he's happy, playing a forward position.

As for Mikkanen, coach Walsh simply states, "Steve has been looking real good. In a scrimmage against Hingham last week he played very well."

Another experiment will be an extremely young line, made up of freshmen Greg O'Connell, Matt Davis and sophomore Caron.

According to the coach, the three have played very well together and could turn out to be quite a line.

Captains on the team are Bill Good and Matt Pilczak. Good plays defense and Pilczak plays forward.

There's another Pilczak who coach Walsh can't say enough about. Joan Pilczak, mother of Matt, "has been one of the driving forces of the hockey team," said Walsh. "She has been doing an outstanding job with the Boosters Club and is the main reason there will be an alumni game this season," the coach added.

Returning to his players, coach Walsh is expecting big contributions from Jay Rasmussen, Heath Hines, Pete Whorskey and Ken Portanova.

"Jay, Heath and Pete have been looking really good in practice," said the coach, "And Ken shows an awful lot of effort.

"The kids have been practicing very hard. Many of them have played spring and fall hockey. The kids have been on a good weight program and have been practicing early mornings and evenings."

The Cohasset team will be participating in a jamboree Saturday, in Watertown, playing Savio Prep in one period and Wayland in another.

Helping coach Walsh put the team together are assistant coaches Mike Hubley and Archie Rasmussen.

The coach concluded, "We had a very nice turnout this year. There is some good talent on the team and we don't want to rush the youngsters. As the kids show what they can do we will talk about them.

"Last year was a rebuilding year. This year we'll see what the kids can do."

HEAD ABOVE THE REST

Cohasset goalkeeper Kevin DeVito is all concentration as he gets ready to grab the ball. After an exciting fall season that saw the boys soccer team and the field hockey team reach the playoffs, the high school sports scene now shifts indoors for the winter.

Cohasset hockey season off to a good start

Alumni-varsity game to return

The highly promising 1999-2000 Cohasset High School Skippers hockey team held its season opener dinner recently at the Lightkeeper's Residence. Parents and players enjoyed an Italian pot luck dinner coordinated by Debbie Niessink, Chris Straughn and Pam Prendergast — all mothers of players on the team.

Dennis Walsh and his staff of Michael Hubley, Archie Rasmussen and Rob Dennis acknowledged the hard work of this team in the preseason and their team spirit.

"This team is going to have a lot of fun and be a lot of fun for fans to watch," said Walsh.

The majority of the team players participated in spring and fall high school hockey leagues, each of which consisted of a 10-game schedule every Saturday night. Rob Dennis and Jim Trahon, who coached the players during the off-season games, shared with the crowd gathered that there is every reason to feel that this will really be a winning season.

Michael Hubley, father of former standout Cohasset player Ryan Hubley, who is attending school in Canada, told the players and parents, "It could well be that this is the year to go to the states."

Hubley had been an inspiration to the team during the years his son played. He has been instrumental in motivating the players to participate in weight training in the school's fitness center in preparing themselves for this season.

"Every one of these players is dedicated to playing their best hockey and being in the best shape. They are putting on weight and muscle and maturing as players," Hubley said.

Coach Walsh reflected on the successful teams in Cohasset's past, saying, "the newest players on the team, along with the experienced, veteran players, have a love for the game and a burning desire to win!"

This year's roster includes freshmen Matt Davis, John Durkin, Rob Lehr, Greg O'Connell and Patrick Reardon; sophomores David Bouchard, Chris Caron, Steve Mikkanen, Will Moody, Joe Niessink, Ken Portanova, Will Prendergast, Tim Straughn and Peter Whoriskey; juniors Andrew Dennis, Heath Heinz, Dan Morse, Jay Rasmussen and Jim Trahon; and senior co-captains Bill Good and Matt Pilczak, who both praised their fellow teammates for their participation in the preseason leagues and for their hard work and dedication to the team.

The student body and members of the community are encouraged to cheer on the team during the season and to mark the calendar for Jan. 1 at 7:40 p.m. for an Alumni-Varsity game at Pilgrim Skating Arena in Hingham.

Once a yearly tradition on New Year's Day, there has not been an Alumni-Varsity game in approximately 10 years. The Cohasset Hockey Boosters hope to reinstate the tradition with this year's game featuring such players as: Peter Flynn '75, uncle of player Jim Trahon; Jack McNeill '82, David Farrag '90, and Frank Mahoney '80, as well as many other former players.

"Our boys will be ready to show the alumni the strong level of current playing ability and skill level. This will be a great New Year's Day game for all to enjoy," Walsh said. Anyone needing more information about the Alumni-Varsity game can call Ann Rasmussen at 383-1907.

There is little doubt around Cohasset that the 1999-2000 season will be exciting. The team has been getting ready to play for quite a while and fans all over town are urged to come out and enjoy the games this season.

The first game of the season is scheduled for Tuesday, Dec. 14 at 7:40 p.m. at Pilgrim Arena where Cohasset's "Team 2000" will face-off against Abington. Other December games include Saturday, Dec. 18 at 6:50 p.m. in Randolph and Monday, Dec. 20 at 6:10 p.m. at Pilgrim Arena.

A complete schedule will be published very soon.

Volunteers at Osgood School

Although the first date was rained out, the recent "Make A Difference" make-up day was a big success. Many people turned out to give valuable time to assist on the three projects; a new nature trail next to the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools, painting new games on the asphalt portion of the playground and light cleaning inside at the Osgood. Through the efforts of many, the nature trail is now complete, the playground has two new tetherballs and some landscaping, and the inside of the school sparkles. The Cohasset PSO thanks everyone who pitched in with their time, effort and donations.

'Whirling Thunder' visits

Paul Bullock or "Whirling Thunder" as he is known in Wampanoag visits the Osgood School.

In conjunction with the second grade study of the Wampanoag Native American tribe, the Cohasset PSO sponsored a visit this fall by Paul Bullock, "Whirling Thunder," as he is known in Wampanoag.

Dressed in Native American clothing and ceremonial dress from the 1600-1700s, he performed a traditional dance with music, and involved the children in a ceremonial dance.

His wife Hamet Bullock and friend Dolores, "Shining Star," a Narragansett Native American, also participated in the performance. Their visit helped the children gain a better understanding of the life of the Native American people at the time of the Pilgrims' arrival, as well as their relationship to the colonists.

POLICE LOG

Man arraigned on child pornography charges

Allegedly took photos at Sandy Beach

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A Norwell man was arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court on child pornography charges as a result of photographs he allegedly took at Sandy Beach last summer.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said Mark R. Sullivan, 33, of 215 Forest St. in Norwell was arrested on a warrant that arose from a joint investigation by Cohasset police and state police.

Jackson said police have identified 14 photos of "young children unclothed at the beach" that Sullivan allegedly took in Cohasset. The children in the photographs were from two to six years of age, he said.

Jackson said Sullivan allegedly used a telescope device in the telephoto lens that allowed him to point the camera in one direction while taking photographs 45 degrees in another direction.

He said Sullivan, who apparently moved to Norwell recently from Pembroke, is known to Cohasset police.

"We have had numerous calls complaining about him at Sandy Beach that date back to June of 1996," Jackson said. The callers alleged that Sullivan had cameras and was acting suspiciously, he explained. But lacking probable cause for an arrest, Jackson said police "would give him a parking ticket and move him along." (Sandy Beach parking is restricted to Cohasset residents who display a beach sticker on their vehicle).

Sullivan plead not guilty on Monday to two charges: possession of child pornography and exhibiting a child in a state of nudity. A pre-trial conference is scheduled for Dec. 22, Jackson said. Sullivan also faces similar charges in Plymouth County for allegedly possessing photographs of naked children bathing at Nantasket Beach in Hull. He was arraigned on the Plymouth County charges in October.

Sullivan was initially arrested in August after he was allegedly seen taking pictures of young children swimming naked in Walden Pond inb Concord. He was later released on $1,500 cash bail and has been free since. Middlesex County Assistant District Attorney Erin Duggan said during the August arraignment that despite Sullivan's not guilty plea, he cited psychological problems and confessed to photographing children at Nantasket and Sandy beaches.

Following Sullivan's arrest at Walden Pond, police searched Sullivan's Pembroke home, there they found pictures depicting young children bathing and being changed at local beaches, Pembroke police said.

Sullivan's attorney Jack Atwood of Plymouth did not return phone calls.

Juvenile vandals are caught

Police Det. Rick Grassie said police apprehended a group of six juveniles that was responsible for the broken windows at the new Osgood School that occurred on Halloween. The youths were all students at the middle school.

Grassie said police and school officials determined that in lieu of court action and because of the cooperation of those involved and their families that would make full restitution to the town, the juveniles would perform some community service with the schools.

The replacement cost of the windows at Osgood is about $700, Grassie said. The juveniles were not responsible for the broken windows at the high school or the graffiti in the village and surrounding areas that night, he said.

"None of the kids had been in any trouble before," Grassie said. "They are decent students at school.

"But the next time, guess what? There's no talking, we just go to court."

Town receives strong bond rating

Affects taxpayers by its influence on debt service interest rates

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset has received a AA rating on its $2.6 million bonds from two different credit rating services, Standard and Poor's and Moody's, signifying the town's strong financial management and high wealth levels.

The rating is good news for taxpayers, who benefit from low interest rates when bond ratings are high.

"The bond rating is very important, because it affects the interest on debt service," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "We just borrowed $2.6 million at 4.84 percent interest. If we had a lower bond rating, the interest rate would be higher and taxpayers would have more interest payments."

The $2.6 million bonds are being sold to finance a number of town projects, with the largest portion, $1.4 million, being used for the construction of a water tank on Scituate Hill. The balance of the funds are being spread among six other projects, including library plans, school technology, and the James Brook flood abatement project.

Standard and Poor's, an independent firm which appraises credit quality, issues ratings on municipal bonds ranging from its lowest, BBB, to its highest, AAA. Karl Jacob, one of the Standard and Poor's analysts who worked on the rating for Cohasset, said the AA rating given the town is the firm's second-highest.

"The BBB rating is typically given to older inner cities or very small towns," Jacob said. "The average rating is an A. In Massachusetts, we've only given two AAA ratings, to Wellesley and Cambridge. With a AA rating, Cohasset is certainly on the high end of our scale."

Jacob said Standard and Poor's looks at four major factors in determining a town's bond rating.

"We look at a town's finances, its amount of debt, its financial management, and the economy," he said. "Cohasset's economy is essentially Boston's economy, which is very strong right now. The town has good finances, a lot of wealth, high property values, and a and a 99 percent tax collection rate. The debt per capita is kind of high at $3,000, but the town has a history of voting for debt exclusion overrides of Proposition 2 1/2."

"The bond rating is very important, because it affects the interest on debt service. We just borrowed $2.6 million at 4.84 percent interest. If we had a lower bond rating, the interest rate would be higher and taxpayers would have more interest payments."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Town accountant Michael Buckley said this overall picture of a town's financial health shows its ability to secure its bonds.

"The credit agencies are looking at all indicators that say a town can or can't pay back it's debt," he said.

Cohasset is one of 20 Massachusetts cities and towns given the AA rating by Standard and Poor's. Towns are measured against others nationwide when determining a rating.

"Nationwide, we only have 32 AAA cities and towns," Jacob said. "Those towns, like Wellesley, Avon, Connecticut, and Fairfield, Connecticut, have incredibly high wealth levels and typically have high reserves. To be a AAA, you have to have the ability to generate revenue. As far as wealth levels, Cohasset is on par with those towns, but it's reserves are a bit lower. But the potential is there for a AAA rating in the future."

Jacob said Cohasset is one of the strongest AA-rated towns in Massachusetts, which he said include Burlington, Arlington, Canton, and Hingham.

Haddad acknowledged that the town's relatively low level of reserves is a factor which keeps Cohasset from attaining a AAA rating.

"We've been forced to use our reserves the last couple of years to fund budgets, and that's showing a trend," he said.

Buckley said the town's reliance on a tax base which is 90 percent residential also holds Cohasset back, but town treasurer/collector Joseph DiVito said the town's heavily residential nature could actually endure its financial stability.

"The residential market is less volatile than the commercial market," he said. "It's less susceptible to market changes. When the [illegible] crashed six years ago, the co[illegible]cial buildings were vacated.."

Because a town's bond rating is determined in part by measuring it against towns in other states, the health of the state economy is also a factor in determining the rating.

"When Michael Dukakis was leaving, and Weld was coming in as Governor, the state took money back from programs it said it would fund," Haddad said. "We're looking at a school project in the next few years. If the state doesn't pay its 60 percent, it would have a definite impact on the bond rating."

A strong bond rating for Cohasset is also in the best interest of Massachusetts, because the amount it will have to reimburse the town will be less with a strong rating.

"On a school project, the state reimburses 60 percent of the principal and the interest," Buckley said. "If the interest rate is lower, the state pays less in reimbursement costs. Both the state and the town save money."

Jacob said Standard and Poor's only issues credit ratings at the request of cities or towns.

"In a few cases, a town will just want an independent appraisal of its credit, but in 99 percent of the cases the rating is related to a bond sale.," he said.

Haddad said the town will need such a rating when the school renovation project, currently estimated at $41 million, is brought to the March town meeting.

"We always look at the bond rating before we do a major bond issue," he said. "We've got to make sure we've got our financial ducks in a row before March."

Citizen of year nominations are open

In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1999 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 7. Please see the nomination form on page 19.

The deadline for nominations for the 1999 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 7. Please see the nomination form on page 19. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the 1999 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January 2000.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

Decking the halls for the holidays

Garden club tour draws 800

By Lauryn Mittleman
CORRESPONDENT

'Twas just weeks before Christmas and all through the tour, they came seeking ideas, motivation and more.

Yes, last Wednesday's 13th annual "The Community Garden Club of Cohasset Decks the Halls For a Very Merry House Tour" provided all the decorative inspiration and seasonal spirit one would wish for. The only problem . . .

"Now I have to go home and get to work!," commented some at tour's end.

... in the dining room the holiday table was made majestic by seven creme puff "swans-a-swimming" in pools of dark chocolate.

This year five homes and one church were lovingly prepared with fires in the hearth, beautifully wrapped gifts here and there, and don't forget the stockings hung with care. As for the Christmas trees — from ones dressed up with angels and stars, to others outfitted with whimsical dried pasta filled globes — each was as unique as the home's style itself.

Speaking of decor, from classic to contemporary, each of the five interiors made an equally individual and beautiful backdrop, as more than 800 people came out to admire the group. At the end of the day, a healthy amount was raised to fund The Community Garden Club's numerous civic projects including historic preservation, town beautification, scholarship grants, conservation and community education programs.

"It's been a marvelous turnout,"

Lending Worcester a helping hand

Cohasset helps in the search effort after fatal blaze

By Julie Mehegan
STAFF WRITER

Like reinforcements called to the battlefield, dozens of local firefighters drove to the front lines in Worcester Friday, anxious to relieve the battle-worn men and women of the Worcester Fire Department who had been searching for their lost comrades since Dec. 3.

This local corps of firefighters — men from Hanover and Norwell, Pembroke and Rockland, Cohasset and Duxbury, themselves grieving the loss of the six firefighters in the fatal warehouse fire Dec. 3 — took their shifts in Worcester Friday night to help protect the heartbroken people of a weary city.

"Like everyone else, I was completely shocked when I heard what happened," said Capt. Robert Silvia, a Cohasset firefighter. "When we go to work every day, we never think something like this is going to happen. I saw an interview with one of the men's wives, and she said the same thing. Her husband came home every night, and she always thought he would."

The group of South Shore firefighters was part of a local task force, one of several statewide mobilized to assist the Worcester firefighters.

$390K school override passes

Voter turnout low at 24 percent

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

By a vote of 770-476, citizens passed a $390,000 override on Saturday to finance the continued study of renovations to Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle-High School.

A turnout at the polls of just 24 percent, however, suggests the vote may be something less than a mandate.

"I'm cautiously optimistic, but this is just another step in the process," said school facilities chairman Rob Spofford. "Clearly , the majority of the people who had an interest in voting understood what we're trying to do."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she was happy with the outcome, saying the schools are in desperate need of renovation.

"I'm pleased that we're through step one in this process," she said. "These schools are in a sad state of disrepair and the town needs to do something about. Looking back, this is something that probably should have been done 20 years ago."

Because fewer than one-quarter of the town's registered voters cast their ballots at Town Hall in Saturday's override election, Spofford said it is difficult to get a read on the town's opinion of the overall school renova-

State officials want end to train lawsuit

MBTA uses tunnel as a carrot

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Hingham Greenbush lawsuit may have put the town and state transportation office in a veritable Catch-22 situation.

Kevin Sullivan, state secretary of environmental affairs, wants the town to drop its lawsuit or the state could take the tunnel off the table.

And state Rep. Joseph C. Sullivan, D-Braintree, house chairman of the transportation committee, said it's counterproductive to negotiate under a legal cloud.

"It's difficult to have meaningful mitigation on the tunnel or any other alternative if Hingham is going to object through the courts," Rep. Sullivan said.

But the 1996 lawsuit was launched to ensure the project would be subject to federal environmental review with the hope of forcing the MBTA to look at alternatives to at-grade rail through Hingham. In other words, if Greenbush becomes a reality, the lawsuit could be the town's best hope for the tunnel under the Lincoln National Register Historic District, which includes Hingham Square.

The lawsuit was dealt a blow earlier this month when in a 25-page decision, a federal court magistrate sided with the MBTA — a development that initially buoyed the state agency. But Hingham exercised its right to ask that a federal judge hear the case. Either side could ultimately appeal the judge's ruling.

"We have not ruled it out. But we have not said it was a go."
— Jon Carlisle, state transportation office spokesman

According to published reports, Hingham's decision to press on with the lawsuit prompted the transportation secretary's threat to withdraw the tunnel option. And the court decision triggered a letter from Rep. Sullivan to Hingham selectmen urging them to establish "a meaningful mitigation program" with the MBTA. (See letter, page 8).

Jon Carlisle, spokesman for Secretary Sullivan's office, confirmed this week that the MBTA has not agreed to build the tunnel that is expected to cost about $30 million.

"We have not ruled it out," he said. "But we have not said it is a go."

Marshfield's Carolina Hill joins the state's fight against homelessness

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Its hallways buzz with activity, and it is alive with the holiday spirit.

Christmas trees adorned with ornaments made by children decorate many of its spacious rooms, and the smell of lunches being prepared floats down its passageways.

The place is Carolina Hill, a homeless shelter in Marshfield. The time is Christmas, and if one were to walk through the place, he or she would be amazed at the overwhelmingly cheerful atmosphere.

The people who live there are less fortunate, but they are celebrating the season as anyone else would.

And this year, readers of Community Newspaper Company's publications on the South Shore can help lift that celebratory spirit even higher.

Jack Leamey of Boston will spend the holidays with his two sons at the Carolina Hill homeless shelter in Marshfield.

Throughout this holiday season, the paper is sponsoring the Gifts of Hope campaign to benefit three organizations helping the homeless: Father Bill's Place in Quincy; the South Shore Friends of the Homeless in Weymouth, and Carolina Hill.

Elliot Binder, Carolina Hill's executive director, has dedicated a large part of his life to service for the homeless. What's more, he has worked in the same building since 1982, the facility now known as Carolina Hill.

Carolina Hill started in 1982, when the building served as a respite center for "disabled and delayed children," Binder said. In 1988, however, Binder switched gears when recognition of the homelessness problem in Massachusetts started to grow.

"We had this facility," Binder said, "and I was used to dealing with things like residential care. Somebody had told me at the time that there was a great need for it."

And so, a homeless shelter was

Drug and Alcohol committee receives grant

Bell Atlantic director of community relations Bob Noble appeared at the Dec. 1 selectmen's meeting to present a check for $3,500 to the Rev. Cliff Cutler, chairman of the Drug and Alcohol committee.

"This is part of Bell Atlantic's program of giving back to the communities we serve," Noble said. "I'd like to thank Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray for alerting us to this committee."

Cutler also had kind words for Cohasset's longtime state representative.

"We're extremely thankful for her interest and her work in helping this committee," he said. "We'll continue to be supportive of parents, kids, and the town in issues relating to drugs and alcohol."

Warrant open for annual town meeting

At their meeting Tuesday night, selectmen voted to open the warrant for the 2000 annual town meeting, scheduled for Saturday, March 25.

Citizen petition articles, which require a minimum of ten signatures for inclusion on the warrant, must be submitted by Jan. 10.

Nomination papers for the annual town election, which will be held Saturday, April 8, will be available Jan. 10 and must be submitted by Feb. 21.

Articles other than citizen petitions must be submitted by Thursday, Jan. 13 for inclusion in the annual town meeting warrant.

New committees are appointed

Two new committees of the Board of Selectmen were created at the board's Tuesday meeting.

The police/fire station study committee is to be made up of police chief Brian Noonan, fire chief Roger Lincoln, and three interested citizens.

Originally, Town Manager Mark Haddad and selectman Ronnie McMorris had drafted a charge for the committee which included five interested residents and both Noonan and Lincoln as ex-officio members.

Selectman Merle Brown thought the suggested format would prove cumbersome.

"I think we've got way too many people here," he said. "The police chief and the fire chief should be voting members. They pay taxes and live in the town. I think we only need them and three citizens."

His fellow selectmen agreed and amended the charge of the committee as Brown suggested. Only one opening remains on the committee, as George McGoldrick, 93 Black Rock Rd., and Ann Brophy, 16 Beechwood St., were appointed to join Noonan and Lincoln on the committee.

Selectmen also approved the charge for a seven-member senior housing committee, which will consist of a selectmen, a member of the Council on Elder Affairs, a representative from 60 Elm Street, an individual with development or engineering experience, and three town residents over the age of 55.

Ronnie McMorris will represent the selectmen on the committee, and will be joined by Roger Plante of Elder Affairs, Nancy Barrett of 60 Elm Street, and residents Joseph Buckley, 28 Linden Dr., Dorothy Keville, 6 Stockbridge St., Jane Marsh, 295 Forest Ave., and Marge Charles, 85 Linden Dr.

The police/fire study committee is to make its recommendations to selectmen by spring 2000, while the senior housing committee is slated to do so in summer 2000.

Landfill holiday hours

The Recycling Transfer Facility will close at 1 p.m. Friday, Dec. 24, and re-open Sunday, Dec. 26.

Town meeting process on table

Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to schedule town moderator George Marlette on a future agenda to discuss town meeting procedures.

"I'm really uncomfortable with the way town meeting is run," selectman Thomas Callahan said. "We need a hybrid of the old way and the new way. The old way, with the motions being read out loud, was slow, but I feel like we're moving through the articles a little too fast now."

Fellow selectman Diane Sullivan agreed with Callahan's appraisal.

"There are so many important articles that fly by if you just turn your head for a second," she said.

Haddad said Marlette would likely be amenable to the suggestions of selectmen.

"I know that George is always looking for ways to improve the town meeting process."

Jan. discussion on Cunningham Bridge

Selectmen announced that a hearing will be held during one of their January meetings to discuss creating two parking spaces on Cunningham Bridge.

The date of the hearing has not been set, but Town Manager Mark Haddad promised more information would be forthcoming in the near future.

Selectmen won't meet next week

Selectmen voted to cancel their Dec. 21 meeting on Tuesday night, after being informed of a limited agenda for the meeting by Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"We have literally nothing scheduled for next week," he told selectmen. "People are going to be away for the holidays."

School fields are closed

Miliken and Alumni Fields will be closed until further notice so that annual maintenance can be done in preparation of spring sports.

State grant for Art Center

The South Shore Art Center will be awarded $7,880 in state grants by the Massachusetts Cultural Council, state Sen. Robert Hedlund said. The matching grant will be used by the organization to encourage participation in and knowledge of the arts among residents of all South Shore communities by providing education, presenting exhibitions and offering programming in the visual arts.

"Programs like the South Shore Art Center, that are supported by the Massachusetts Cultural Council, play an important role in our community," Hedlund said. "Programs like this are an essential resource to a community's quality of life and economic prosperity. Public support ensures that the cultural and educational opportunities provided by this program are available for everyone."

The grant is funded by the MCC's Organizational Support Program, which provides multi-year operating support for public programs in the arts, sciences and humanities administered by local cultural organizations and schools that have excelled in serving the public. For more than 30 years, the MCC has been committed to improving the quality of cultural life across the Commonwealth. In addition to organizational support grants, MCC programs also bring artists into schools and help local cultural councils meet the specific cultural needs of every city and town.

Study predicts big population growth

1,000 more residents estimated by 2020

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A demographic study issued by the New England School Development Council (NESDEC) estimates the population of Cohasset will swell from 7,806 to 8,863 by the year 2020.

While the report was undertaken by NESDEC as part of the current school renovation project, Town Manager Mark Haddad said increased school enrollments would only be one effect of a growing population.

"On the town side, 1,000 additional people could tax our highway departments, with a need for new roads. There will likely be more need for our police and fire departments as well. We just hired four people for the fire department and we may also see requests for additional officers in the police department. The Recycling Transfer Facility will be taxed as well. We pay a fee to get rid of our trash, and that fee will increase as more people create more trash."

Building commissioner Bob Egan said he didn't know how1,000 new people would find a place to live in Cohasset.

"There's one good-sized subdivision of 25 homes being discussed, and that's Jerusalem Road Estates," he said. "There really are no other undeveloped tracts of land in town for such a large subdivision. You might see some ten-lot subdivisions. But without significantly increasing the housing stock, I don't see where the town will get 1,000 more people."

The NESDEC report echoes Egan's analysis of the town's housing situation. It predicates the projected population growth on a belief that large families will buy homes currently occupied by empty-nesters or families with only one or two children.

"Since the town of Cohasset does not have significant land area for new home construction," the report states, "future growth of school enrollments will be based primarily on the turnover of existing housing stock from families with few, if any, school age children to younger, larger families."

"I think the opposite of this projected growth could occur. If the economy stays strong, it could price out a lot of the younger families with kids who want to move here."
Planning board chairman Al Moore

Egan said his experience in the town paints a different picture.

"I don't see anything that points to that conclusion. Some senior citizens may move out. From what I've seen in this town, though, it seems the larger the houses, the smaller the number of people who live in them."

Planning board chairman Al Moore said the NESDEC report should be viewed with a certain amount of skepticism.

"No matter what you call this demographic study, it's still a guess," he said. "One thing is for certain. The family size in Cohasset has been getting smaller, which is a function of an aging population. Using myself as an example, my children are now out of school and gone. It's just my wife and I at home now. I think the opposite of this projected growth could occur. If the economy stays strong, it could price out a lot of the younger families with kids who want to move here."

According to the NESDEC report, both the 0-4 and over-65 age groups grew by 30 percent between 1980 and 1995. The report says growth in those age groups could be a signal of young families replacing older ones.

"The increases in the 0-4 population lead directly to increased elementary school enrollments," the report states, "and increases in the over-65 population can lead to greater turnover of properties from older to younger families."

Moore said the NEDSEC report seemed more realistic than the recent buildout analysis done by the Massachusetts Area Planning Council (MAPC), which said Cohasset could see 1,000 new households.

"The buildout was an alarmist type of report, and, in my opinion, provided a false reading on where population growth might occur. But 1,000 additional people in 20 years doesn't seem real excessive. The number could be a little low or it might be a little high.

In looking at the future development of the town, Moore said the planning board looks for evidence that points to shifts in the types of buildings being planned in town.

"From a planning standpoint, we try to look at trends," he said. "Are people doing massive rehabs of existing properties, which will lead to larger families replacing smaller ones? How many building permits are being pulled? We try to look at real data."

New president in charge at Pilgrim Co-operative Bank

Gauthier taking over from longtime president Edward Mulvey

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A change at the top has taken place at Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, an event which hasn't occurred in 30 years.

New president Paul Gauthier is replacing longtime president Edward Mulvey, who has been the bank's executive officer since 1969. Mulvey has agreed to put off retirement until July, and Gauthier is grateful for the opportunity to receive his predecessor's sage advice.

"Ed is my eyes to Cohasset," Gauthier said. "He knows everyone and knows the business inside and out."

"The opportunity to be president of this bank is just immense."
— Paul Gauthier

Gauthier comes to Pilgrim Co-operative from Commerce Bank and Trust in Worcester, where he served as executive vice-president and chief operating officer. He is currently commuting while building a house for his family in Hanover. The constant travel may be a nuisance, but he said the chance to come to Cohasset was too good to pass up.

"The opportunity to be president of this bank is just immense," he said. "It's been here since 1916 and it's described by other bankers as a jewel. We've got $82 million in assets and there's nothing you can't get here. We can provide any services that larger banks can provide.

Pilgrim Co-operative is a community-based thrift bank, meaning it is literally owned by its depositors. Gauthier said the personal service offered by community-based banks are their biggest selling points.

"Our frame of reference is customer-based, not stockholder-based," he said. "The community-based bank offers something larger banks can't provide and don't want to provide. We tend to be more personally acquainted with our customers and tend to be an advisor as much as anything."

Gauthier's industry experience has been in community-based banks similar to Pilgrim Co-operative. He was the chief financial officer at Mutual Savings Bank in Franklin, near the Rhode Island border, for eleven years prior to heading to Worcester.

"I've been in this business since 1970," he said. "I've learned that customer service is always the focus. If we're committed to our depositors, we'll always be profitable."

Gauthier said Pilgrim Co-operative has plans to grow and expand the franchise, but said it would not stray from the values which have kept it in Cohasset for 83 years.

"We have no desire to be the biggest bank in Massachusetts," he said. "We will always provide Cohasset customers with the level of service to which they have been accustomed."

After spending some time in Cohasset, Gauthier said he has been impressed both by the town's beauty and the warmth of its people.

"This is an amazing community and it's so pretty to look at," he said, gesturing out of his window on to S. Main Street. "I mean, it's like Dickensville. Sometimes, I'll take my lunch and just drive down to Jerusalem Road and look out into the water. I've also been pleased with the response I've gotten from the community. Everyone has been so warm."

Citizen of year nominations are open

In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1999 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 7. Please see the nomination form on page 14. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

The deadline for nominations for the 1999 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 7. Please see the nomination form on page 19.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the 1999 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January 2000.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

State officials want an end to train lawsuit

Holden said he found it troubling that state officials would threaten to pull away something that hasn't actually been put forward.

"There hasn't been to date that I'm aware of any offer of a tunnel," Holden said. He pointed out that the MBTA has only "hinted" that a tunnel was feasible when a recent study concluded a short "cut-and-cover" tunnel would not push Greenbush through the $400 million cost ceiling placed on the project by Gov. Paul Cellucci last summer.

Holden said that if, in fact, the town is being offered an alternative to surface rail — such as the tunnel — then the MBTA should sit down with Hingham in order to determine if it provides adequate protection to the town.

"We have no idea what, where, how long, how many crossings would be eliminated, how it would impact homes and businesses," he said.

But Rep. Sullivan said it's time for Hingham to open the door to serious mitigation discussions by saying it would accept Greenbush with a tunnel.

"Having to continue to fight through the courts is costing money and is, in my view, a waste of energy," he said.

Rep. Sullivan said recent signals — from the EPA (on pollution) and Army Corps of Engineers (that the train would best answer transportation issues put forth by the MBTA) — coupled with the lawsuit ruling give the green light to the project.

"Any reasonable person would have to say all arrows point to the construction of Greenbush," he said. "Every other community has established mitigation discussions. Hingham needs to get on board that train."

Hingham selectman changes stance on train

Hingham Selectman Martin Crane said it's time for Hingham to rethink its opposition to Greenbush.

The selectman — who until now has been an ardent opponent of Greenbush — said in a telephone interview Tuesday that it was time to reexamine the town's position with respect to its strategy on Greenbush.

"It's time to take a deep breath and decide what is best," Crane said. "This is one time that I feel a change in direction of course is beneficial but it must come with serious mitigation attempts on the part of the MBTA of which the tunnel is a very important part."

Crane said he feels that transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan and Kevin Dasey, who is the MBTA liaison to Greenbush towns, are sincere.

"I feel the people on the other side of the table are more understanding of our position and are willing to stand behind their words," he said.

Crane stopped short of saying the town should drop its lawsuit. He stressed that to this point the lawsuit was money and time well spent because it gave the town leverage, helped bring a focus on environmental issues and bought time not only for Hingham but for other towns in the Greenbush corridor.

"Legal action can be dropped at any stage," he said.

Crane said it's time to sit down with the MBTA and work out the best mitigation measures for Hingham.

"I'm willing to say 'I'll give my inch,' if you'll give your inch," he said. "I think that approach will be better for the people we represent."

tion project.

"I'm disappointed in the low turnout," he said, "but I know we'll have a large turnout when the entire project is voted on in March. It seems there is a base of about 500 people who don't want their taxes raised, and they vote. To counter that opinion, we appealed to a broad base for support. We were able to get enough of those people to the polls to be successful."

To gain voter approval in March for a renovation project which is estimated to cost $41 million, Spofford said much more work will have to be done.

"We need to try and identify who those 770 [who voted for the project] are and keep them on our side " he said. "We'll probably need another 800 or 900 votes to approve the project in March, which won't be an easy task."

To convince voters of the need for the renovation project, Spofford said a political action committee will be formed , which will be separate and distinct from the school facilities committee.

"There's a community group, which is in its early formation stages, that will focus on getting the message out to voters about the renovation project," he said.

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said a concerted effort will be made to educate citizens about the urgent need for renovations.

"We're going to have further open forums in the next few months," he said. "We'll also have coffees to meet with smaller groups. We want to educate as many people as possible about the urgent need for these renovations."

"We need to try and identify who those 770 [who voted for the project] are and keep them on our side. We'll probably need another 800 or 900 votes to approve the project in March, which won't be an easy task."

School facilities committee chairman Rob Spofford

Spofford met some of those who will need convincing at Saturday's override election. Keeping consistent with a theme espoused by members of the school committee, school facilities committee, and selectmen in the weeks prior to last week's special town meeting, he said voters on the fence should witness firsthand the conditions at Deer Hill and the middle-high school.

"I spoke to a number of people on Saturday who weren't for this project," he said. "Most of those people had not been in to see the buildings. I strongly encourage people to get in and see these buildings for themselves."

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun said it will be paramount to get the message out to many more voters for the Mar. 25 annual town meeting and a possible override election, scheduled for Apr. 8.

"I estimate the turnout at the next override election will be more than double what we had this time," she said. "I think the low turnout had more to do with the holidays than voter apathy. I am concerned that some parents might think passage of the renovation project is a done deal. Gratefully, we had a substantial margin this time, but we'll have a lot more voters to convince in March."

Spofford said the school facilities committee would settle on one chosen renovation option for both schools by its Jan. 19 meeting. The chosen option will meet state guidelines for 60 percent reimbursement by addressing increased enrollments and program enhancements, while ensuring a 50-year life span for the rehabbed school buildings.

Not all citizens are convinced of the need for such an expansive project. At last week's town meeting, some wanted to make sure they would be able to see cost estimates for a basic renovation option, which would not be geared toward meeting state requirements. Such an option would focus upon needed infrastructure improvements and handicapped-accessible features necessary to meet guidelines of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

Spofford said cost estimates for both a state-reimbursable renovation option and a basic renovation option would be provided to voters at March's annual town meeting.

"From now until March, we will be spending our time looking at two options," he said. "A lot of people are asking if we're just going to give lip service to the basic renovation option. I can unequivocally say that we'll do our due diligence and look at the cost of strictly doing renovations, without meeting the state criteria. Because of the 60 percent reimbursement, however, it may be cost the town more to not meet the state requirements. That 60 percent is like a carrot that the state holds out there."

The school committee has agreed on new grade configurations, which are to take effect if and when a renovation project is completed. Under the proposed reconfiguration, the sixth grade will move from Deer Hill to the middle-high school, while the third grade will move from Osgood to Deer Hill. The school facilities committee is studying renovation options with the reconfiguration in mind.

"We're taking what the school committee gave us and fine-tuning these options more than anything else," Spofford said. "Getting this override approved really frees us to think about these buildings and get ready for March."

Beginning with its Dec. 22 meeting, the school facilities committee will meet every Wednesday, the only exception being the Dec. 29 meeting between Christmas and New Year's. The meetings will be held in the Selectmen's Meeting Room at Town Hall and will be televised on cable channel 3.

Selectmen want answers

Benefits of some school employees called into question

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Town Manager Mark Haddad touched off a firestorm on Tuesday night when he told selectmen of an oversight found during preparations for the FY 2001 budget.

"We found some individuals who were working under 20 hours and still getting benefits," he said. "These individuals were school cafeteria employees and so I sent letters to the school department saying the benefits of those employees would be cut off. [School committee chairman] Mark DeGiacomo and [superintendent] Ted Malvey asked for a reconsideration. We said we would keep them on if they worked 20 hours."

Haddad told selectmen that from Nov. 1998 to Nov. 1999, six employees of the school cafeteria who were scheduled to work 20 hours per week had actually worked 17 hours per week.

In a telephone interview on Wednesday, Haddad said those employees had been working the necessary 20 hours per week to attain benefits.

"We went back 2-3 years and found they had been working 20 hours a week," he said. "Only from Nov. 1998 to Nov. 1999 were they under 20 hours a week."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the town could face repercussions if ineligible employees are receiving benefits.

"These individuals haven't been eligible for a year," she said. "I work in the health insurance industry, and if you have people on your health plan who shouldn't legally be there, the insurance company can deny benefits. We should look at the payroll records and investigate this fully."

Fellow selectman Ronnie McMorris said the cafeteria workers should not lose their benefits because of an oversight.

"The school committee is an elected, independent board, and they say these employees are needed at 20 hours," she told Sullivan. "Anytime the sewer commission or the water commission makes a decision, you say it's not our place to question it. These employees would be affected drastically if they lost their benefits."

"Those employees were all hired to work 20 hours. Historically, they have worked over 20 hours. The original calculation this year may not have taken vacation days or sick days into account. I don't know why they're only listed at 17 hours."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo

DeGiacomo was unsure why employees who previously had been working 20 hours a week were only recognized as working 17 hours a week this year.

"Those employees were all hired to work 20 hours," he said. "Historically, they have worked over 20 hours. The original calculation this year may not have taken vacation days or sick days into account. I don't know why they're only listed at 17 hours. But this issue was resolved between Mark Haddad and the school committee several weeks ago."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the school department was not alone in not recognizing the error.

"We didn't know about this either, and the benefits are administered on the town side," he said. "We had a town employee in the same situation. I don't want to blame the school department for something we all missed."

Selectman Merle Brown said the town shouldn't have to pay the benefits for the cafeteria workers if they are indeed ineligible.

"The schools are doing a good job with education," he said. "We can see that in the MCAS results. But this is not a welfare town. People struggle to pay their taxes and shouldn't pay the benefits of ineligible employees."

Sullivan wanted to know if the benefits of other town employees were jeopardized by having 17 hour/week employees on the town's benefit plan.

"I want to know the liability to the town," she said. "Let's look at the payroll records and put this to the test."

McMorris didn't see any reason to pore through the employees' payroll records.

"There's no need for a witch hunt," she said.

While the cafeteria employees may now be working 20 hours a week, Brown wanted to know why that was not the case for an entire year.

"This affects the town," he said. "I want to know why they've been at 17 hours all year."

THE DESIGNING WOMAN

by Kathleen Fox ASID

LIVING ON THE EDGE

At one time, most kitchen counters had square edges. In recent years, kitchen designers and homeowners have brought new focus to the edge's potential to show refinement and flair. Regardless of whether you have chosen laminate, granite, solid-surfacing or ceramic tile as your countertop material, the edging can be treated in any of several ways. There is rounded bullnose trim; inserts of tile, wood or metal; an end cap of different material; or a beveled look. One of the favored looks involves the use of wood edging to add a finished look to laminate. This treatment helps eliminate unsightly seams, as well. And, when left unfinished, natural stone has a rough, irregular texture that is well suited to informal settings.

There are many remodeling details that can add value and flair to a kitchen. The kitchen interior design specialists at THE DESIGNING WOMAN can help you create a kitchen that adds value to your home and comfort to your life. You spend a lot of time in the kitchen. Make it a room of distinction. Call us at 781-383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation. Happy Holidays to you and your loved ones!

Hint: Edge treatments for kitchen countertops also include inlaid designs, such as a brass strip set in solid surface material.

Still striking at 91

McLoughlin a valued member of 'Roaring Twenty' bowling group

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

What would you like to be doing when you are 91 years old? If your answer is simply "Be able to get out of bed," you are not alone. For Lothrup Lane nonagenarian Lucille McLoughlin, however, getting out of bed is just the beginning of another active day in a life filled with adventure.

McLoughlin is the oldest of the 'Roaring Twenty', a group of female senior citizens from Cohasset and Scituate who bowl together weekly at the South Shore Community Center.

Grace Tuckerman, 393 S. Main St., an original member of the social group, laughed when recalling its beginnings, saying it's been around longer than she'd care to remember.

"My children were little when this started, and they're in their forties now," she said. "That will tell you how long this group has been going. It started out as 20 gals, most of whom were in the Golf Club together, who wanted to bowl in the winter."

Tuckerman chuckled when discussing the origin of the group's name.

"We called ourselves the 'Roaring Twenties,' because most of us were actually in our twenties back then," she said. "That sure isn't the case now. But we're still a very congenial group and everyone has a lot of fun together."

Members of the group also had a lot of fun discussing the spry McLoughlin.

"Isn't she something?" said group member Rachel Priestman of Scituate in discussing McLoughlin. "She's so witty and she's a pretty good bowler as well. She's got a 62 average, which is better than a lot of people in the group."

Fellow member Martha Gjesteby, 81 Old Pasture Road, said the feisty McLoughlin is quite the character.

"Lucille turns around and bows when she bowls a spare or a strike," Gjesteby said. "She tools around town in her little blue car with the 'LM 1-4-3' license plate on the back, which is amazing at her age. She's always out walking ner dachshund, Pushkin. She's so literate and smart. She's just a joy to be around."

Dressed in a bright orange sweater which mirrors her colorful nature, McLoughlin seemed unwilling to cede any of her independence, even at age 91.

"Of course I drive," she said. "How else would I get anywhere otherwise?"

Few at any age would be able to match McLoughlin's amazing memory. Born in Chestnut Hill in 1908, she recounted the attention her family received when her father brought home their first automobile.

"I remember the first car we ever had," she said. "I was eight years old. It was a green Studebaker, and it was the only car for blocks around. If we had owned the race horse Secretariat, we couldn't have been any more famous in our neighborhood."

A year earlier, in 1915, McLoughlin traveled with her family to San Francisco for the 1915 World's Fair.

"We went across the country by train, and we took a northern route," she said. "I remember being at a train station, and Indians would come down to see the train. They didn't have feathers in their hair or anything like that. They had braided hair and wore black hats. Being a child, I wanted to get a good look at them. The thing I remember most about them is they never said a word. They talked to each other with their fingers."

A mother of five and grandmother of eight, McLoughlin said she is amazed by the events her life has spanned.

"I've seen so much," she said. "During World War I, I remember going to Wellesley on a street car. I was just a little girl then. I was standing near the edge of the car, which was completely full. I was having trouble holding on. There was a soldier running to get on the train, and he jumped on and kept me from falling off. I remember thinking that soldiers were amazing."

In her teenage years, McLoughlin said she and her friends didn't think as much of some other American soldiers.

"I remember Memorial Day parades when the Civil War vets were still around," she said. "They were very old and we thought they were oddities. They were freaks to us."

McLoughlin only has to go back one generation to find a family member who was intimately involved in the events of the Civil War.

"My uncle was the last person pardoned by Abraham Lincoln," she said. "He was 16 at the time and he and two 17-year old friends left St. Louis to join the Southern Army. They were captured by Northern troops and the two 17-year olds were hung. He wasn't hung because he was only 16. He was in prison for years with an iron ball around his ankle, and his mother petitioned President Lincoln for his release. Finally, Lincoln pardoned him."

While her uncle's story is amazing, McLoughlin had amazing adventures of her own.

"In 1937, I went around the world with my father," she said. "My mother had just died, and he needed to get away. The world was a much more interesting place back then. I remember seeing Egyptian soldiers riding camels. When we were in Japan, the people and cities are looked distinctly Japanese. China was the same way. Today, everything is semi-American. American culture has taken over, which is sad because many of the world's civilizations are being lost."

The trip around the world with her father would be only the beginning of her travels.

"I've been to so many places," she said. "One of the most amazing was Machu Picchu, in Peru. We stayed all night there, and it was amazing. You can hear the silence of eternity. It was mystical."

McLoughlin and her family moved to Cohasset for summers beginning in 1951, spending the rest of the year in Brooklyn. She moved to town full-time in 1976 after the death of her beloved husband.

"My husband was one of the most amusing men in the world," she said. "He always made me laugh. He said I made the best apple pie in the world."

McLoughlin's children and grandchildren are spread throughout the globe, but her sister, Genevieve Good, lives in town and keeps her company.

"My sister is wonderful," she said. "Anything I can do, she can do better. Except for making apple pie."

Lucille McLoughlin, center, keeps a keen eye on the score sheet as Helen Mahoney tallies up the latest string.

Having lived in Cohasset for almost half a century, McLoughlin has concerns about the direction the town's young people are heading.

"The young people today don't seem to have a sense of responsibility for their actions," she said. "I think it's very sad. They don't seem to have pride in the town or themselves."

Despite having seen most of the 20th century, McLoughlin is less than enthused about the coming of the year 2000.

"I don't understand what all the fuss is about," she said. "I think it's a lot of hoopla over nothing."

McLoughlin's ambivalence about the beginning of the 21st century is due in part to her yearning for simpler times, when the world seemed to move a bit slower.

"People are in such a hurry to get married when they're young nowadays," she said. "I think it's so sad when people get divorced. I don't know why people make a vow to stick together and it doesn't mean a thing."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Let's talk tunnel

Although state officials say at-grade rail is their preferred alternative, it's clear the tunnel is being floated in an effort to get Hingham on board the Greenbush project.

They want Hingham to drop its train lawsuit launched in 1996 and come to negotiation table.

Initially buoyed by the recent court magistrate's decision siding with MBTA in Hingham's lawsuit — the MBTA and state transportation office are now frustrated that Hingham exercised its right to have a judge hear the case.

That apparently led to transportation secretary Kevin Sullivan's thinly veiled threat last week to take away the tunnel option if Hingham continues to fight the project through the courts.

It also prompted Joseph C. Sullivan, D-Braintree, chairman of the house transportation committee, to write a letter urging Hingham selectmen to realize that "Greenbush will happen" and to start a communication with the MBTA.

The irony is that the lawsuit may ultimately force the MBTA to build a tunnel anyway, if in fact, Greenbush does become a reality.

So where do we go from here?

A reasonable solution would be for the MBTA to officially offer the tunnel and for Hingham to say it will accept Greenbush with a tunnel.

Then both sides could sit down and hammer out the details.

The decision for the MBTA should be a no-brainer. Not long ago, the MBTA said new estimates put the cost of building a short "cut and cover" tunnel under Hingham Square at about $30 million. That is far less than earlier estimates and is a figure that would keep the cost of the project at or near the $400 million cap imposed by Gov. Paul Cellucci. Agreeing to the tunnel would put pressure on Hingham selectmen to get on board.

But whatever happens, Hingham selectmen have the tough call. It appears the town is at a crossroads. Hingham can continue down the path of fighting Greenbush, as the 1995 town meeting urged, and lose valuable time and leverage at the mitigation table. Or the town can compromise and accept the tunnel, which may be the best way to protect the town's Lincoln National Register Historic District from the impact of diesel rail.

As the town's price tag for fighting Greenbush — which is at about $330,000 — continues to climb while the project presses ahead, it may become politically unpopular to continue the legal fight.

But nevertheless, the days of blocking Greenbush at all costs have passed. Hingham should start acting on the assumption that the train is coming and work on getting the best deal it can for safer grade crossings and for those homes and businesses that will be adversely affected.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'Abusing freedom of speech'

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you to all those who supported Saturday's override to fund the additional architectural work needed for school renovations. It is reassuring to find a strong majority of voters agree the need is critical.

I am most appreciative of those citizens of Cohasset who cared about making an informed decision. They took the time to learn the facts by touring the schools, asking questions, listening to the educators, school leaders and the many elected boards who weighed-in on the issue, and rightfully ignoring the handful of persistent nay-sayers.

Several people in town have been willing to grab headlines and attempt to discredit town and school officials with misleading information and outright misstatement of fact. In a letter to the editor last week, William Smith stated that debate on the renovations was cut short at Town Meeting. If you attended or watched that meeting, you'll recall substantial discussion followed by a decision to end debate made by well over the two-thirds majority necessary. He also boldly stated that one of the problems with our schools is "poor educational results as measured by the MCAS". This absurd statement was made in the very same Mariner issue that proclaimed Cohasset High School first in the state on the MCAS and Cohasset's schools as 12th overall. He does a disservice to all of our students and staff who have put so much effort into this achievement. Additionally, he has missed the point on why the reconfiguration is recommended and how teaching today is very different, with very different space needs, than it was 25 years ago. This gentleman may choose to be uninformed, but his broadcasting of such is irresponsible.

Lenora Jenkins stood at Town Meeting declaring repeatedly that the town voted on the spring budget without any knowledge of the negotiated teachers' contract. Informed taxpayers will recall the lengthy debate regarding the $54,000 additional step. Also included in that discussion last spring were the teachers' raises and the changes in the early retirement bonus. She has proven time and again that she will say whatever is necessary to suit her cause.

In numerous letters and town meeting appearances, Joe McElroy has misinterpreted public information and statistics or used incorrect figures in his calculations. In a recent letter to the editor, he wrote that "it is being suggested that the New Osgood is currently "undersized"". It is not, and never has been, suggested by any of the town and school leaders involved in this discussion. He misinterpreted the 1994 town survey regarding grade configurations. The fact is it resulted in over 40 percent of respondents wanting a 6-8 middle school. In addition to that factor, academic and social/emotional issues influenced the decision to reconfigure, not state reimbursement issues. Perhaps the Mariner should stop including his misinformed, misleading editorials. These few are abusing freedom of speech – in effect shouting "Fire!" in a crowded auditorium.

Selectman Diane Sullivan suggests we trust our elected officials to do their jobs. We are taxpayers, too, and have the same to gain or lose that every citizen has. When you have a question or comment about the schools, please consider the source for your information. Call the schools or any member of the School Committee. We are happy to respond to you with the facts and avoid inflammatory misinformation from getting out to the community.

I look forward to the town working together to build something we can all be proud of and that befits Cohasset's support of excellence in education.

QUESTIONS
THE HOUSE AND SENATE, BHRC records local representatives' and senators' votes on four roll calls from recent legislative sessions. All four roll calls are on overriding the governor's vetoes of items in the fiscal 2000 state budget. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.
NEW PARENTS PROGRAM(H 4900) House 139-19, Senate 31-6, overrode Governor Cellucci's veto of $5 million in funding from the tobacco settlement money for expansion of the parenting education and home visiting program for at-risk newborns. The current program is provided only to parents under 20 while the expansion would also cover parents between 20 and 21. Override supporters said this program teaches first-time parents and single mothers parenting skills to help solve problems and prevent child abuse and neglect. Some override opponents said the program is adequately funded at $11.1 million. Others said they support the $5 million expansion but prefer the money come from the general fund instead of the tobacco settlement money which should be reserved for anti-smoking and health programs. (A "Yea" vote is for the $5 million expansion. A "Nay" vote is against it).	N	Y
LOCAL COLAS(H 4900) House 150-7, Senate 37-0, override the governor's veto of a budget section allowing local retirement boards to provide cost of living adjustments (COLAs) of up to three percent for city, town and county employees. Current law only allows communities to increase COLAs by up to the percentage the consumer price index (cpi) rises or up to three percent--whichever is lower. Override supporters said this year's cpi increase is only 1.2 percent and argued that limiting the retirees' COLAs to that amount is unfair. Override opponents said they support the hike to three percent but object to language which provides that towns, which are in a county retirement system because they don't have their own retirement board, be forced to provide the increase based on a vote of the county retirement board instead of the local town meeting. (A "Yea" vote is for allowing the increased COLA. A "Nay" vote is against allowing it).	Y	Y
INMATES' FRIVOLOUS LAWSUITS(H 4900) House 145-13, Senate 30-7, overrode the governor's veto of a section prohibiting inmates from filing lawsuits in court against the state until they have filed the grievance with a newly created administrative grievance system set up within the corrections department and exhausted all remedies in the new system. Override supporters said this will help reduce frivolous lawsuits filed in court by inmates and cited recent lawsuits incldiuing a prisoner suing the state because his cereal was cold. Override opponents said the new law is unnecessary because it essentially duplicates a policy already impelemnted by the corrections department. (A "Yea" vote is for the new restriction. A "Nay" vote is against it).	N	Y
AIDS(H 4900) House 136-22, Senate 37-0, overrode the governor's $1 million veto reduction (from $51.7 million to $50.7 million) in funding for AIDS prevention and treatment. The veto also strikes language requiring that not less than $300,000 be spent on a Springfield pilot program for a comprehensive drug treatment for the prevention of AIDS. Override supporters said the pilot program is a worthwhile one and argued the legislature must continue to adequately fund the fight against AIDS. Override opponents noted that even without the increase, the funding for AIDS prevention and treatment is well funded at $50.7 million. They argued the budget will be out of balance if the legislature keeps adding money to every worthwile program. (A "Yea" vote is for the $1 million. A "Nay" vote is against it).	Y	N

Objects to Zooleck letter

TO THE EDITOR:

Ron Zooleck, president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, in a letter to editor Dec. 9, has done a disservice to the residents of the area it purports to represent by its continuing support of the politically orchestrated Greenbush rail project. He tells us to hurry up and start mitigating for this train knowing that mitigation for this air-polluting heavy diesel rail line is impossible.

He doesn't mention in his letter that the traffic impact sections of the Old Colony Environmental Impact Statements and Reports, clearly state that no highway traffic reduction is anticipated or expected by building these rail lines. He doesn't mention the project's sole purpose is for additional transportation capacity to serve Boston's need for more commuters to fill the 7 million square feet of office space, either currently being built or planned.

Mr. Zooleck tells us to get on with our lives, never mind our right to due process in the courts, and that no realistic alternatives to relieve congestion on our roads to move people efficiently between home and their jobs have been proposed.

Does he really believe that everyone works in downtown Boston? I don't think so.

The MBTA has summarily rejected every less expensive, sensible and safer alternative to the train.

Mr. Zooleck says Hingham town officials owe it to the residents and businesses to plan responsibly for rail service. I suggest the South Shore Chamber of Commerce act responsibly and study the Old Colony Impact Statements and Reports and when they discover the fact that the emissions of diesel locomotives have never been included in these documents, then they can tell our towns how to better care for its citizens.

It is time that we, the citizens of the Commonwealth, demand our constitutional right to clean air under the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act, and we must do it now!

Green light to Greenbush

Mr. Michael Holden, Chairman
Board of Selectmen
Town of Hingham

DEAR CHAIRMAN HOLDEN:

In light of the recent legal opinion by U.S. Magistrate Judge Collings nullifying the town's argument pertaining to the usage of state dollars only for the construction of the Greenbush Line, I write to you with a sense of urgency.

Although I fully recognize that the town of Hingham, through its Board of Selectmen, remains opposed to the reconstruction of Greenbush, by now there should be a sense of reality that Greenbush will be built. In recognition of that fact, I would strongly encourage that the Town of Hingham begin discussions with the MBTA on the establishment of a meaningful mitigation program that will assist in the implementation of this important rail restoration project. You will note that every other town along the Greenbush Corridor from Braintree to Scituate, understanding their own best interest, has commenced discussions about specific community concerns which will prove to be beneficial when the Greenbush line is operational. Consequently, I respectfully request that the Town of Hingham, through its Board of Selectmen, begin this mitigation process.

I understand that you may be considering additional legal recourse against the Greenbush restoration. However, any objective observer to Greenbush would have to view the recent legal action, as well as this year's decision by the Army Corps of Engineers and the Environmental Protection Agency which essentially gave the green light to Greenbush, are the final pieces towards the ultimate design and reconstruction of the Greenbush line. We now only await a Massachusetts Historical Commission review and a final Environmental Impact Report document from the MBTA before construction can begin. This is the factual history and I would ask that you acknowledge the facts and allow us to work together towards the reestablishment of the Greenbush line.

It is my sincere hope that you will recognize the importance of starting a communication of mitigation and that this action is viewed as one of leadership, not acquiescence towards the Town of Hingham's recognition that Greenbush will happen.

Joseph C. Sullivan, Chairman
Committee of Transportation
State Representative

Editor's note: This letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

Getting ready for Y2K

We have been assured by the folks who think they know that we have nothing to fear from Y2K, the changing of the millenium that takes place in a little more than two weeks.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Except in some parts of academia where they will have to wait another year to don paper hats and crack open the champagne since they insist that the millenium doesn't end until 2000 is expended.

Have no fear, the experts tell us, the expected confusion between the years 1900 and 2000 that threatens to render our computer systems useless when the clock strikes midnight Dec. 31 is not a real threat at all.

Then tell me why so many companies are treating Jan. 1, 2000 like it may be the end of civilization as we know it?

The expert-in-chief himself, John Koskinen, chairman of the Resident's Council on the Year 2000 Conversion, said, "We do not believe the Y2K issue will create significant problems in the United States.

"But," he added, "no one can rule out the possibility that there won't be temporary disruptions in some services."

Koskinen testified before Congress the other day that Americans should be stocking up on enough food, water, medicine and other supplies to last for the first three days of January just in case.

Koskinen testified before Congress the other day that Americans should be stocking up on enough food, water, medicine and other supplies to last for the first three days of January just in case.

If it's like pre-hurricane or pre-blizzard shoppers, the stores will run out of toilet paper in the first rush.

The Mormon church has instructed its 60,000 missionaries around the world not to fly from midnight, Dec. 30, through midnight Jan. 5 and that goes for professors at Brigham Young University, too.

But that apparently doesn't apply to the Brigham Young football team which is playing — and earning $750,000, incidentally — in a bowl game Dec. 27 and will have to hurry from Detroit back to Utah to beat the deadline.

Three high school bands from California, New York and Missouri have refused to fly to Phoenix, Arizona, to take part in the Fiesta Bowl festivities Dec. 31 lest Y2K bring down their airplanes.

First Data., the company which processes the nation's credit card transactions, has generators ready in case electric power goes down — and tanker trucks full of fuel parked nearby in case the generators run out of gas.

And to cap it off, the fuel truck at First Data's Denver office is parked next to the police station in case someone who didn't prepare as well should decide to steal a little fuel.

Chase Manhattan Bank has booked 850 hotel rooms for its employees for New Year's Eve in New York where they'll be available instantly should Y2K start to make unauthorized withdrawals.

And, even if you survive Y2K unharmed, there's something else to worry about.

The Telephone Company is warning its customers not to pick up their phones to see if there's dial tone after midnight Jan. 1 or to wish a friend "Happy New Year." If too many people do it, all they'll get is a busy signal.

You can blame that on Y2K, too.

small-town fire departments took over the big city fire houses to help do their part. Grove Street, Greendale, Webster Square, Park Street Station — foreign places to these men before Friday, became home for the night.

Before four Cohasset firefighters manned the Webster Square station Friday night, twelve of the town's firefighters went to Worcester on Thursday for the memorial service honoring their six fallen Worcester brethren.

Cohasset fire chief Roger Lincoln said his department's firefighters felt an incredible sense of loss after learning of the tragedy.

"Firefighters are one big family," he said. "Firefighters everywhere have to work as a team. The loss of these men is devastating to the city of Worcester, the state of Massachusetts, and the country. The ceremony was very moving, but it was incredibly sad."

Hanover firefighter Gino DeAcetis said covering the Worcester stations was the one way in which South Shore firefighters could lend a hand.

"You know, we don't know them personally so there's not that much we can do," said Hanover firefighter Gino DeAcetis. "You can't go out and cut their lawns every weekend. You can't check on their wives every day. You can't see how their families are doing. Being so far away, this is our contribution. This is what we can do to help."

Friday night was an important time to be on duty. After nearly a week of exhaustive searching, only two of the six firefighters killed in the blaze had been recovered from the ashes of the warehouse. The push was on to recover the firefighters' remains for fear cold temperatures and high winds could jeopardize the search effort.

The shift began with a moment of silence at 6:13 p.m., a week to the hour after the first alarm bell rang and sealed the fate of the six Worcester firefighters. Overnight, crews would recover two of the four missing bodies, and a third the next morning.

The task force allowed a reporter and photographer to accompany them on their mission in Worcester Friday night. Following is an account of the experience.

Westgate Mall, Brockton, Friday afternoon

Shoppers pause to watch as one by one, local engine and ladder companies pull into the cinema parking lot.

Hanover Ladder 1. Rockland Engine 4. Norwell Engine 2. Pembroke Engine 1. Weymouth has already been to Worcester, as have Marshfield, Scituate, and Hingham.

They are joined by trucks from Cohasset, the Bridgewaters, Duxbury, Plymouth, Wareham, and Brockton. As the December sky grows dark with threatening rain clouds, the firefighters climb out of the trucks, clutching cups of coffee and catching up with their brother firefighters from other communities.

The local task force is headed by Hanson Fire Chief Peter Huska, who has dispatched the local departments to Worcester all week.

In the parking lot, the men are briefed by Brockton Fire Chief Kenneth Galligan. There are jokes about the differences in equipment between the local and the big city stations. "Stay together on the highway," they are told. One thing he can't tell them is what the night will bring.

"You might not see each other the rest of the night, or you might see each other at a fire. It's Friday night in Worcester. Anything could happen," he said. The night before, when this group had originally been scheduled to be in Worcester, a two-alarm house fire left eight people homeless. That fire was fought by relief crews like these.

Chief Huska has a few words for each truck and the men aboard as they pull out of the parking lot. One by one, he watches as they head for the highway, commuters giving way to the caravan of fire engines, ladder trucks, and the vehicles driven by each fire chief.

Central Street Fire Headquarters, Worcester, 5:50 p.m.

It was a long ride. The already slow-moving line of fire trucks is slowed further by a driving rain and heavy rush-hour traffic.

On Route 290 West approaching Worcester, a flashing yellow sign is hanging over the highway as a constant reminder of the tragedy this city has experienced over the past week.

"Heavy Traffic Ahead...

Use Caution...

God Bless Our Firefighters."

With their lights now flashing, the trucks follow each other down the same streets where the day before, 30,000 firefighters in dark dress uniform had marched on their way to a memorial service at the Worcester Centrum.

It seems every business, every school, every building in the city has displayed some symbol of support or sorrow for the lost firefighters and their families. "Pray for them, pray for us," reads a hand-lettered sign in the window of a coffee shop.

The caravan from the South Shore arrives at Worcester's fire headquarters on Central Street, the home of four of the six firefighters killed in the warehouse blaze. As the trucks stretch the length of two blocks, the fire chiefs hurry past the memorials outside the building and head inside to be briefed on their assignments for the night.

News crews mill about the headquarters along with Worcester firefighters in dress uniform on their way to a wake for one of the fallen, Timothy Jackson. Jackson's body was the first to be recovered earlier in the week.

As the hour of 6:13 p.m. approaches, the local trucks pull out. Rockland and Cohasset whiz by in one direction, Pembroke in another.

The Cohasset ladder truck is headed to the Webster Square station, where Chief Lincoln, Capt. Silvia, Capt. James Runey, and firefighter William Protulis would spend the night, allowing Worcester firefighters to stay at the scene of the tragic fire.

Flanked by engines and ladder trucks, crews from Cohasset, Hanover, Norwell, Rockland, Pembroke, Plymouth, the Bridgewaters, Wareham and Brockton are briefed before leaving for Worcester Friday afternoon.

"Their Ladder Truck 4 had been working the scene for the entire week," Silvia said. "It was a privilege to do whatever we could to help."

Webster Square Station, Friday night

Upon arriving at Webster Square Station, the Cohasset firefighters were greeted by two Worcester firefighters who would be their guides for the evening.

Silvia said he Lincoln, Runey, and Protulis spent the night talking with the Worcester firefighters.

"We talked about a lot of things," he said. "We talked about how the fire happened and about the guys who lost their lives. We didn't push things or ask any questions. They volunteered information and then we talked about it."

Upon driving through the streets of Worcester, Silvia said he and other firefighters were shown admiration in a way he had never experienced.

"As we were going from station to station, people would stop and say thank you every time we stopped," he said. "That has never happened in my 20 years in this profession. I think the people of Worcester have a heightened awareness of the danger in which firefighters place themselves every day."

For one overnight shift, men from the relatively tiny town of Cohasset volunteered to help protect a city of 170,000. It went without saying that they would help in the effort to locate and honor their brothers from Worcester.

Before heading home to the South Shore, they made one important stop, just a few miles away at the scene of the Worcester Cold Storage & Warehouse fire.

It is difficult to realize from television the magnitude of the damage, the extent of the rubble, the effort of the dozens of firefighters sifting and raking through the ashes.

For blocks, the police direct traffic away from the warehouse site. Still, dozens of civilians and firefighters park and walk to the scene of the fire — the hulking remains of an enormous building in the shadows of a highway overpass.

There is an eerie silence as people walk slowly around the fire engine completely covered in flowers and handwritten notes, which serves as a memorial to Timothy Jackson, James Lyons, Thomas Spencer, Joseph McGuirk, Jeremiah Lucey, and Paul Brotherton. Only the drone of heavy cranes and machinery clearing the rubble breaks the silence.

Memorial bouquets bear the names of the fire service brotherhood from as far away as Detroit, Cleveland, and Florida. A note expressing sympathy from Green Harbor pays tribute to Jay Lyons, who spent summers in the Marshfield summer community.

Dozens of Worcester firefighters and others across the state stand atop the collapsed interior of the building, or on the street below. Cranes and small bobcat machines dump debris on the street, and the crews proceed to search with rakes, or their bare hands.

"Firefighters were showing up at the scene from all over, from big cities, from small towns, everywhere," Silvia said. "People were walking up to the staging officer and seeing what they could do to help. It was an incredibly humbling experience."

A 'weigh station of stabilization'

born, a shelter situated in one of Marshfield's most beautiful areas. The place is surrounded by a lush forest and is set back far from Route 3A. It is a peaceful area, one which inspires deep thinking and enables people to find a rare quiet moment.

"We try to be a stabilizing force in the lives of many women," Binder said, reiterating the fact the shelter is made of mostly women. "And in some cases, men, children, and intact families. A lot of these people are coming off traumatic situations like losing housing or fleeing a battering situation. They just don't have any place to live."

He added, "This place is not a mental health facility or a facility for drug and alcohol abuse treatment. But some of the families we have do come from a background of substance abuse."

Binder has a staff of 19, mostly social workers, and he noted there are 16 separate rooms in the facility, each of which is capable of housing one family.

He said although there is a social worker at the facility who is used for onsite counseling, more-extensive therapy is done away from Carolina Hill, at various establishments around the South Shore.

"They maintain the general facility," Binder said of the staff, "and they provide child care when their parent[s] are indisposed or at meetings."

Binder explained there are many activities in which people who live at Carolina Hill must participate, such as meetings on nutrition, health, and substance abuse; permanent housing searches; and random drug testing.

"Our responsibility is to see that the people who live here go to meetings and follow the rules," he said. "All [tenants] are required to do at least 20 hours of housing search per week."

Although Binder runs Carolina Hill with a strict set of rules, he stressed that enforcing a given code "provides for a safe, home-like environment. We won't stand for violence or continued drug abuse here. In the past, we've taken [tenants] who other people have thrown out, but we have to follow the rules the state hands us. They also have a screening process when they first arrive here."

Binder said three nutritious meals are provided a day, adding there is a large, family-style dining room upstairs in the facility. Within Carolina Hill, many modern amenities exist like washing and drying machines, a large refrigerator, microwaves, a library, and a comfortable TV and activity room.

"We provide what we can afford," Binder noted, saying Carolina Hill is strictly a state-funded agency with limited means. "All the little extras we have come from the surrounding communities."

Such recent "extras" Carolina Hill received included busing a load of families to Edaville Railroad in Carver, going to Roger Williams Zoo in Rhode Island last summer, and hosting a large holiday party with the members of the Friends of the Homeless of the South Shore organization a few weeks ago. He added Santa will be making a visit to Carolina Hill in the very near future.

"We try to make it as nice as possible here," he said. "This is a 24-hour facility. It is a weigh station of stabilization. We're getting done what the [state] tells us we're supposed to do. Hopefully, by the time the people who live here leave, they'll be able to find a place and get along."

Binder said there is no set time limit on how long given tenants may stay in his facility, but he said the average stay is approximately five to six months.

"A little less than 500 families have come through here," he said. "We've had almost 800 children here since 1988. Many children have actually been born out of here over the years."

Binder said many of those who have taken residence in his shelter were high-profile individuals who found themselves homeless as a result of various circumstances.

"Being homeless is something that can happen to anyone," he said. "We've had people here who used to be cops, who have gone to college, and who have families. One minute they were doing fine, and the next minute their lives just turned to snow."

He added the homelessness problem in Massachusetts can partly be blamed on "the high cost of rentals and the shortage of low-income housing. The numbers of homeless people over the past few years has increased significantly.

Jack Leamey of Boston has been at the shelter for a month, and it is a different experience for him and his sons, ages 3 and 5, because they've never lived in a shelter.

"I'd rather be at my own place," Leamey said, "but the people here are excellent. They're really good to kids here, and I want as much stability for my boys as possible."

On being homeless, Leamey said, "I never thought this could happen to me. Everyone's eligible for homelessness, though. The fact is, you can't live on one job anymore. But I'm afraid to get transferred to another shelter because the staff here has been great."

When Leamey was asked how the public could assist he jokingly replied with a resounding, "Help!"

He added, "We all need the same thing here. It's about housing."

Gymnastics hopes to take the next step

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

When the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team takes to the mats this season, the girls won't have expectations of a Pilgrim Conference 2 title. Instead, the 15-member team will be looking to accomplish personal goals.

At best, C-N is hoping to grab fourth place in a conference top-heavy with talent. However, the team coached by Ruthann Ardizzoni and former Norwell gymnast Kara Connarty, has plenty of young, untapped talent that should make for an interesting season.

"We actually have a team of 15 kids this year. That's compared to seven or eight last year."
- Cohasset coach Ruthann Ardizzoni

"We actually have a team of 15 kids this year," said Ardizzoni, now in her 15th season at the Cohasset helm. "That's compared to seven or eight last year."

The 1999-2000 season is the second year of the successful merger of the Cohasset High and Norwell programs. The increase in numbers is an encouraging sign, as are the 15 seventh-graders that Ardizzoni expects will train with the team next year.

The C-N team has plenty of work in front of it this season. Ardizzoni knows her team doesn't have the depth of talent found on the Hingham, Scituate and Hanover rosters. Scituate's Gina Verge, the defending all-around champion, should dominate her competition once again.

Ardizzoni expects close meets against the likes of Carver and Randolph. As is the case with gymnastics, whoever nails their routines on any given night will go a long way in determining the order of finish in the conference standings.

"It comes down to who hits and who doesn't," said Ardizzoni.

For now though, the C-N team is busy working on new routines and perfecting moves Ardizzoni believes could lead to a possible score of 119 points sometime this season. Captain Patti LaCroix of Norwell and Cohasset co-captains Kristin Sheerin and Carlie Carter will lead the team.

LaCroix, Norwell's top gymnast, will compete in the floor exercise, her specialty from last season. The beam or bars are also potential events for the junior. Sheerin has only improved after her third consecutive all-star season on the beam. The team's best all-around performer, Sheerin should be one of the top gymnasts in the conference.

"She looks super this year," Ardizzoni said.

Carter, an all-star last year on the uneven bars, has nailed several clean routines during pre-season practice and will also compete in the all-around. Ninth-grader Katie Portanova gets her first chance to compete on varsity after spending her eighth-grade campaign on exhibition status.

Middle-schoolers Shelley Carter and Nancy Durkin should both gain a wealth of experience this season, though, their performances won't figure into the overall meet scoring.

Inexperienced wrestling squad hopes to learn on the job

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

There was a time in the early '90s when the Cohasset High wrestling team graduated a dozen seniors and the next two seasons were spent building the program back into a South Shore powerhouse.

This season could be close to déjà vu all over again, though not entirely likely.

Skippers' head coach Torin Sweeney doesn't expect this winter's team to struggle like the one early in the decade, but Cohasset won't be sending a squad deep in the weight divisions to its meets.

The team has been working hard and Sweeney, who has sported a winning record in 13 of his 16 previous seasons, is thoroughly impressed with the Skippers' work ethic heading into the opening meet on Wednesday against BC High.

"That's not coaching," he said of the winning seasons, "that's the dedication of the kids."

BC High should present an immediate challenge to the Skippers and give Sweeney a chance to take a good, hard look at how the season's meets could play out.

"They're (BC High) young but they're big," he said. "They'll draw an athlete in every weight class."

A season after winning the Division 3 South Sectionals and finishing second in the Division 3 State finals, the Skippers will have their problems filling weight classes.

Sweeney foresees a Cohasset team that can't afford sickness or any more injuries. Now in his 17th season at the Skippers' helm, Sweeney has a smaller team than he anticipated.

"We're going to have to keep away from sickness and injuries, and keep the intensity up," he said. "We should do OK and hold our own.

"I'm very happy with the way the freshmen and sophomores have wrestled."

The Skippers shouldn't have any problems with senior leadership, thanks to the captain corps of Chris Pratt (125 pounds), Liam O'Donnell (160), Kevin DeVito (171) and Joe Carbone (215). All four captains won matches in last season's state championships. Pratt wrestled especially well in advancing as a finalist.

"They should give us some good leadership," Sweeney said.

Junior Dan Duffy will wrestle at 130 pounds, but the loss of Justin Langham with a knee injury will force Sweeney to bump some of his grapplers around to fill up the 152-pound slot.

The loss of Langham for the season is a definite blow to Cohasset. "He was going to be a solid wrestler for us," Sweeney said. "When you start bumping kids up to other weight classes you're giving away a lot."

Cohasset should perform well in the invitational meets and the future does look bright with Deke Conklin's middle school program of 26 wrestlers anxious to start their season.

"He just does a great job for us," said Sweeney of Conklin, who is also the varsity assistant. "It's a great nucleus."

Sweeney's former wrestlers are also excelling at the college ranks. Freshman Mike Baird and junior Kevin Duffy are teammates on the Coast Guard Academy team, wrestling at 140 and 150 pounds, respectively. They'll be going up against Williams College, coached by former Cohasset High wrestler Ray Jones. Jones also coaches football and track at Williams.

And another thing... Before those football helmets are put on the shelf until fall and the cleats are stored in the closet, there's time to look back at the last year of a century and look ahead to the year 2000.

Top seniors:

We give a big hand to all of the seniors for their play this year. There were a few, though, that stood out in the crowd.

Next to Norwell's Dan McNamara's name it should just say winner. Whether it was catching passes or intercepting ones or sacking the quarterback, he came up big all year long for the Clippers. Jim Lewis, the Clipper quarterback-linebacker, was solid on both offense and defense for the Norwell. He was a true leader for the Clippers. It also was sure fun watching the Clippers' Tim Hajjar take off with the ball.

Rockland's Mike O'Connell took no prisoners on the line for the Bulldogs. He was a standout blocker and tough for foes to run against. Pound for pound, nobody hit harder than Justin Lordi did, while Jason Jacobs' name should be on college recruiting lists.

Foes found it tough to run against Marshfield linebacker Joe Ferrulle, while running back-cornerback Lee

WATD honors great efforts on the gridiron

After battling it out all Fall long on football fields all over Eastern Massachusetts, the top high school football players in the area got together over the weekend to fight for something that meant everything in the world to them at that particular moment.

No, not another Super Bowl game. More along the lines of the last dinner roll and the biggest slice of chocolate cake.

Local group wins Super Bowl

Mark Lewis, Matt Casey, DJ Silvia and Crandon Leahy didn't let the fact that Cohasset did not have a youth football team keep them from playing football.

All four have been playing together for five years with the Scituate Sharks. They had made the playoffs in previous years, but had never made it to the Super Bowl until this year. In their first attempt, they defeated Marshfield, 8-6 to win the Division 1Old Colony Youth Football League title.

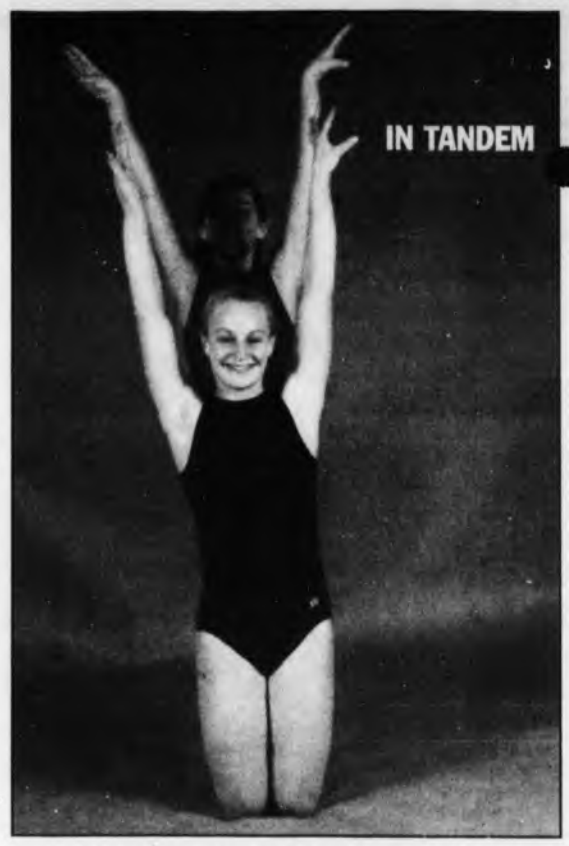
"It's too bad we can't use our middle-school kids," Ardizzoni said.

Freshman Meredith Bixby will give the team strength in three events and may find herself in an all-around role during the course of the season.

"Meredith is very talented and has a lot of promise," said Ardizzoni.

Add Katherine Coyne, Amy Maree, Danielle Connolly, Jacki Berlo, Samantha Sadish and Laura Good to the mix and the team has a nice young nucleus for the coming seasons.



Captains Kristin Sheerin, back, and Carlie Carter will lead the way for the Cohasset High gymnastics team.

Skippers participate in two-day training camp

On Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 4 and 5, the Cohasset High "Skippers" varsity hockey team participated in an intensive training camp. Saturday began with 5:40 a.m. ice time at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham.

The on-ice training was followed by a team breakfast at Jamie's Restaurant in Scituate. The team then moved on to classroom instruction before taking a break to rest up for an afternoon scrimmage against Milton.

Sunday's schedule also began with 5:40 a.m. ice time followed by a team breakfast. After a break, the players and coaches attended an intensive "spinning" and exercise workout at the Bay State Athletic Club in Scituate.

"It was quite a full two days, but that it was a great workout and a great opportunity for the boys to be together as a team for such intensive training," said coach Dennis Walsh.

Assistant coaches Michael Hubley and Archie Rasmussen helped to conduct the training camp.

This training camp was made possible by donations received from CHS Varsity Hockey alumni, parents, local businesses and friends of CHS hockey.

The Cohasset Hockey Boosters, the players and coaches are deeply appreciative of the overwhelming support they have received this year. The public is invited to attend all the Skippers' games this season.

Cohasset will be in action Saturday, Dec. 18 at Randolph at 6:50 p.m., and will host Rockland at Pilgrim Arena at 6:10 p.m.

It was one memorable local football season

Generous was one of the fastest players on the South Shore. Teammate Kevin Degnan was one of the top quarterbacks on the South Shore before an injured elbow sidelined him in the middle of the season. Fortunately, he was able to return to play defensive back in the Super Bowl.

If it came down to a last second player, Abington's Mike McCleary could beat you with his arm at quarterback and with his leg as the team's field goal kicker.

As far as heart goes, you can't find too many players with a bigger one than Hingham lineman Matt Fallon.

Hanover High's Andy Breda fell just short of reaching the 1,000 yard mark for the third straight year for the Indians."

Players to watch:

Silver Lake had a taste of success and would like to go further. Quarterback Ryan Gadles will have a year under his belt, while running back Brandon McPhail will be asked to shoulder the rushing load.

It might not be a good thing if you are one of the Bulldogs' opponents, but if you bleed Rockland blue, it sure is going to be nice to see Bob Murphy in the backfield again next fall. Murphy is worth the price of admission. Teammate Brent Light, one of the quickest defensive players on the South Shore, was almost unstoppable as a nose tackle with his quickness. You can bet a good portion of opposing teams, practices next year will be how to block Light.

Who will be the ones to watch at Marshfield High next year? Try the entire team. The Rams are loaded and will be the preseason pick again in the ACL. Linemen Zach Giles, Bob McDonough and John Moran have college coaches putting Lou Silva's number on speed dial. Keith Kent and Eric Diamond are tough as both runners and defensive linemen, while Sean Morris should be one of the top backs in the state. Quarterback Jon Hollis filled in for Degnan and picked up some valuable experience, which should pay off big time for the Rams.

Abington's Rick Hall came on strong this year, emerging as one of the top backs in the South Shore League. Look for that to continue next year.

Hingham's Matt Murphy is one of several talented Harbormen underclassmen who are looking to turn their season around next year.

The Scituate Sailors return a plethora of talent, including the Butterworth brothers, Bryan and Dave. Bryan was magnificent this past season at quarterback, while David was tough in both the offensive and defensive backfields.

Cohasset is another young squad and will return sensational running back Daniel Trowers, who amassed 1,500 yards on the ground. Quarterback Jason Brown will also be back.

Games of the year:

Norwell-Bishop Fenwick: If only the NFL Super Bowl could be this exciting. There was nobody asking for a refund after this thriller with Norwell coming up just short, 28-26. Norwell's Dan McNamara had a game for the ages in a contest where there were no losers.

Marshfield-Rockland: It will be hard to top this one at any time of the next decade. Final: Marshfield 19, Rockland 18. In a game of thrilling runs, Morris' 56-yard run was the difference.

Norwell-Carver: OK, on Christmas vacation, the two teams will take out the equipment again for a rematch. This is one game that football fans would like to see over again. Norwell's Jim Lewis recorded a safety with a tackle in the end zone with 31 seconds left for a 17-15 win.

What we can't wait to see

The opening week of football season. If this year was an indication, then the first week next year ought to be something too.

Marshfield-Rockland: This is always one of the games of the year. With what Marshfield has returning and you know Rockland will also be strong, this very well could be the game of the 2000 season.

Silver Lake-Taunton: After the Lakers upset Taunton this year, denying them a Super Bowl bid, the Tigers will be fired up next year.

Carver-Norwell: Last second losses have a way of making a team work hard

We're looking forward to seeing what costumes the Scituate students come up with next year. Austin Powers was the groovy guy this year. It makes for fun for all when everyone gets involved.

Hearing the tunes of the Norwell band. You know they will also come up with something good.

Teams on the rise:

If anyone can end Rockland's reign as Patriot League champion, it might just be coach Phil Pisano's Scituate Sailors. They are loaded with talent and finished with a 5-3-2 record this year.

Give a nod for Silver Lake battling for the always tough Old Colony League title. Jeff Knight's club has several key returning players and picked up valuable experience in big games this year.

Cohasset is poised for a run at the South Shore League title especially with Brown and Trowers returning, while Abington should benefit from the experience they picked up this year coaches got together Saturday afternoon at Biagio's Restaurant in Marshfield for the 17th annual WATD High School Football Award Banquet, which is arranged every year by WATD owner Edward Perry and Sports Director Bill Wilhelm to honor the young men chosen as a "Player of the Week" during the football season.

WATD honors great efforts on the gridiron

A tape of the event will be broadcast on Sunday, Dec. 26 at 5 p.m. on WATD-FM, 95.9

Guests encompassed most of the top players on the Eastern Massachusetts high school football scene as squads were represented from Nauset to Taunton all the way to Quincy, a fact not lost on Wilhelm, who served as host of the afternoon brunch with Jim Fagan.

"Enjoy yourself this afternoon and be sure to take a good look around you and meet some of the best football players in Eastern Massachusetts today," he said.

Representing the Old Colony, Atlantic Coast, South Shore and Patriot Leagues, most players who took the mike gave special congratulations to the contingent from Barnstable High School, the only area team that was successful in their Super Bowl game two weeks ago, knocking off the heavily favored B.C. High squad, 20-7.

Special congratulations were also extended to the Rockland, Norwell and Marshfield squads who won the right to represent their leagues in the Super Bowl but fell short in the title games.

With the success of those squads last season as well as the continued development of football programs in places such as Duxbury, Cohasset and Abington, one Patriot League coach said he was glad to see this area getting some recognition as a growing hotbed for high school football.

"We've got some great kids (playing in the South Shore area)," said East Bridgewater head coach Ron St. George. "We just don't seem to get as much recognition (from the Boston media) as the teams do that are north of the city."

On this afternoon, though, the players would get their recognition whether they were a star all year long or just happened to have a career day at the right time.

As the host team for the event, it only seemed proper that Marshfield High would lead the way with the most winners as 10 Rams stepped forward with head coach Lou Silva to be recognized for their efforts. And with only seven seniors on the entire team this season, chances are most of the winners will be back for a second helping next season, according to junior lineman Zack Giles.

Also honored were a pair of 1,000 yard rushers in Sean Morris and Anthony Rubino, as well as Lee Generous, who was right behind them with 800 yards on the ground this season. They were joined on the podium by junior Jon Hollis, who coach Silva called "the type of kid that everyone should have on their team."

Hollis was also joined by teammates Joe Ferulle, Kevin Degnan, Keith Kent, Bob McDonough and Eric Diamond.

Norwell coach Jim Sullivan, who just missed out on a third straight Super Bowl in a 28-26 loss to Bishop Fenwick, led a group that included Mike Mohan, offensive linemen Dan Sullivan and Ian Sims as well as his senior leaders in Dan McNamara, Jim Lewis, Tim Hajjar and Dana Mohr.

Sullivan had special praise for his inside linebacker/quarterback Lewis, calling him one of the toughest kids he's ever coached "and truly a lineman wearing a quarterback's number."

Rockland was led by seniors Michael O'Connell, Jon Baar and Jason Jacobs as well as returning players Bobby Murphy and Matt Boyd. On his captain O'Connell, head coach Kenny Owen said that "whatever coach gets him in college will be landing a fine football player."

The same could be said about Andy Breda, the fine Hanover running back who was honored along with teammate Nick Bolger.

Abington's head coach Jim Kelleher seems to have his program on the upswing with players such as Jon Watters, Rick Hall, Kyle Shepherd, Brian Kallenberg and Michael McCleary in the program and the same could be said for Tony Rolfe over in Cohasset with young players like Jason Browne and Daniel Trowers (1,500 yards rushing and 14 TD's) coming back next season.

A Skipper senior, Craig Parker, had a special message for his fellow honorees, giving thanks "for the chance to play football against all of you. It's been great."

Scituate jack-of-all-trades Josh Creighton thanked the Sailor coaching staff for the effort they put in with he and his teammates while reminding the players that they all now knew "what it's like to be a good leader as well as a role model in your school.

Other Scituate players recognized were the Butterworth brothers, David and Bryan, as well as Shawn Patterson, John Frasca and Ryan Hughes. Joining them from Hingham High were Nick Shore, Jammar Humphrey, Michael Costello, Matt Fallon and Justin Lynch.

Rounding out the local gridiron heroes was the group from Silver Lake which included junior Brandon McPhail (rushed for 1,000 yards in only 8 games) as well as Paul Gouldie, Brian Barry, Ryan Gadles, Craig Kingston and Andy Brems.

Accidents up on Rt. 3A

While it was a quiet week with no arrests in Cohasset, police Sgt. Robert Jackson wants everyone to have a safe holiday season.

He said police are concerned with the number of accidents this month on Route 3A from the Scituate line to the Beechwood intersection.

"We'd like to encourage everyone to slow down if we could so everyone can enjoy the holidays," he said. "It's been a bad month on Rt. 3A."

By Dec. 8, police had investigated six accidents on the state highway that caused five injuries, Jackson said.

Police made 12 arrests last month

The Cohasset Police made 12 arrests in November. One arrest was for an outstanding warrant; there were three arrests for operating after revocation of a license; three arrests for protective custody and five arrests for minor in possession of alcohol.

During the month, the Emergency Dispatch Center received 490 calls for service. Of those, 85 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

In the month of November, the department issued 104 citations for fines totaling $2,630, also 25 parking violations adding up to $1,505.

Additionally, during the month there was one Breaking and Entering reported at a local construction site.

D & A drug hotline

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee operates a Drug and Alcohol Information and Referral Hotline on Tuesdays. Persons needing help with a drug or alcohol problem may call 383-4120. All calls are confidential, and staffed by a trained drug and alcoholism counselor on Tuesdays between 6 and 10 p.m.. On other days and at other times callers may leave a message.

Decking the halls for the holidays

remarked volunteer and past Garden Club president Mary Hickey from the ticket counter last Wednesday. "People have been very pleased with the spectacular homes they've seen, and there's been 100 percent effort on the part of the club. Plus we've been blessed with the weather."

No day to be trapped inside neither baking nor wrapping, the weather outside was indeed far from frightful for December.

"The tour was very successful," added event Chairman Karen Kirkendall this week. "Every Garden Club member was included in something, whether they made ornaments, baked, decorated or were hostesses. The only way for this to be successful is for all of the members to participate as they did."

Setting the tone for the day, "The Twelve Days of Christmas" was the format for Luke and Elaine Tedeschi's holiday salute on South Main Street. Lavishly adorned with no song verse forgotten, wherever one turned there were more touches to delight. Wandering about the home one found themselves humming the carol in their head while trying to discern what was where.

"We thought it was a fun theme to work with — different and creative" offered home decorative helper Jill Tedeschi.

In the foyer, the tribute to the tune included several stuffed turtle doves, and one regal partridge reigning down from his perch atop a tree full of music notes. Next door in the library several drums were ready for drumming, while in the dining room the holiday table was made majestic by seven creme puff "swans-a-swimming" in pools of dark chocolate.

Meanwhile, at the "Holly and the Ivy" home of Gregg and Ellen Bertovitch, there were Christmas music at the piano and ice skates ready for action. Still more distinct accents included hydrangeas on the tree, as well as one stand-out, yet relatively easy idea to emulate.

Community Garden Club members Judy Dickstein and Nancy Sandell greet tour-goers at Sandell's Stevens Lane home.

"People are particularly taken with the dried artichokes and nuts spray painted gold," offered Karen MacCormick from her post in the dining room. "They're simple but elegant, and every one has pointed them out as something they can do themselves."

"I have especially admired the extensive use of natural elements and boughs," agreed tour participant Suzanne Scolamiero of Scituate. "I certainly will be more abundant in using them."

Adding a touch of Santa Fe style, red and green chili pepper lights illuminated one room, while beyond a festive seashore theme awaited in the living room. Befitting of a true seaside home, scallop shell lights adorned the mantle, as driftwood and scruffy pine completed the look. The final touch? Lobsters, lighthouses, starfish and sea gulls wrapped up in fishing net on the tree.

Simple and understated fresh decorations from nature did seem to be the overwhelming style of the day, with clusters of pine cones, cranberries and pomegranates readily used. There were bowls full of lemons and Clemantines, as well as other out-of-the-ordinary colors. In fact, one might even say there was hardly any classic Christmas red represented at all. There were no plain old poinsettias on this tour.

"I was impressed with the fresh use of roses in the homes," commented Meg Concannon of Scituate. "The deep orange colored ones in particular. I didn't expect them at this time of year."

After a stop in for a cookie at the Second Congregational Church, along with some music performed by The Cohasset High School choir and other student musicians, it was off to see Stevens Lane. A true home for the holidays, there the gracious Sandell home thrilled visitors with its architectural detail and personal holiday touches.

From the front door one was struck by the scent of the season — the uplifting perfume of pine, and the aroma of something simmering on the stove. In the dining room the grand table was dressed to the nines for a celebratory feast, with Tuscan red roses making for an elegant centerpiece. Adjacent, a most memorable fir was made handsome by ornaments wrapped in feathers.

"It's been a great experience — so much fun," said homeowner Nancy Sandell greeting guests in her kitchen. "It's been wonderful to meet all of these new people. I love having people in at the holidays."

Visitors had to resist snatching the goodies from the nearby table as they admired the extensive collections of miniatures and other memorabilia set up on display. From the countless elves and nativity's, Santas and snowmen, it was hard to tear one's self away.

It must be said, though an exceptional job was done prettying all of the homes' window frames, through the panes themselves the houses natural settings were often the prettiest scenes of all.

One such home — the charming "Let Heaven and Nature Sing" home on Atlantic Avenue did just that — welcoming the season in style while still allowing the beauty through the backyard windows sing loudest. However, with the accents of trumpets, harps and French horns, the cozy chairs with quilts to curl up in, and the greenhouse filled with evergreens, the Kirkendalls did give Mother Nature a run for her money, luring guests away from the windows.

Last but not least, one can't forget the warm and comforting home of the Grays. It too offered similar spectacular views of the harbor, while on the interior guests admired the champagne and flutes awaiting the big night, and the gingerbread house made with love by the boys.

Finally, a dining room created on the theme "Lunch in an Angel's Garden" came complete with a certain round cake, as throughout the home dozens of little winged cherubs watched over, welcoming the day's wanderers through.

Haddad to submit balanced budget

SPED deficit to be tackled next fall

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A $200,000 general override election in April seemed a certainty to school committee members last Thursday, as they scanned superintendent Edward Malvey's proposed FY 2001 school department budget for the first time.

By Tuesday, however, the likelihood of an override election next April seemed far less probable.

In the space of those five days, Town Manager Mark Haddad has searched for a way to avoid an override election. He thinks he may have found it.

In his proposed school department budget, Malvey had suggested that $397,593 be added to the department's operating budget to cover special education costs which he and director of student services Lynn Silva estimated would be incurred during the 2000-2001 school year.

Haddad has suggested getting the funding for those special education costs at next fall's special town

Weighing in on MCAS results

Collins cautions against overemphasizing importance

The scores are in. Now the analysis begins.

In results released two weeks ago, the Cohasset school district placed first in the state among 10th graders, 24th among eighth-graders, and tied for 24th among fourth-graders on last spring's MCAS tests.

School administrators appeared at last Thursday's school committee meeting to attach meaning to the raw data and explain how the results will be used in improving education in Cohasset.

K-12 curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey said she was surprised by the fourth-grade results on the language arts portion of the MCAS test, in which none of Cohasset's fourth graders were deemed to be advanced. 29 percent of Cohasset students placed in the proficient category, compared to a 21 percent state average.

"When those students were tested in third-grade, a significant number of students scored in the advanced or proficient category," Fennessey said. "We use those grade three scores as a predictor. When we learned that none of our students placed in the advanced category on the language arts test, it was surprising, based upon the information we had."

School administrators were similarly surprised in many other districts throughout the state, as only 372 of the 76,114 fourth-graders who took the MCAS language arts test placed in the advanced category.

The current 11th graders set an amazing record. We're proud of them, to say the least."
— Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins

"Knowing we had some students in the advanced category last year, we were concerned," said Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan. "I think principals are concerned throughout the state. We'll go back over the tests and see which questions were answered wrong the most often, and see where changes need to be made."

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun was concerned by the fourth-grade results, saying a tie for 24th place means the students actually placed lower.

"We can't fool ourselves here," she

A little help for the holidays

Food pantry provides assistance to those in need

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

With the seemingly endless trips to shopping malls this time of year, the holiday meal is often an afterthought. It can be difficult to convince children playing with their new toys or adults engrossed in a new novel to stop for a moment and come to the dinner table.

For those in need of food, however, the gift of a holiday meal can mean much more than toys or books. Even in Cohasset, some people find it difficult to make ends meet and put food on the table. To help those people enjoy a holiday meal, the Cohasset Food Pantry distributed hams and other foods to those in need on Tuesday morning.

"It's an attempt to brighten up their Christmas a little bit," said Robert Thompson, a longtime food pantry volunteer.

The inter-faith food pantry is located at Second Congregational Church, but includes a representa-

Man finds companionship, Christmas cheer at Carolina Hill

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Jack Leamey says public donations are the reason his two boys will have a merry Christmas this year.

"The donations from the people in these [South Shore] communities," Leamey said, "it's amazing. I've never seen anything like it."

Leamey currently resides at Carolina Hill, a shelter for the homeless in Marshfield. His two sons J.C., 3, and Billy, 5, live with him in one of the shelter's 16 rooms.

Leamey said soon, his 3-year-old daughter Emily—who currently lives with Leamey's mother—also will be living with him when he gets back on his feet.

But for Leamey, having his sons with him is a Christmas present in itself.

"The boys have been with me since January," he said. "I had to take them from their mother."

"They were both a year behind on their medical and dental visits," Leamey said, the concern in his voice reflecting the hardships he shared with his ex-wife. Other problems with his relationship with the boys mother concerned him enough to seek custody. He said the situation was not what he wanted his children exposed to.

"I couldn't continue to allow them to see that anymore," Leamey said. "I always end up picking up the pieces."

Although it has been a rough past few months for Leamey, he said he and his sons are very happy they ended up in Carolina Hill, a shelter Leamey says cares very much about the people who reside there.

And this year, reader's of Community Newspaper Company's publications can further that caring spirit. During this holiday season, the paper is sponsoring the Gifts of Hope campaign to benefit three organizations helping the homeless:

Two caught in tobacco sting

Two local businesses were caught in the latest tobacco "sting" conducted by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative, of which Cohasset is a member.

The health board gave Super Stop & Shop and Cohasset Sunoco off Route 3A warnings this week along with a directive to obtain merchant education because a clerk at each establishment sold a pack of Marlboros to a minor on Dec. 2. It is illegal to sell tobacco products to minors under the age of 18.

The SSBHC, which is funded by the cigarette tax and offers an ongoing program of education, conducts tobacco stings twice a year in its member towns. The agency also holds training sessions for merchants educating employees on how to comply with the law.

Bob Valery, store manager at Super Stop & Shop, explained that the only place cigarettes are sold in the store is behind the customer service counter.

He said the employee who sold the cigarettes has worked at the store for two years.

Jerry Fredman of Cohasset Sunoco said his employee was fairly new and was on alone with eight customers at the time of the incident.

Both Valery and Jerry Fredman of Cohasset Sunoco said they welcomed more education on the issue for their employees.

Super Stop & Shop had a prior violation 4-1/2 years ago and Sunoco's last infraction was in Jan. 1997. Under health board regulations, the establishments could have been fined $100 each for the first offense in 12 months. Fines are higher for subsequent offenses within a year.

Feral cats still in limbo

Whoever said cats have nine lives might have been talking about the feral cat colony on James Lane.

In response to neighborhood complaints, the health board voted last month to trap the cats and have them put down if they weren't claimed within three days but has yet to implement the policy.

"Our decision to implement is on hold until we absorb the information provided to us," member Robin Lawrence said.

The board plans to discuss the issue again at 7:30 p.m. on Jan. 11 after members have had the chance to review more information from town counsel and from a veterinary expert at Tufts. Apparently the board needs to enact a regulation using existing laws for stray dogs as a guideline.

In the meantime, health board member Robin Lawrence and health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik made a site visit to James Lane together. Steve Bobo made an earlier visit.

"I found no cats but those neighbors I talked to felt there is a continuing problem," Bobo said.

"We didn't talk to any neighbors but we saw five cats," Lawrence said.

It is suspected the population of the colony may be as high as 20.

The board did agree on a definition of feral cats: cats born in the wild or domestic cats that are allowed to become free roaming.

Route 3A tower permit issued

Adhering to a federal court judge's order, Scituate building inspector Neil Duggan issued a building permit for the construction of a controversial Rte. 3A cell tower.

According to the building department, the permit was issued Monday, Dec. 20.

Plans to build the 180-foot tower have drawn vocal opposition from Cohasset and Scituate residents who live near the proposed site on the Cohasset/Scituate town line. Under current plans, the tower will be constructed on a 40x70 foot easement located on a one-acre parcel of land adjacent to the Cohasset Collision Center.

The issuance of the permit has led tower opponents including Randall Patterson of Cohasset to launch an appeal for a public hearing in front of the Scituate Zoning Board of Appeals. According to town by-laws any party "aggrieved" by a decision of the building inspector may request the hearing.

In addition, Patterson said other courses of action will be investigated.

"We will be looking into filing an injunction with the federal court for a restraining order," he said. The restraining order would prevent the tower from being built until matters are resolved.

The Scituate planning board denied the variance sought by Tower Ventures Inc. and Omnipoint Communications Inc. to site the tower.

The companies appealed the board's denial in federal court and in September a federal court judge ordered the town to grant the variance.

Patterson, an opponent of the cell tower, is one of the parties who filed a separate lawsuit in November in U.S. District Court in Boston against the town, the planning board, Tower Ventures Inc. and Omnipoint Communications, Inc. on the grounds that the town violated local, state and federal laws by refusing to appeal the court order and allowing the permit.

Christmas tree removal fundraiser

Volunteers from the Drug and Alcohol Committee along with teens from the Teen Center garage will be once again removing and disposing of Christmas trees. This year's fundraiser will be Saturday, Jan. 8, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and Sunday, Jan. 9, from noon to 3 p.m. To order service, call 383-2492 24 hours a day.

The fee for this service is $10, $5 for senior citizens. Proceeds from this year's fundraiser will benefit forums for teens and concerned parents, sponsored by the Drug and Alcohol Committee.

Christmas trees at DPW

Christmas trees may be brought to the DPW parking area between Dec. 26 and Jan. 6. All wires and decorations should be removed.

Town receives recycling grant

State Sen. Robert Hedlund announced this week, that the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) has awarded municipal recycling grants to four South Shore communities. The towns of Braintree, Cohasset, Duxbury and Weymouth were recipients of the grants that will be used to purchase recycling containers and fund consumer education. Among grants awarded, Braintree received $7,179; Cohasset received $575; Duxbury received $6,185, and Weymouth received $9,061 in grants.

"Funding programs such as this play a significant role in helping communities meet their recycling goals. I am pleased that we are making recycling a priority here on the South Shore," Hedlund said.

Out of $7.6 million in grant requests this year, DEP was able to award approximately $1.25 million in recycling grants across the commonwealth. These grants play a significant role in building Massachusetts' recycling infrastructure, helping to make recycling more cost-effective for municipalities, and reducing environmental and health impacts of waste management. In addition, DEP expects to pay municipalities up to $3 million through the Municipal Recycling Incentive Program this year.

Recalling Christmas in Cohasset 50 years ago

By Joel S. Pratt
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In 1949 you could still enjoy live theater right in Cohasset center. Every summer, the South Shore Playhouse produced plays in the Town Hall. There, each May, the Cohasset High Senior class play was staged and each year the Rotary Club musical raised funds for scholarships. The 1949 Rotary offering, 'Connecticut Yankee,' was performed with elaborate rented costumes. Fall through spring, the Cohasset Dramatic Club presented three or four plays.

Norman Scott convincingly 'bahhed' and 'humbugged' as Scrooge. David Truesdell Sr. and Dan Cotton made spirited ghosts of Christmas Present and Future.

Whether professional or amateur, each theatrical performance involved dozens and dozens of Cohasset people. Not just actors and directors. People built and painted sets, made costumes, sold tickets, applied makeup, rounded up props, ran the lights and arranged publicity. Others, my Aunt Edna Pratt among them, participated by renting bedrooms to summer theater actors and actresses. Often these were faded lights from Broadway. In 1949, actor Grant Mitchell appeared in 'The Late George Apley.' Ticket sales must have been slow: matinee seats were being given away. I was 11 that summer and thought the play was really boring. Mitchell stayed at Edna's in my cousin Russell's bedroom, as did Burlesque queen Ann Corio. We thought she was beautiful. Russell and I snuck up the back stairs to his room to smell her perfume. This was as close to celebrity as you could get in Cohasset back then. We kids shyly asked the stars for autographs.

My parents and many of their friends spent hundreds of hours each winter working on Dramatic Club productions. Neither one ever appeared on the stage, however. Mom did costumes and painted posters. Pop worked on sets and sound effects. I caught the bug when I played a street kid in 'My Sister Eileen.' The play is set in a basement apartment in New York. Subway tunnel construction was underway right beneath the apartment. At key moments, loud explosions would shake the building. Simulating dynamite blasts in the Town Hall called for ingenuity. Bruce McLean and my father suspended an oil drum from the beams right under the audience. On cue, they fired five 12-gauge blanks into the oil drum simultaneously — four from two double-barreled shotguns and the fifth from the Yacht Club starting gun, which Bruce fired by yanking the lanyard with his foot. Then I helped with sound effects for another play and got to shoot a blank stage pistol.

Scrooge with the Cratchit children and his nephew Fred's son and daughter: Dick Cratchit (Norman Treager); Belinda Cratchit (Marsha Ogden); Tiny Tim (Peter Lent); Fred's boy (Tim Buckeridge); Scrooge (Norman Scott); Martha Cratchit (Lisa Davis); Jenny Cratchit (Wilfredine Chiasson); Peter Cratchit (Joel Pratt) and Fred's girl (Virginia Hill).

Scrooge (Norman Scott) admires the "Turkey" fetched for the Crachits' Christmas dinner. Portraying Peter Cratchit is Joel Pratt.

After that experience, I begged to be in plays or to work on them. I was hooked.

The 1949 Dramatic Club season opened in October with 'Ladies in Retirement,' set on the Thames River marshes in England. Dress rehearsal arrived with one prop still lacking: the script called for a dead seabird. I dashed off down Beach Street on my bicycle, determined to find a suitable corpse. Near Cunningham's Bridge I found a desiccated seagull carcass. I still remember the pained 'thank you's' of the ladies in the cast who had to handle the fragrant prop.

Then I was picked for Dickens' 'A Christmas Carol.' It was the biggest production ever attempted by the Dramatic Club: the program listed more than 95 participants! Norman Scott convincingly 'bahhed' and 'humbugged' as Scrooge. David Truesdell Sr. and Dan Cotton made spirited ghosts of Christmas Present and Future. Twenty young people were Cratchit children, carolers and revelers. Cohasset Schools music teacher Earl Chamberlain played a huge electric organ, moved into Town Hall for the occasion, and directed the 22-voice choir.

Doing 'Christmas Carol' complete is a grand undertaking with a dozen or more settings. Cohasset's 1949 presentation was an adaptation of Dickens' story which left a great deal to the audience's imagination. Frequent changes of props and furniture transformed the office of Scrooge and Marley for each of the many scenes. Today's audiences would think our 'Carol' quaint and amateurish. A diet of slick multimillion dollar TV Christmas spectaculars has raised expectations way beyond what could be achieved on the tiny Town Hall stage by neighbors, schoolmates and family whom you saw every day.

A photographer from the old Boston Traveler arrived to take pictures for a story about the production. As it was a weekday, most of the adult cast members were at work. So Scrooge and some of the kids in the cast recreated scenes for the camera. When the story ran the day before opening night, we had the fun of seeing ourselves in a big Boston paper. No one seemed concerned that I wore decidedly un-Dickensian dungarees and sneakers.

For props and costumes, we made do with what was at hand. Dickens' story ends with the transformed miser hailing a boy in the street (Me) to "go and buy the prize turkey from the Poulterer's." Turkeys, prize or otherwise, were not to be found in the meat counters of the stores in Cohasset village: not the A&P, not the First National, not even the upscale Central Market. I know. The day the photographer came, I was dispatched to all three to request the loan of a splendid fowl to grace the Cratchit table. The A&P obliged with the best that they had. As you can see in the picture, the 'Turkey' was but a smallish chicken. But notice that, in 1949, A&P chickens came with head and feet still attached. No rock-hard, frozen fowl swathed in plastic. Like the play, it was the real thing.

And on both nights of the play, I fetched the chicken-turkey double quick to earn Scrooge's promised half-a-crown reward. I think the chicken was returned to the A&P afterwards.

We played to two packed houses. The audiences loved it. Their applause brought us out for several curtain calls. A Dramatic Club tradition — the cast party on closing night — changed that year. Kids appeared in very few plays and never ever went to cast parties. But so many young people were in 'Christmas Carol' that all were invited. Earl Chamberlain played Christmas music on the organ. The chorus, cast and back stage crew, joined in singing together with spouses, parents and friends.

Will future Christmases in Cohasset ever again see the like? For a few hours, on a December Friday and Saturday in 1949, Cohasset people had come together to entertain and be entertained. And those who gave the play and those who watched went away renewed once more by Dickens' message of hope and redemption.

Joel Pratt, a Cohasset native, now makes his home in Roque Bluffs, Maine.

Town manager Haddad to submit balanced budget meeting. By doing so, he said a general operating override should not be necessary this spring.

"The shortfall in the school department budget is from special education," he said. "I'd like to see us take care of any special education deficit in the fall, like we did this year. I will not recommend a general operating override to the Board of Selectmen. I'm working very closely with the superintendent and the school committee toward my goal of bringing a budget to the town which falls within the limits of Proposition 2 1/2."

Last year's budget crunch convinced Haddad of the need to avoid a general operating override at all costs.

"With 55 percent of the town voting, we barely passed a $380,000 general operating override last year," he said. "The taxpayers gave us a message. They don't want their taxes increased anymore. We're also potentially coming forward for a debt-exclusion override of $38 million for the school project We have to start making some tough decisions. We can't just go for an override every year. If the school committee adopts the budget I'm proposing, we wouldn't need a general override for two more years."

Haddad is proposing a $9.23 million school department budget, an increase of $542,171 over the FY 2000 budget.

DeGiacomo said a $542,171 increase in the school department budget should be sufficient to meet the department's financial needs.

"In preparing for the FY 2001 budget, the school committee has determined that budgets would have to be increased by $505,000, most of which is due to contractual obligations," he said. "That represents a 5.8 percent increase over this year's budget, which Mark [Haddad] said would fit within the overall town budget without an override."

With a vote and a possible debt-exclusion override election on the horizon for the Deer Hill and middle-high school renovation project, DeGiacomo said the school committee understands the need to steer clear of a general override in April.

"The school committee agrees with the selectmen and the town manager that it would be best to avoid a general override this year," he said. "Unless an extremely serious need is brought to our attention by the administrators, the school department budget will fit within the limits prescribed by the town manager."

That sentiment is a contrast to one expressed by Malvey on Thursday night, when he proposed a school department FY 2001 budget totaling $9,594,489, of which $397,593 were additional special education costs. The $9.59 million budget would represent a $703,000 increase from the FY 2000 budget.

Haddad has said a $703,000 increase would be too large to fit into the overall town budget, which is why he prefers putting the special education costs off until next fall.

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said he saw a great deal of logic in waiting until the fall town meeting to address a deficit in special education.

"I think it makes a lot of sense to wait until the fall town meeting to cover the SPED costs," he said. "By doing it this way, we'll underline the fact that payment of SPED costs is a town obligation, not just a school obligation. We don't know how much state aid we'll get and we don't know what the special education costs will amount to. Chances are that additional state aid and free cash will be able to cover the special education deficit in the fall."

At this month's special town meeting, voters appropriated an additional $200,000 to cover deficits in special education. The school committee will have to appeal to voters for at least an additional $22,000 to cover special education costs at the March town meeting.

Due to federal legislation which requires a free and appropriate public education for all students, the school department must provide special education services to all qualified students without taking cost into consideration. "We cannot legally separate special education costs from our budget," Malvey said last Thursday. "If there is an override, the community should understand that special education costs are driving it. It's an unfunded state mandate."

The severity of a student's disorder can also fluctuate from year to year, making it nearly impossible for teachers and administrators to predict the services which will be needed by individual students.

Equally frustrating are the increasing costs of sending students to programs outside of the Cohasset Public Schools.

"We're actually looking at a projected decrease of three students in our district who receive special education services," Malvey said. "In budgeting, the problem we have is the students who receive services outside the district. The tuition rates keep going up for residential programs."

In towns like Cohasset, where Chapter 70 state aid for education is relatively low because of the town's relative prosperity when compared to other cities and towns, the increasing costs of special education are becoming difficult to overcome.

Overrides are becoming increasingly necessary, because they are the only way Massachusetts cities and towns can raise the tax rate above the prescribed limits of Proposition 2 1/2.

State Senator Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) said some of his colleagues in the state legislature are unwilling to tackle the difficult problem of special education funding.

"It's probably been one of the most contentious issues of my tenure on Beacon Hill," Hedlund said about special education funding. Some of my colleagues like to stand behind the record amount of Chapter 70 aid that's going to the cities and towns, but others of us have a philosophical problem with the way special education is funded."

The current formula for doling out state aid for education will undergo a revision, as the Chapter 70 system laid out under the Education Reform Act of 1993 will be revisited this spring. Hedlund said he and others will push to include the revision of special education funding in the discussion.

"There will be an effort to bring the issue of special education funding into the overall education funding debate we'll be having in the spring."

According to figures supplied by Hedlund, the cities and towns of Massachusetts are spending $1.1 billion on special education, nearly ten times their total Chapter 70 disbursement.

Haddad said he strongly encourages the legislature to work on solving a problem that is affecting numerous cities and towns in the state.

"We need the state to fund its mandate," he said. "Proposition 2 1/2 says that we do not have to fund mandates. The legislature has to get to work and solve this problem. It's not like this is a new issue. The state knows there's a problem. It's ridiculous that they're waiting until we're four months in to the fiscal year to start doing something. They've got to hold up their end of the bargain."

School officials weigh in on MCAS results said. "We're in a group tied for 24th, but we really finished somewhere in the 80's on the fourth-grade test. I'm trying to figure out where we really stand in the fourth grade. Are we falling short somewhere? Do specific curricular changes need to be made?"

Fennessey said the language arts curriculum is totally aligned with the state frameworks, which have been designed to prepare students for the MCAS tests. She said elementary students need more work in answering essay-type questions, which appear frequently on the fourth-grade test.

"We need to give the students more help with the process of answering open-ended questions," she said. "That seems to be the area we need to work on. There are totally different skills used in answering multiple choice-questions and open-ended questions."

Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins said the fourth-grade language arts test may not be an accurate barometer of student ability.

"Clearly, there should be some youngsters in Cohasset who are advanced in grade four language arts," he said.

A total of 29 Cohasset 10th-graders placed in the advanced category on their MCAS language arts test, helping the district to its first-place finish in the state. Collins said the result was due largely to the academic ability of the students.

"I consider the quality of students in our district to be excellent," he said. "The superintendent in the town of Harvard [which has placed first in previous years] had a great quote when asked about his district's scores. He said 'With our gene pool, this game is ours to lose.' I think the situation is similar here in Cohasset. It all starts with the kids. The current 11th graders set an amazing record. We're proud of them, to say the least."

Collins also credited the quality of teachers in the district, as well as the emphasis on writing at the middle-high school. He said the block scheduling at the high school allows for the institution of accelerated programs, which he said helped to speed student progress in mathematics.

"A large number of students double up on math courses and accelerate," he said. "Six of our youngsters got a perfect score on the grade 10 math test. That's phenomenal."

The eighth-grade students who took the MCAS test last spring had a bit more trouble with the mathematics portion, as 48 percent placed in the failure or needs improvement categories.

The state average for students placing in the failure or needs improvement categories was 71 percent, which Collins said was due to the large number of questions which required students to know algebra.

"The eighth-grade test contained an inordinate amount of algebraic equations, in my opinion," he said. "As a result, we're going to start teaching algebra in the eighth-grade, but we're going to do it in a rational, relaxed fashion. The new elementary curriculum bodes very well for us in mathematics as well. We've got nowhere to go but up."

Though he was pleased with the performance of Cohasset students on the MCAS tests, particularly on the grade 10 exam, he cautioned against overemphasizing their importance.

"The MCAS grade is only one score," he said. "It's very dangerous to judge a school district based on one score. We cannot attach real causes to student achievement. We can make educated guesses as to why they do well or don't do well on standardized tests, but they're still just guesses."

The class of 2003 will be the first class required to pass the MCAS exam as tenth-graders in order to graduate. Collins said a host of problems are likely to occur as that date draws nearer.

"I have grave concerns about an increase in dropouts because kids won't pass," he said. "I'm concerned about special needs youngsters, vocational students, and ESL [English as a Second Language] students as well. This tests is not what I would call a fair test of their abilities.

"This whole thing may unravel once the public feels a large number of students won't pass, or that standards are being lowered to help them pass."

Volunteer drivers needed for senior van

Many depend on service for basic transportation

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Imagine your mother or grandmother who lives in another community. As she has aged she has become unable to drive, and relies on friends or neighbors for transportation. What happens when those friends and neighbors move away or find themselves unable to drive as well? How will she get to the grocery store or to next week's appointment with her physician?

"At the height of our driver pool, we had approximately 63 volunteer drivers. We're now down to 32, either through attrition or from people moving away. This is one of our most essential services, but we need more drivers to keep it going."

Kathy Bryanton, director of the Council of Elder Affairs

Luckily, seniors in Cohasset have a source of transportation which takes them to the places they most need to go. The Council of Elder Affairs runs a transportation service, in which seniors are brought to grocery stores, doctor's appointments, shopping malls, and to the South Shore Community Center for lunch with friends on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

In addition to allowing seniors to perform routine errands, the vans also bring seniors on special trips.

"We've gone to Plimoth Plantation, to Salem for Halloween, and we go to Boston for the symphony or the Museum of Fine Arts," said Roger Plante, chairman of the Elder Affairs transportation committee. "We also go on mystery trips. We're going to try to get local companies to sponsor trips so we can offer even more."

Tom Cowan, a retiree, has been a volunteer driver for four years and has thoroughly enjoyed helping his fellow seniors.

Elder Affairs has two vans of its own and shares another with the town of Hingham. While Cohasset has appropriated funds at past town meetings for the vans, funds for a full-time driver were voted down. Thus, the driver pool is made up exclusively of volunteers.

Most of the drivers are retirees themselves, and as the driver pool has aged or moved to warmer locales over the years, the number of drivers has decreased.

"At the height of our driver pool, we had approximately 63 volunteer drivers," said Kathy Bryanton, director of the Council of Elder Affairs. "We're now down to 32, either through attrition or from people moving away. This is one of our most essential services, but we need more drivers to keep it going."

One of the drivers who has remained with the program is Tom Cowan, 55 Wheelwright Farm Rd. Cowan has been a volunteer driver for four years and said he has thoroughly enjoyed helping the seniors.

"The people are really nice and many of them are completely dependent upon the vans for transportation," said Cowan, who normally drives once a month. "I've driven to Shaw's and Stop and Shop, to museums, and to the shopping malls. It really is pretty easy and the people are so appreciative. I'm a retiree myself, so it's nice to do something worthwhile with my time. It's not a chore at all."

An avid golfer, Cowan is one of the many retirees who head South for an extended amount of time each year. Plante said replacing the shifts of those who leave during the winter months is essential since the pool of drivers has shrunk in recent years.

"We have a dire need of more volunteer drivers," he said. "People can do this when they want. It's not a big time commitment at all. We're the only town left in Massachusetts with an all-volunteer driver pool for its senior transportation. This is a small, but very needed service."

Margaret Taylor, 21 James Lane, has been using the service since 1986 and says it is essential to her ability to maintain a good quality of life.

"I used one yesterday to go to the doctor in South Weymouth and have my pacemaker checked," she said at Tuesday's senior lunch at the community center. I use it to go food shopping and I've been using it to come to the lunches on Tuesdays since at least 1986. My family lives in Abington and Rockland, but they're all working. The vans help me stay independent. My family calls, and I can say 'I don't need you right now.' I have nothing but the highest praise for the service."

Bryanton said one of the best parts of the transportation service are the social gatherings it allows seniors to attend.

"At the lunches here at the community center or on various outings, the seniors are allowed to catch up with one another and find out the latest news or gossip," she said. "They can compare pictures of new grandchildren or great-grandchildren (Taylor has seven of each herself) and just enjoy each other's company."

Many of those who attend the senior lunches live at the elderly housing on 60 Elm Street, and would be unable to attend without the transportation service.

"A good portion of them come here on the van," Plante said. "We'd like to get the word out to even more seniors in Cohasset about the service. If we can get more drivers, we'll be able to provide this to more seniors. We can go on more trips and just make the lives of seniors more enjoyable."

AROUND TOWN

FIREFIGHTERS THANKED

We must begin with a moment of silence for the fallen firefighters of Worcester! As you undoubtedly read last week, we also must give our own town's firefighters a huge salute!

Twelve of our brave men went to march in the memorial service that was held initially. Four went to help sift through the rubble to recover bodies that remained. You can just imagine how hard a job that must have been!

Once again hats off to all of you for caring and then doing! Cohasset is a lucky town to have firefighters like you — thank you!

HOCKEY ALUMNI GAME

We're going to give you a great idea for the first day of the New Year!

Bring your family and friends to see Cohasset's hockey alumni face off against our current Skipper team Jan. 1 at 7:40 p.m. at Pilgrim Ice Arena in Hingham. It will be such fun to see the "old men" against the "youngsters."

Admission is $5 for adults, $2 for students; help support our hockey program and have some fun with old friends at the same time (and be sure to thank the Cohasset Hockey Boosters. who have been working since last summer to put this whole game together).

See you there; it will be such fun!

SWIM CENTER INSTRUCTORS

Now that all of our college students are home for the holidays, Sue Mazilia has a great idea for your plans for the summer — our Cohasset Swim Center needs instructors and life guards!

It isn't too soon to think of a summer job and this is one of the best — winter and spring courses are being offered throughout the region. Call Sue at 383-1988 and she will put you in touch with the right people and probably give you a great summer job!

TOP DOCTOR NAMED

Cohasset resident Robert W. Simms, MD, was included in "The Guide to Top Doctors: 1999 Edition" (Copyright 1999 by the Center for the Study of Services, Washington D.C.). Dr. Simms is clinical director of Rheumatology at Boston Medical Center and associate professor of medicine at Boston University School of Medicine.

Listings cannot be bought; for this reason inclusion in this guide is considered a singular honor, and we are proud of you, Dr. Simms!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy belated greetings to Holly Pompeo! We hope your birthday was a happy one, just as great as you look! You are a special person!

TIP OF THE HAT

Here comes another tip of the hat for a specialist at Cohasset Middle/High School — Joan Gallagher, school library media specialist, was elected president of Massachusetts School Library Media Association. MSLMA represent library media professionals who work in K-12 public and private schools throughout Massachusetts!

Joan is a wonderful person, and if you haven't had the chance to meet her, make the effort!

Congratulations!!

BELMONT HILL HONORS

Belmont Hill School was proud to send us news that James Simons (son of Robert and Judith Simons) in Form VI was recognized for achieving High Honors.

Great job, James!

BEHIND THE SCENES

Abigail Kornet, class of 2003 at Connecticut College, participated in the theater production of "Bloody Poetry." She worked as part of the run crew for the play.

Abigail is a 1999 graduate of Northfield Mt. Hermon High School and is the daughter of Diana and John Kornet of Cohasset — wish we could have seen your grand production, Abigail!

ART CENTER GIFT IDEAS

Here is an idea for all of you who are searching for the perfect last minute Christmas gift — go to the South Shore Art Center (119 Ripley Rd.) and purchase your present! They can give you a gift certificate for all of their marvelous classes (kiddos love that, too) or memberships.

They also have an updated gift gallery with Nancy Sandell and Susan Redgate offering one-of-a-kind gifts such as silk scarves, seaglass jewelry, custom pottery, designed special Christmas plates, hats, ceramics — the works! There are also folk art items for sale, part of the current show.

As Monica says, "You can do all of your shopping at the South Shore Art Center" (no malls).

ON STAGE

We understand that we missed a real performance — Miranda Lanzillotti was a performer in the musical "Annie," held at Thayer Academy Middle School and she was a star! Hollywood, watch out!

IN THE NUTCRACKER

Jenne Daley and Kim Ulmer of Cohasset are performing in Boston Ballet's "The Nutcracker" on stage at The Wang Theatre. Jenne is dancing as a reindeer and Kim is dancing in the role of Calvary. Jenne, a seventh-grade honors student at the middle school, moved here 2-1/2 years ago from Chagrin Falls, Ohio, a suburb of Cleveland. She was born in Bethesda, Maryland and began ballet lessons at age four when she resided in Grosse Point, Michigan.

Kim is in the ninth-grade at Cohasset High.

For information about tickets, call (671) 695-6950, ext. 342.

Vegetables make meal complete

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

If you are like I am, you like a variety of vegetables! And sometimes you run out of a new and different idea to make your meal complete (especially at holiday time when you want everything to look perfect).

If you are tired of the green casserole (a standby) or plain squash, you must try this!

Thanks to a phone call asking for this recipe, I got in touch with Anna Abbruzzese and she was kind enough to give me her vegetable special — Roasted Root Vegetables!

So here we go — by the way, Anna is well-known as a cook extraordinaire in our whole town. Thanks for sharing with us, Anna!

ROASTED ROOT VEGETABLES

4 carrots peeled and cubed in 1-inch sections
1 large sweet potato, cubed
1 small turnip or rutabaga
4 parsnips, peeled, 1-inch pieces
1 red onion, quartered
1 jar orange or apricot marmalade
1/4 cup water
1 tbsp. dry mustard
salt, pepper
dry thyme

Combine vegetables and toss with 2 tablespoons olive oil. Salt and pepper to taste, then add the dry thyme. Place in a 9 x 12 pan that has been coated with spray shortening. Roast for 1 hour at 425 degrees and then remove and coat with your mixture of the marinade.

Heat together 1 jar orange or apricot marmalade, 1/4 cup water and 1 tablespoon dry mustard (heated together beforehand), glaze the vegetables and return to the oven for 5 to 10 minutes.

Thanks to Anna for sharing. What a great idea for a brand new way to serve a veggie!

By the way, hope you have the time to share a special recipe with all of us, as Anna did — give me a call!

Around the World Yacht Race

The Cohasset Yacht Club presents "Around Alone 1998-1999, Singlehanded Around the World Yacht Race," a slide and video presentation by Robin Davie of South Carolina.

This is an evening of high adventure, thrills, and spills from Mr. Davie's three circumnavigations in the "Around Alone-Single-handed World Yacht Race," (formerly the BOC challenge). From the freezing wastes of the southern ocean, to the equatorial doldrums, to rounding Cape Horn under jury rig in the 1994 BOC Challenge and surfing more than 2,000 miles on a rudderless 50 footer in the 1998-1999 race, the presentation will be an exciting one.

The event is Saturday, Jan. 8, at 8 p.m. at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

Proceeds will benefit the Cohasset High School Marine Studies Program which has received annual support from the Cohasset Yacht Club for the past four years. This marine lecture series is open to the public and is free for students.

RSVP to Dave Crocker at 781-749-7580. The cost is $10 per person (students free) to be paid the night of the lecture.

Refreshments will be served after the lecture.

Cohasset residents may reach th animal control officer by calling 383-9119.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

FIT TO BE HUNG

Aside from using quilts to cover beds and draping them over sofas, homeowners can hang quilts to create wall displays that are every bit as appealing as painted art. Quilts not only decorate large wall expanses, they add color, texture and a focal point to rooms. The preferred way for hanging a quilt involves hand-sewing a 3 1/2-inch-deep rod pocket in sturdy muslin to the wrong side along the top edge of the quilt. Then, a 1x2-inch pole can be inserted into the pocket and hung from the wall with hooks. For a more permanent presentation, a wood frame can be constructed, to which the quilt can be attached with Velcro.

With thoughtful and expert interior design service, you can transform your home into a showplace. Whether you want to remodel one room or your entire home, THE DESIGNING WOMAN can provide you with innovative ideas and complete guidance. We'll review your personal tastes and goals in order to create a detailed design plan and coordinate all elements of a room. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient appointment. Happy New Year to you and your loved ones!

Hint: Crib and lap quilts are the most sought-after pieces in today's market.

Dr. Golden honored as family physician of the year

For the past 18 years, Cohasset's Steven T. Golden, M.D., has practiced on the South Shore where he is revered by his colleagues as the patriarch of family medicine.

He is a pioneer among family physicians in the area through his involvement with founding the Department of Family Practice at South Shore Hospital where he became the first residency-trained family physician to deliver infants at the hospital.

He is the current president of the Physicians Organization of the South Shore and a member of the Board of Directors of the South Shore Physicians Hospital Organization.

Over the years he has taught numerous medical students and inspired many to become family physicians. In recognition of his outstanding achievements and distinguished career, he has been selected as the 1999 Family Physician of the Year by the Massachusetts Academy of Family Physicians.

Criteria for selecting the recipient of the MAFP's highest award include involvement in community affairs and in activities that enhance the quality of life; to serve as a credible role model as a healer and human being; and to be a mentor in the science and art of medicine to colleagues, especially to young physicians in training and to medical students.

Dr. Steven T. Golden, a Cohasset resident, stands outside his office at 12 Parkingway in the village.

Following completion of his training at St. Joseph's Hospital, Syracuse, N.Y., in 1981, Golden began his private practice in family medicine in Cohasset. He became a member of the active staff at South Shore Hospital as well as the director of the employee health program. He is a former member of the Board of Directors of Coastal Medical Associates and is currently the president of Healthcare South.

In nominating Golden for this distinguished award, Dr. James Mitterando said, "He has the unique ability to balance his profession with family life; he is not only a model physician, but also a model father and husband. He is well respected in the community being actively involved in coaching sports and volunteering in multiple activities. Steve embodies the 'Marcus Welby' ideal of family physicians in being a skilled, caring physician who knows the patient and their family well."

Kathleen Blake, a nurse practitioner in his group, said, "In my 30 years of professional practice, I have admired many physicians for their ability to diagnose and treat with great skill and others for their great knowledge base. There are many physicians who possess the attributes necessary to cure. I have known just a few with the ability to heal. Steve Golden is a healer."

In endorsing his nomination, a patient wrote, "After my mother passed away, he told me that if I ever needed to talk, to just come by his office. To this day, I remember how comforted he made me feel after that talk. All my questions, fears and emotions were discussed that evening. That late, two-hour visit was the beginning of a long doctor-patient relationship that went and still continues far beyond the traditional diagnosis-treatment type of doctor that most people receive. I know of many instances with other patients that he has made that additional gesture . . . his kind nature has won the hearts and trust of many."

In announcing the recipient of the 1999 award, Dr. Maury Martin, Secretary of the MAFP, said that "Dr. Golden has served as a role model for students, residents, his colleagues and staff, as a compassionate family physician, and as an active leader within his community. We are honored to recognize him for his commitments to his patients, contributions to his community and for furthering the ideals of family medicine.

Golden is a graduate of Harvard College and the State University of New York Upstate Medical School. He resides in Cohasset with his wife of 25 years, Amy Deweir Golden, who has taught elementary school in Wellesley and currently teaches preschoolers in Cohasset. They have a daughter, Rebecca, age 22, a graduate of Colby College, who will be pursuing a master's degree in Early Childhood Education, and two sons; Justin, age 18, who will be attending Harvard College in the fall, and Christopher, age 16, a sophomore at Cohasset High School.

The Massachusetts Academy of Family Physicians is a 1,500-member non-profit professional association based in Manchester. It is dedicated to maintaining high standards of family practice and to promoting the science and art of medicine and surgery; the betterment of the public health; and to preserving the physician-patient relationship.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

The story of the first Christmas

"In those days there went out a decree from Emperor Augustus that all the world should be registered. This was the first registration and was taken while Quirinius was governor of Syria. All went to their own towns to be registered.

"Joseph also went from the town of Nazareth in Galilee to Judea, to the city of David called Bethlehem, because he was descended from the house and family of David. He went to be registered with Mary, to whom he was engaged and who was expecting a child.

"While they were there, the time came for her to deliver her child. And she gave birth to her firstborn son and wrapped him in bands of cloth, and laid him in a manger, because there was no place for them in the inn.

"In that region there were shepherds living in the fields, keeping watch over their flock by night. Then an angel of the Lord shone around them, and they were terrified.

"But the angel said to them, 'Do not be afraid, for see—I am bringing you good news of a great joy for all the people: To you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, who is the Messiah, the Lord. This will be a sign for you: You will find a child wrapped in bands of cloth and lying in a manger.'

"The angel said to them, 'Do not be afraid, for see—I am bringing you good news of a great joy for all the people: To you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, who is the Messiah, the Lord. This will be a sign for you: You will find a child wrapped in bands of cloth and lying in a manger.'"

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying, 'Glory to God in the highest heaven, and on earth peace among those whom he favors!'

"When the angels had left them and gone into heaven, the shepherds said to one another, 'Let us now go to Bethlehem and see this thing that has taken place, which the Lord has made known to us.' So they went with haste and found Mary and Joseph, and the child lying in the manger.

"When they saw this, they made known what had been told them about this child; and all who heard it were amazed at what the shepherds told them. But Mary treasured all these words and pondered them in her heart. The shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all they had heard and seen, as it had been told them.

"After eight days had passed, it was time to circumcise the child, and he was called Jesus, the name given by the angel before he was conceived in the womb."

—Luke 2:1-21

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' and local senators' votes on four roll calls from recent legislative sessions dealing with Governor Cellucci's vetoes of items in the fiscal 2000 state budget. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.
COMMUNITY HEALTH CENTERS(H 4900) House 137-20, Senate 34-3, overrode Governor Cellucci's veto of $5 million from the tobacco settlement money to fund the expansion of community health center services. Override supporters said the funds will expand these neighborhood health services which for some people in minority communities are their only source of health and oral health services. Override opponents said if the legislature approves the expansion of every good program, the budget will be out of balance. (A "Yea" vote is for the $5 million. A "Nay" vote is against it).	Y	N
MENTAL HEALTH CENTERS(H 4900) House 138-20, Senate 33-4, overrode the governor's $2 million veto reduction (from $4 million to $2 million) from the tobacco settlement money to fund repairs to state mental health facilities. Override supporters said many of these buildings need major renovations and argued they should be repaired in order to ensure the well-being and safety of the patients. Some override opponents said the $2 million cut is logical because the state budget is over four months late and many of these outdoor renovation projects cannot be started during the cold winter months. Others said the legislature cannot continue to fund every good idea and still expect to balance the budget. (A "Yea" vote is for the additional $2 million. A "Nay" vote is against it).	N	Y
COMMUNITY POLICING(H 4900) House 158-0, Senate 37-0, overode the governor's $300,000 veto reduction (from $20.4 million to $20.1 million) in funding for community policing grants for cities and towns. Override supporters said every dollar counts when it comes to helping local communities combat crime and noted the additional $300,000 will help several more communities. In his veto message, the governor said the reduction will fund the grants at the adequate level he recommended in his version of the budget. (A "Yea" vote is for the $300,000).	Y	Y
SCHOOL VIOLENCE STUDY(H 4900) House 158-0, Senate 37-0, overrode the governor's veto of the creation of a special commission to conduct a study of school violence including methods of identifying potentially dangerous students, how to protect students and faculty from acts of violence and the potential use of security guards and metal detectors in schools. Override supporters said the commission will hold hearings across the state to get the input of the public and experts in order to develop solutions to the increasing problem of school violence. In his veto message, the governor said the commission is unnecessary because it will duplicate the work of the Governor's Council on Youth Violence. (A "Yea" vote is for the study commission).	Y	Y

Guidelines for dealing with stray cats

The Board of health offers the following guidelines for those now being bothered by stray cats in their neighborhood.

Keep a record of cat activity in your neighborhood. Dates and times would be helpful, together with a description of the cat and the complaint.

Call the animal control officer (ACO) and report your problem. Call the Board of Health if you don't get results. The ACO should visit you to confirm the nuisance and see the evidence of any damage. If requested, he should leave a have-a-heart trap for you to catch the bothersome cat.

Refrain from feeding all wildlife; they should be left to make it on their own.

Believe it or not, the subject of feral cats (cats that are born in the wild or cats who are left to go free roaming) has occupied a great deal of time at the Board. The problem is that when fed by presumably kind-hearted individuals, or by inappropriate disposal of garbage, the cat population learns of the free meal, and tends to congregate. Similarly, wild birds or any other wildlife, when fed, tend to congregate and become a nuisance. It is far more humane to allow wildlife to fend for itself.

When ferals accumulate in a neighborhood, they can become a nuisance. In large numbers, because of the persistence of their scat, and their non-immunized status can become a potential health threat, and cause property damage.

With the growing numbers of ferals, there are more people who, for humanitarian reasons, are active in managing the problems associated with the animals. These friends of ferals have studied the problem and joined together nationwide to publicize solutions which have worked for other communities. Much information has recently become available. One has only to search 'feral cats' on the Internet to realize the scope of the problem and the alternatives for its solution. No one really believes that it will be economical or even possible to destroy the numbers of cats being released and propagating in the wild these days.

When ferals accumulate in a neighborhood, they can become a nuisance. In large numbers, because of the persistence of their scat, and their non-immunized status can become a potential health threat, and cause property damage.

Other means must be adopted to manage the feral cat problem. Pet owners must be responsible and have their cat's neutered/spayed. Only then will the problem be solved. People can't abandon cats. If they're going to allow them outside, they must be neutered, healthy and immunized. Pet ownership requires that owners are responsible. This is the most effective way of presently solving the problem.

Vinyl toys can pose a hazard

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) recently affirmed the toxic hazards posed by plasticizers, known as phthalates, which are added to virtually every soft plastic vinyl toy. Phthalates can cause liver, kidney damage and cancer. Heavy metals also added to vinyl toys, such as lead, can cause learning disabilities. The CPSC confirmed that these chemicals leach out of such toys when children put them in their mouths, and urged manufacturers to stop using them for children under three years of age. Instead of banning vinyl toys, the Agency recommended that toy makers voluntarily stop making toys with these chemicals. The uncertainty acknowledged by the CPSC regarding children's contact with these toys and the unpredictable rate at which they leach toxic chemicals begs for stronger precautionary actions already underway by other governments and companies. Greenpeace has sued recalcitrant toy companies under California's Proposition 65, which requires companies to label products containing hazardous substances. U.S. toy companies refuse to label or disclose the contents of toys and other children's products, whereas countries such as Canada, Mexico, Austria, Denmark, Sweden and Norway have initiated strong actions against vinyl toys. Some major companies such as Lego, Nike and Ikea have pledged to make or sell only vinyl-free toys. For more information, call the Board of Health

Teaching is getting dangerous

Bruce Nelson, an English teacher at Peabody High School, was patrolling the school corridors last week when he stumbled across a student drug deal going down in the little boys' room.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

He intervened and got his lights punched out by a 17-year-old student for his pains.

A 16-year-old at Newburyport High School was charged in juvenile court after police on a search of his house found a cache of machetes, a Samurai sword, switchblades, a blow gun, a crossbow and two stun guns.

The youngster was under a five-day suspension at the time for hitting a classmate in the back with a blow dart and striking two others with a metal bar.

"I was very concerned at the beginning," said Principal Mary Larnard. "Once I understood that my kids and faculty were safe in the building, I felt better."

Another 16-year-old boy at Sandwich High was expelled after he listed the initials of four classmates who "will die" and six more who had "one day to live, you die on Tuesday."

This a few days after two gun-toting students killed 12 fellow students and one teacher and wounded two dozen others at Columbine High in Littleton Colo.

They're expected to be police officers, psychologists, sociologists and who knows what else and, oh, yes, if they have any time left over they teach.

The other kids picked on him, called him fat and gay, his lawyer said, and school officials did nothing about it. That was why the kid was mad at the schools and suing Sandwich for $75 million for depriving him of schooling.

That's why I think I'd rather be a member of the bomb removal squad than a teacher. It's less hazardous.

There was a time when teachers did not make a hell of a lot of money but they had the respect and support of the community. As long as they stuck to basic teaching, everything was all right.

Now that they make a decent week's pay, their job has changed. They're expected to be police officers, psychologists, sociologists and who knows what else and, oh, yes, if they have any time left over they teach.

They have to be careful what they teach, too. Teaching evolution in the state of Kansas can get you riffed (fired). Mention God or sing "Silent Night" at Christmastime in North Andover schools and someone is bound to yell at you.

North Andover teachers were reminded of a decade-old school policy that bars signs of the holiday season, not only Christmas but Hanukkah and Kwanzaa, too.

Janet Makar, a first grade teacher at the Kiley School in Peabody, is taking the heat for not responding quickly enough when 7-year-old Lydia Hanson said within her hearing, "My mom is dead."

"I think it was appalling," said Richard Tucker, Lydia's grandfather. "If a kid went to school and said 'My mommy hit me' they would have the DSS down here like that."

It is not clear whether Lydia told the teacher or was overheard confiding the news to a classmate. If it was overheard, could Janet be sued for violating Lydia's civil rights by eavesdropping on her conversation?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

On denying freedom of speech

TO THE EDITOR

I agree with points in Kathy Ofsthun's letter castigating those to whom she feels deliver erroneous information. However I am disturbed that she, a public official, although unidentified as such in her letter, would suggest that "the Mariner should stop including" anybody's opinion. Any suggestion from a public official of the denial of free speech is disturbing. From a school committee person it is outrageous. Such an attitude is hopefully not trickling into the philosophies of the school system.

Regarding trusting elected officials and "misinformation" getting out to the community: C'mon Ms. Ofsthun, did you sleep during the previous superintendent's tenure or are just in denial? Please see the town manager or town accountant, both of whom have related plenty of accurate information regarding the schools financial health. It took a huge group effort to neglect the schools as much as they've been.

Last of all, the school's new management, and those already in place, have done very well; a source of pride for Cohasset. But let's not expand the recent good deeds into future delusions. We're still millions of dollars short, some people will have to leave town because of tax increases, and we're a few MCAS points short of being at the top of the game we're capable of, and we're paying to play. While it is nice of you to act as guardian for our information input by campaigning to eliminate others opinions from the Mariner, your time should be put to better use. We can handle the information, as in the end, time and our tax rate is proof of what is right or wrong.

Disappointed with Ofsthun letter

TO THE EDITOR:

I was disappointed and saddened to read Kathy Ofsthun's Letter to the Editor in your Dec. 16 edition, under the banner of "Abusing Freedom of Speech". The expression of differing viewpoints is the essence of free speech, not its abuse.

It is hard to imagine that, as she charges, a letter to the editor would be for the purpose to "grab headlines". I have always thought that such letters were to express opinion. The idea of "the Mariner should stop including misinformed, misleading, editorials", when she means letters to the editor seems to me overwrought.

Her main attack is about my statement of poor educational results, when Cohasset High School is "first in the state on MCAS, and 12th overall". For a town like Cohasset, with its high income and education levels, poor results are not excused by similar poor results elsewhere. In fact, as reported in the Mariner article she quotes, 48.7 percent of our Grade 4 students are less than proficient (this is the average of English, Math and Science 'needs improvement' and 'fail' scores). This is a deterioration from the 1998 results of 47.7 percent non-proficient! Grade 8 is 43.3 percent deficient, which is unchanged from 1998. Only the 10th Grade shows any improvement, from 40.3 percent to 36 percent deficient. Let's look at the positive, but can we be happy with these results? This is the "absurd" statement she accuses me of.

Kathy also says I miss the point about why the reconfiguration is recommended, and how teaching is different in space needs from 25 years ago. Indeed I have, since I do believe the school priorities are misplaced, favoring bricks and mortar to education in a clean and safe environment. Perhaps it would be instructive to compare our public schools education results and costs with local private schools.

Her last statement, to the effect that I "may choose to be misinformed, but (his) broadcasting of such is irresponsible", is almost bewildering to me. I have been focused on education my entire life, including achieving my Ph.D. in computer science and teaching in graduate school, and my wife has taught in public schools and volunteers as an ESL tutor. I believe the irresponsibility is in the unreasoning personal attack that Kathy has chose to direct my way (and to Lee Jenkins and Joe McElroy) because the opinions expressed disagree with her notion that we need more building space now.

I am disappointed that the voters of Cohasset decided to spend another $390,000 to study the space problem, so they can recommend a $41 million "solution" to our problems. However, I accept that vote, in spite of the low (24 percent) turnout, perhaps resulting from the selection of a date so close to the holidays and within a week of Town Meeting. I still do not believe that the majority of Cohasset voters really believe the school committee has come up with the right solution, one that is both good for our children and affordable to our taxpayers. In any case, open discourse and debate on a non-personal level will ultimately lead to the approach best for Cohasset.

Call with Greenbush questions

TO THE EDITOR:

I'd like to thank The Cohasset Mariner for the recent series of articles concerning forthcoming changes to Cohasset as the MBTA prepares to rejuvenate the Greenbush rail line. As the articles pointed out, copies of the MBTA's plans are available for anyone to review at the Town Clerk's office and at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. I would encourage anyone living in the vicinity of the right-of-way to review how your property might be affected by the proposed changes.

It is interesting to note that after these plans were made available, only three of the many impacted property owners contacted the Greenbush Mitigation Committee regarding these changes. I would encourage any property owner abutting the rail line, or in close proximity to the line, to review how your property, access or property rights may be affected. This should apply in particular to property owners in the following areas:

- The site of the Cohasset Station around North Main Street and Route 3a
- Rose Hill area
- Rocky Lane area
- Center of Town
- Sestito Lane area
- Castle Road area
- 100 Pond Street area
- Lincoln Lane area

If you have any questions, please contact me with your questions. The Greenbush Mitigation Committee can only work for the citizens of Cohasset if you tell us your thoughts. At this point we still may be able to work with the MBTA in generating creative solutions for problem areas. After the MBTA completes its engineering work, the available options will be seriously reduced.

Responds to Ofsthun letter

TO THE EDITOR:

Ms. Ofsthun's letter to the editor "Abusing Freedom of Speech" is the most recent in a long history of vicious attacks by a small, virulent(AKA virus) Cohasset school clique. During recent years, I have actively involved myself in school issues from within(as an elected school committee member) and from without. You will be hard pressed to find any criticism directed toward the quality of education provided by Cohasset Schools. The MCAS results are eloquent testimony to the academic achievements of our educational system. Credit is not solely attributable to the affluence of our community; it is also because of our many fine teachers and perhaps the best high school principal in the Commonwealth, Mr. Curt Collins.

Unfortunately, the Cohasset School District is as bad at management as it is good at educating our youth. We do not have to accept "half a loaf." The so-called budget is a complete travesty. Lots of paper does not equate to the construction of a good budget.

Poor management puts our youth at risk because of inadequate operational policies and procedures that have led to dangerous misconduct and costly vandalism. The school committee is supposed to establish policies and the superintendent is the executive agent tasked to manage within those guidelines. Both have failed abysmally. Consequently, politics and parental denial reinforce inappropriate behavior by an unacceptably high percentage of Cohasset youth.

The greatest threat to our youth is the increasingly corrupt value system that afflicts and is fostered by this sanctimonious clique and their philosophy that the "end justifies the means." I listened to one former school committee member characterize misconduct as a "right of passage." Another cavalierly and out-of-hand dismissed a state survey indicating serious substance abuse problems in Cohasset schools. A third characterized the responsibility of the school committee to establish policy as a "waste of time." Some of you may recall Superintendent Malvey, on public television, attacking my expression of concern about misconduct during a school field trip. I only went public after waiting almost two months for a response to my queries. No school committee member rebutted Mr. Malvey. Subsequently, a parent contacted Mr. Collins to confirm aspects of misconduct to which the administration was apparently oblivious. I then had to point out to my school committee colleagues that the eighth grade was scheduling a ski trip in direct contravention of the Field Trip Policy that I had helped author and they had recently approved. Historically, ski trips have been a euphemism for drinking binges. At my insistence, the ski field trip was canceled.

During February/March 1999, I wrote eight fact filled columns on school issues for the Cohasset Mariner. Some members of the aforementioned clique tried to pressure the editor of the Mariner to end my column. Ms. Ofsthun, were you one of those callers? It seems likely in view of your suggestion that "perhaps the Mariner should stop including his misinformed, misleading editorials." Do you even understand the difference between an "editorial," a "column" and a "letter to the editor?" Ms. Ofsthun, do you appreciate the distinction between dissent and a "Fire" in a crowded auditorium? How do you propose that the Mariner censor free speech? Can the public be reassured that the "clique" has stopped putting its "spin" on information flow? Even in the depths of the Osgood debate; it would not have been wise to sacrifice the right of free speech. You have crossed the line and should step down from elective office. Failing that, Ms. Ofsthun may opt to run for re-election, this spring. The electorate should rebuke her candidacy based on her "do-nothing" tenure and her total misunderstanding about the right to free speech as protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. Such a vote will be a litmus test of whether the clique can successfully undermine our traditional American values. It is tempting to offer the voters an alternative to any candidacy by Ms. Ofsthun.

Crane clarifies train stance

TO THE EDITOR:

I wish to clarify and amplify some personal opinions that I have concerning Greenbush.

It is highly likely that Greenbush will be built and that all appropriate measures must be considered and undertaken to eliminate or minimize its adverse impacts.

The Hingham Square Tunnel recently reviewed in the report issued by MK Centennial, an independent firm consulting for the EOTC, does reduce some of the adverse impacts on our downtown area and part of the Lincoln Historic District but certainly not all of the potential problems. I believe the definite inclusion of this specific tunnel, which appears to be constructable and affordable, as a part of this project would significantly reduce the need to further pursue our current litigation, the purpose of which has always been to impose rigorous environmental review and standards on Greenbush restoration. Indeed, there would still be much serious work to be done with respect to the adverse impacts of Greenbush on our town and our neighboring towns of the Greenbush corridor but such a tunnel would be a good start.

Opposition to Greenbush over the years has been both necessary and helpful. It has provided the time and opportunity to better understand this project and to gain enough reliable data and citizen input by which we can specify its adverse impacts and mitigate effectively and vigorously for the best interests of all the towns involved.

Conceptually, I still believe that Greenbush is a much less flexible approach to the solution of this region's transportation needs in the present and foreseeable future than the multimodal plans that have been proposed. I would like to see the EOTC make a firm commitment to improving and enhancing such alternatives as commuter boat and bus service and other connector possibilities as important adjuncts to the train in a really comprehensive and planned approach. There will be time to integrate this into a total package.

The uncertainty of Greenbush has many not knowing which way to turn or when. It is time also to end their dilemma so they can plan for their future. Many of these citizens are the most affected, and we must not abandon their needs.

There is a time and a place for everything. This is the time to end this stalemate; drop the adversarial rhetoric; work respectfully together; and move on.

Man finds companionship, Christmas cheer at Carolina Hill

Father Bill's Place in Quincy; the South Shore Friends of the Homeless in Weymouth, and Carolina Hill.

Leamey and his sons came to Carolina Hill in early November after finding themselves homeless in the Boston area.

None of them ever had lived in a shelter before, or imagined homelessness would be an issue in their lives.

"When I took them," Leamey said of the boys, "I was renting my own place." He added his apartment was small and lacking in space.

Furthermore, Leamey said when he first got his sons back, he was forced to quit his roofing job, move out of his small apartment, and move in with his mother in a small two bedroom apartment.

"There just wasn't enough room for all of us there ," Leamey said.

As hard as it was, Leamey decided he needed to take his boys elsewhere, so he called the state Department of Transitional Assistance, who put Leamey and his sons up in a hotel.

"Soon after that," Leamey said, "we came to Carolina Hill." The first thing Leamey did when he got to Marshfield was take his sons to the doctor and the dentist. Then, he got them enrolled in the Marshfield school system.

"Billy goes to the Martinson School [in Marshfield]," he said, "and J.C. is enrolled in the Head Start program."

And like his sons, Leamey also knows he has to start over.

"I'm starting from scratch," he said. "Everything I owned was stored at my ex-wife's old house. It's all gone. But my boys are going to have a good Christmas anyway, and I'm happy about that."

Leamey acknowledged the outpouring of support from the South Shore communities, as well as the support of the staff and residents at Carolina Hill.

"Since I've been here," he said, "people have come by and donated things like old stereos, televisions, and other stuff. I haven't seen a day go by here where someone hasn't come by and donated something. The other day, a truckload of gifts arrived here for the kids. It's beautiful. The people around here do nice things."

Of his previous residence in the big city, Leamey quipped, "You can't even get the time in Boston!"

Leamey said with all of the holiday cheer pouring in from the community, and also from within Carolina Hill, his sons are feeling a bit more comfortable. He said his sons are also excited about the fact they will spend part of their Christmas with Leamey's mother, their grandmother.

"They've become used to it," he said of the shelter lifestyle, "and they like going to school. Things, I think, are beginning to go back to normal."

He added, "We're all kind of like a big family in [Carolina Hill]. We're all going through the same thing and we can all identify with that. I crack jokes, we all fool around, and we laugh. A couple people have moved out of here in the last couple of weeks, and we had a cake for them and gave them a card. When we all leave here, we plan on keeping in touch with one another."

Leamey said last week at Carolina Hill, a remarkable event occurred.

"We had a girl in here last week that had a baby," he said. "A couple of us got together and got some baby stuff for her. As broke as everyone is in here, we still managed to come up with $100. Everyone here is struggling to scrape two dimes together, but we came together to help somebody else out. The staff pitched in too. I can't even say enough about it."

Despite the warm sense of community between the residents of Carolina Hill, Leamey said his main priority is getting housing for him, his sons, and his daughter. He said he is at the top of the "Section 8 list" which would enable him to find a home in a more efficient manner.

"It's just a matter of finding the right place," Leamey said. "I figure I need a three-bedroom apartment, but the rents around the state are outrageous. Years ago, a month's rent equaled one week's pay, but not anymore. A single person just can't do it alone anymore. From what I've seen in the papers, some of the lowest rents for three-bedroom apartments are $1,600 and $1,700. There's not many other options out there."

What's more, Leamey said he never expected to be in his current situation. It just happened—and it happened very quickly.

"I never even considered it," Leamey said. "A lot of times, I always thought that homeless people were homeless by choice, homeless because they just didn't do anything. I was wrong. A lot of people around Massachusetts are going through tough times.

He added, "There's no reason for so many people to be homeless. There needs to be some kind of rent control or something. There are boarded-up buildings all over Boston that could be used for housing. The bottom line is that homeless people need to be recognized."

As a final remark, Leamey said, "Thank you to the people of the South Shore communities. My kids are going to have a good Christmas. It just goes to show that there are people in the area who recognize how serious the homelessness situation is."

A little help for the holidays

tive from all town churches on its board of directors. The food pantry is open on Tuesday mornings and has special holiday distributions for Thanksgiving, Christmas, and Easter.

The food pantry started in May 1993 as a result of a recognition on the part of Marjorie Steele, the Rev. Gary Ritts and others that some in town were in need of food.

"A number of us went around and tried to gauge what the need was," said Steele, who founded the organization's board of directors and was distributing food on Tuesday. "We just formed a committee and tried to help out."

The food pantry currently distributes food to about 15 households, though Steele said the number has been as large as 30 in the past. Applicants must be residents of Cohasset and must be on some form of government assistance to be eligible to receive food on a long-term basis.

Thompson said a number of those who need assistance are living on fixed incomes.

"A lot of the people are on social security and we try to help them out as much as we can," he said. "Some people come in temporarily. They're between jobs or just going through a hard time. If someone needs food, we try to give them what they need, and go through the documentation process later."

Those who regularly use the food pantry come in every other week, receiving food as well as a voucher for milk and eggs. A list of items needed by the pantry is included in all of the town's church bulletins, and Thompson said Cohasset residents have been quite generous.

"We're receiving quite a bit of food right now," said Thompson, as he pointed to the shelves in the Second Congregational Church basement holding grape jelly, peanut butter, and soup.

As he spoke, volunteer Shirley Tewksbury handed out a bottle of dishwashing liquid, which Thompson said is one of the pantry's biggest needs.

"For some reason, we're really low on cleaning supplies right now," he said. "We're most in need of laundry detergent and dishwashing liquid, as well as coffee, kleenex, and canned fruit.."

Bread will not be a need for a little while, as one woman brought 12 homemade loaves to the pantry yesterday.

While Cohasset is noted by those in other towns for its affluent Gold Coast homes, Steele said those who have lived in town for a few years are knowledgeable of the need for the food pantry.

"We've been around long enough that people in town know what we do," she said. "I think it's the people from out of town who are surprised that even people in Cohasset need help from time to time."

While some may be surprised that some people in Cohasset struggle to attain some of life's basic necessities, Thompson said it is an unfortunate reality.

"Sometimes, I encounter a surprised reaction from people when I tell them about the food pantry," he said. "The need may not be as large as in some communities, but the need is very genuine."

Anyone wishing to donate to the food pantry may do so by bringing items to the office of the Second Congregational Church, located at 43 Highland Ave.

Funding unavailable for late METCO bus

School committee says the money just isn't there

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Those hoping to convince the school committee to fund additional programs for the next school year may be given a crash course in fiscal reality.

PSO METCO representative Olivia Baldwin went to Thursday's school committee meeting with a proposal to provide transportation to Boston for METCO students participating in extracurricular activities. In conjunction with Scituate, an 18-passenger bus would provide door-to-door service to Boston for seven Cohasset students and seven Scituate students.

"It would cost $4,080 for the rest of the year," she said. "We'd really like to see a long-term solution, however. We'd like to see it included in the budget for next year and in future years."

Baldwin learned, however, that such a proposal would not be funded by the school committee anytime soon.

"The school committee strongly supports the METCO program," school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo told Baldwin. "Unfortunately, we just don't have the money available in the budget, not this year and not next year. Sometimes I hate this job, but I'd rather recognize the economic reality than beat around the bush."

School committee member Betsy Connolly, a vocal proponent of the METCO program, blamed the state for what she termed its inadequate funding of education.

"The state has a surplus while it's schools are suffering," she said. "Why aren't people badgering their legislators? People should be on e-mail with the state every minute, every day. Towns aren't getting enough money for their schools and its programs like special education and METCO that get hurt as a result."

METCO coordinator Yvonne Jones said members of the boys basketball team are most affected by the lack of a late METCO bus. Without available late transportation, coach Ron Ford drives the students to the Quincy T station after practice. The students then take the train home to Boston.

Jones was quick to praise Ford for taking the extra time to drive the students to Quincy, but said the lack of a late METCO bus will keep kids from participating in some school activities.

"The late bus is a tool for children to participate in extracurricular activities," she said. "These children will not be able to access everything these schools can offer, whether it be sports, extra academic help, or other activities."

Jones said middle school students who participate in extracurricular activities often stay overnight with host families in Cohasset, because they are simply too young to take the T to Boston.

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun said fundraising is the only way a late METCO bus would become available.

"Maybe we should approach fundraising one sports season at a time," she said. "Maybe the chamber of commerce would be able to help. It's definitely going to take an outside source to make this a reality."

Hats for the homeless

Deer Hill students win community service prize

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

In a shelter somewhere in the South Shore, a homeless man or woman is receiving a new knit hat. While clothing is routinely donated to shelters, especially during the holidays, these hats are a special gift.

What makes the hats so special are the little hands which produced them. Students at Deer Hill Elementary School have been knitting the hats for the last three years as part of a community service project brought to the school by art teacher Ann Berman.

"I went to a conference and there was a teacher from Cambridge who had an idea to teach the kids how to knit," Berman said. "She showed some of the hats the kids had made and I thought they were really beautiful. I thought that maybe we could do a little good and so I called Rosie's Place [a homeless shelter] with the idea of making them some hats. They said they'd love it."

In the program's first year, Deer Hill students made 184 hats for the homeless at Rosie's Place. What makes the feat truly remarkable is the fact that students made the hats on their own time.

"This isn't something we did as part of art class," Berman said. "I taught the kids how to knit after school, and the students worked on the hats at home, in the car on the way to school, and on the weekends. They do it all on their own time."

Last year, the students knitted more than 185 hats for Rosie's Place and another 246 for the Plymouth Coalition for the Homeless. The students attach a handwritten index card to each hat, which included the child's name, their grade, and how long it took the child to make the hat.

Berman said the people receiving the hats light up when they find out they were made by children.

"I've talked to people at Rosie's Place who say the little card mean as much to the people who get the hats as the hats themselves," she said. "I was told about one man who kept the card in his chest pocket all the time. It meant that much to him that some little kid in Cohasset made him a hat."

Because the program has been going on for three years, Deer Hill's sixth-graders are in their third year of knitting hats. As younger kids have moved into the school, the program has become a part of life at Deer Hill.

"Making these hats is something the kids are used to now, and something they still really enjoy," Berman said. "There's so much talk about the need for character education in our schools. If you can get the kids started early in doing projects like this, hopefully you'll build a tradition of community service that will carry on for a lifetime."

One of Berman's favorite things about the hat-making program has been its gender-neutrality. Little boys can be seen knitting after school as often as little girls.

"We have as many boys knitting as girls, and it's gone beyond the point where anyone's embarrassed about it. When we started, I explained to the boys that fishermen invented knitting. They'd use two sticks and some yarn to fix their nets. Once I showed them a picture of a big, tough fisherman knitting, they were convinced that it was something boys could do."

Some members of the sixth-grade boys basketball team showed just how comfortable they were with the project when they worked on their hats as they sat on the bench during a game in Scituate. Berman laughed when recounting a couple of phone calls she received from Scituate teachers who had been at the game.

"I had all of these calls from teachers in Scituate who had asked the boys why they were knitting at the game," she said. "When the boys told them they were making hats for homeless people, those teachers nearly fell over. Those teachers called me and said 'You've got some great kids.' They were just shocked that sixth-grade boys were doing something like this."

This year, Deer Hill students can be seen knitting in the hallways as they work on hats for the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless, Carolina Hill in Marshfield, and the Women's Crisis Center.

Berman said some of her veteran hat-makers are turning out hats at a frenetic pace.

"I have some kids who have made as many as 11 hats for the shelters," she said. "I have another girl who has become so proficient that she can make a hat in three days. The kids are even starting to use fancy patterns in their hats. Hats are good because there's a beginning and an end. The kids can finish them fairly quickly."

The hats are delivered to shelters by a caravan of volunteer parents. Berman said parents have become involved in community-service as a result of the students' work.

"When the parents come and see the shelters, they invariably ask what they can do to help," she said. "I've seen parents volunteer to help out at the shelter on the spot."

For last year's project, Deer Hill won a $3,000 prize from Fleet Bank for the 'Hats for the Homeless' project. The school was one of eight third-place winners in the Fleet All-Stars program in Massachusetts, which rewards schools for participating in community service projects.

"The students from the Deer Hill School epitomized the spirit of the Fleet All-Stars program," said Connie Zazoni, assistant vice president and branch manager at Fleet Bank Cohasset. "They identified a need in their community and creatively developed a solution as a team to help other individuals."

Over 7,300 students in Massachusetts participated in Fleet All-Stars projects throughout Massachusetts, including senior center visits, graffiti removal projects, and literacy programs. The first-place prize went to the Timilty School in Roxbury, whose students made blankets for babies stricken with AIDS.

Berman was gratified to see the selfless work of her students rewarded with a prize which will allow the program to continue for years to come.

"It was wonderful," she said of the award. "They brought us one of those giant foam checks and everything. I thought what are kids were doing really qualified as an outstanding community -service project. Especially in a town like ours, where you don't see homelessness every day, I think it shows that these kids really care about those who are less fortunate."

Gymnastics squad surprising foes early on

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Two meets into the season have revealed what Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics fans have known right along; Kristin Sheerin is on her way to having a monster winter campaign for the Skippers.

The three-time all-star and current co-captain was Cohasset/Norwell's top performer by capturing three events in last Tuesday night's 118.1 – 116.1 season-opening loss to Randolph High.

Sheerin was even better the following night in the Skippers' 115.8 – 93.7 win over Carver High. Not only did she score a sizzling 33.5 in the all-around, Sheerin also dominated the meet by garnering first place in every event

Teammate and fellow co-captain, Carlie Carter, contributed second-place finishes in every event against the Lady Crusaders. Freshman Meredith Bixby pulled out two thirds and Amy Maree clinched a third-place performance on the vault in the Lady Skippers' (1-1) easy Pilgrim Conference 2 win.

"It has been a lot of years since we've had so many kids. We actually have a team of 15 kids, compared to last year when we had seven or eight."
Coach Ruth Ardizzoni

Head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni said Cohasset/Norwell was aiming for an overall score of 115 against Randolph. The Lady Skippers would have accomplished that goal easily, and won the meet, if not for a rule that prohibits middle-school gymnasts' scores to figure into the overall results. If not for that rule, seventh-grader Nancy Durkin's solid bar and floor routines would have made the difference.

"She did a really nice job," Ardizzoni said. "It's too bad we can't use our middle-school kids."

In no way, though, did the loss to Randolph diminish the clinic Sheerin put on against the Lady Blue Devils. The diminutive sophomore, now in her fourth season of high school gymnastics, nailed an 8.5 on her floor routine while Carter grabbed the third slot with a 7.7.

The pair also finished 1-3 in the all-around with scores of 33.2 and 30.7, respectively. Sheerin and Carter finished second and third on bars with marks of 8.3 and 8.1. Bixby turned in a strong bar routine with a 6.5.

Skippers on the rebound

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With only eight eligible players, none of whom are seniors, the girls of Cohasset have managed to make up a competitive basketball team for this season.

Since the team is very young, (four freshmen, two sophomores, and two juniors) Cohasset is competing in a junior varsity league instead of varsity.

However, the Lady Skippers look at this not as a missed opportunity for a varsity team, but mores as a chance to rebuild the girls basketball program at Cohasset High School.

"I am definitely looking forward to this year," said Ellen Carr, who is in her first year as the Cohasset coach. "We've got very young team members who will grow not only physically but also with their skills."

"I am definitely looking forward to this year. We've got very young team members who will grow not only physically but also with their skills."
Coach Ellen Carr.

Another way the program will grow will be in numbers, since 50 percent of the current team is comprised of freshmen, and there are a myriad of players in the middle school.

In order to encourage an interest in basketball, there is now a weekend traveling team for sixth, seventh, and eighth grade girls, in addition to the middle school team.

The team consensus seems to be that in a year or two, there will be enough players in order to compete on the varsity level.

"We have a real lack of older kids," said freshman shooting guard Heather Peraino. "But right now we are just building to have a steady program later."

On a high school team, the older members are usually the ones who set the example for everyone else. But since this team has no seniors, Carr will be relying on everyone to help motivate the team.

Two players that have done just that so far are Maura O'Brien, a freshman, and Katie Wenmark, a junior. In fact, they have done such a good job that they were named captains at the beginning of the season.

Laraine Langford and Clarissa Stafford are great ball handlers who are the point guards while freshmen Peraino and Lindsay Grossman are very talented shooting guards. Wenmark and sophomores Kerry Long and Liza Parker will be the forwards this season with O'Brien running the center position. Freshman Molly Flanagan is on the scheduled roster, but is waiting for doctor's clearance to play.

With such an extremely short bench, many of the players will be switching around positions.

"Each girl brings a lot of individual skill," said Carr. "But we are going to have to be very flexible because we don't have many subs."

According to Carr, the keys to

Boys hoop preps for tourney

The Cohasset-Hanover High boys basketball game could not have started off much better for the Skippers last Monday night. Both teams were on the run, and Erik Shea's three-pointer gave Cohasset a 9-5 lead, but then the momentum shifted back to the Indians, drastically.

"We came out and played great," said Cohasset coach Ron Ford. "Then they had a 20-0 run."

The Skippers went over seven minutes without scoring a point and found themselves behind, 25-9 when the run was over. Cohasset never really recovered and lost 73-47.

"We can't turn the ball over like we did in the first half," said Ford. "We had 13 turnovers in the first half."

Although he was disappointed with the loss, Ford was able to keep it in perspective.

"They're just kids," said Ford. "They're gonna have those nights. They're good kids."

The loss dropped Cohasset's record to 1-2. The Skippers opened up the season with a 59-17 thrashing of Sacred Heart in Kingston, but then lost to Harwich by 10 last Friday.

"In a way, we have a young team, but we also have three seniors and four juniors," said Ford. "They can be so careless with the ball. We've got a lot of work to do."

The Skippers have good overall team speed, something they utilized in the win over Sacred Heart and early on in the game with Hanover. The Indians were able to adjust though, and were able to seal off Cohasset point guard Daniel Trowers from penetrating down the middle.

"They're just kids. They're gonna have those nights. They're good kids."
Coach Ron Ford.

"They're a great shooting team," said Hanover coach Mark Malloy. "They came out running, but we did a nice job of identifying their shooters and defending them. Gary (Mahler) did a nice job on Trowers."

The frustration began to show as the Skippers missed some shots from close range and managed just 17 points in the first half.

Hanover deserves credit as well. The Indians came off of a disappointing 64-62 loss at Rockland Saturday night. By battling the highly regarded Bulldogs, and then handily defeating Cohasset, Hanover is quickly becoming one of the teams to watch along the South Shore this season.

As for the Skippers, who did not have a player score in double figures against Hanover, Ford is still trying to figure out what kind of team he has.

"We can play better than this," said Ford. "We have to move on and work on things in practice."

The Skippers will be in action again in the Cohasset Converse Holiday Classic featuring Cardinal Spellman, Dover-Sherborn and Scituate. On Tuesday, Dec. 28, Cardinal Spellman will play Dover Sherborn at 6 p.m. Game two will immediately follow at 8 p.m. when Scituate and Cohasset square off.

On Wednesday, Dec. 29, the consolation game between the loser of the first game and loser of the second game will be at 6 p.m., while the championship game will follow at 8 p.m. strong vault performances with Sheerin's second-place, 8.1 score leading the way. Carter's routine netted a 7.6 while Katherine Coyne and Maree both registered 7.1s.

Sheerin nailed a fine, early-season 8.3 on the beam, but a handful of falls by the Lady Skippers in the event hurt the team's overall score and allowed the opening for Randolph to edge ahead. The beam miscues dogged the team again the following evening.

Ardizzoni, though, isn't overly concerned about the falls from the beam at this point in the season.

"We just need a few more meets to get the freshmen more experience," she said.

The Carver meet wasn't nearly as close as the tough defeat to Randolph. With Sheerin and Carter placing at the top in every event, the Lady Crusaders' night was over in a hurry.

Sheerin posted Gina Verge-like scores on the bars (8.1), beam (8.5), vault (8.4) and floor (8.5). Ardizzoni believes her marks will continue to improve as the season progresses.

Carter scored 7.7s on the beam, vault and floor, and a 7.9 with her bar routine. Bixby placed with a pair of 6.4s on the bars and Maree garnered third-place on the vault with a 7.4 showing.

"I think tonight will be great because we'll be going up against a team that scored a 104," Ardizzoni said the morning of the Carver meet. "The girls were nervous [last night] and lacked some confidence."

The Lady Skippers won't be challenging for the conference title this season against the likes of Scituate, Hanover and Hingham. Verge is back for the Lady Sailors and should continue her domination within the conference.

Ardizzoni sees the Lady Skippers challenging Randolph and Carver for fourth place in the overall standings with several gymnasts contributing throughout the season.

Ninth-grader Katie Portanova should help Cohasset/Norwell with her floor and vault routines. Captain Patti LaCroix of Norwell will compete on the floor and either beams or bars, with Julie Callahan sticking mainly with the beam.

Bixby, who Ardizzoni says is "very talented" and has a "very promising" future in the sport, may compete in the all-around before the season is out and will more than likely be on three events per meet. Maree should make a mark on the bars, as well as with her vault and floor routines.

Danielle Connolly, Jacki Berlo and Samantha Swadish are working on putting their routines together, while Laura Good has looked "nice and clean" on the floor and vault.

The future of the team looks especially bright. With an overall roster of 21, the Lady Skippers should be particularly sound next winter with several middle-schoolers moving up to the varsity level. New members include Jacqueline Smith, Lucy Gardner, Nicole Durant, Alicia Sanchez, Courtney Hurley and Colby Durant.

Former Norwell gymnast Kara Connarty splits the head-coaching duties with Ardizzoni and former Cohasset gymnasts Carolyn Pratt and Kara Protulis work with several of the middle-school athletes during practice.

"It has been a lot of years since we've had so many kids," Ardizzoni said. "We actually have a team of 15 kids, compared to last year when we had seven or eight."

Grapplers are quick studies

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

It was supposed to be a rebuilding year for the Cohasset High wrestling team.

Last year's impressive squad graduated six seniors, and the schedule for this season was not going to be kind to the Skippers.

Yet after four meets, Cohasset is 2-1-1, and that's just the beginning.

"It's been nice," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "The tough part is we're just two points from being 4-0."

The Skippers opened up with a tough test at BC High and came up just short, losing 38-37 at the Eagles' nest.

"We wrestled very well," said Sweeney. "We were fairly inexperienced, but we did really well."

Last Saturday, Cohasset then had a quad meet with Dedham, Holbrook and Canton. The Skippers went 2-0-1, beating Dedham 36-30 and Holbrook 38-6. They tied Canton, 40-40.

"The young kids are wrestling really well," said Sweeney. "I knew what I had in the seniors, and they've been winning the majority of their matches."

Joe Carbone is 4-0 while competing at 215. Kevin DeVito is 3-0 at 171, Liam O'Donnell is also 3-0 at 160, as is Chris Pratt, who wrestles at 125.

"It was really up in the air," said Sweeney. "It depended on how the younger kids developed. I'm pleased with the way the kids wrestled."

Junior Danny Duffy won both of his matches on Sunday at 130, while sophomore Dan Littauer is an impressive 3-0 on the year.

"Against Holbrook, I was able to wrestle six freshmen, and they all won, which was a nice treat," said Sweeney.

Cohasset was scheduled to wrestle Scituate last night before the holiday weekend. The Skippers will also compete in a quad meet at Carver.

"We'll be facing three Division 1 powers," said Sweeney. "We'll be up against Weymouth, Plymouth South and Hingham."

Cohasset will have to try and stay healthy.

"Injuries can be tough," said Sweeney. "To win these meets without depth is really tough."

The meet will give his newer wrestlers some more experience before taking the weekend off.

"We'll be getting ready for the Marshfield tournament," said Sweeney. "There's about 21 teams in it."

The Skippers won the title last year, but will have a tough road to travel this time around with the number of quality teams competing.

"We're hoping to go down there and be in the top five," said Sweeney. "Anything higher than that and I'll be pleasantly surprised."

The tournament will be held on Wednesday, Dec. 29 and Thursday, Dec. 30.

You really have to have two wrestlers in each weight class for a meet like this," said Sweeney. "If you don't it gets tough to overcome. It's tough to fill in."

winning for Cohasset are as follows: First, the team needs to stay out of foul trouble because there are so few players. Second, the girls need to play good team defense, and shut down the other team's offensive weapons.

Finally, Carr said that since this year is more of a building year than anything else, winning is not as important as learning how to play the game.

"The work ahead is the fun part," she said. "If we can focus on a good team concept, this year should be fun and rewarding."

Those in need are closer than you think.
Your gift of hope can help.
As the economy continues to rise in the Boston area, unfortunately the number of people in need does too. This holiday season, 63 percent of local food pantries and soup kitchens report an increased demand for food aid. In fact, 35 percent of clients at emergency food programs are children. Many people are looking for ways to help, but don't know how. Community Newspaper Company's Gifts of Hope can help you reach those in need in your area.
For the past seven years, readers' Gifts of Hope donations have fed local hungry families, sheltered local homeless people and brought joy to the faces of young children right in the Boston area. Another season is upon us. And more people need your help.
Please join the Cohasset Mariner and Community Newspaper Company in giving the greatest gift of all – the gift of hope. A donation of any size goes a long way in helping those in need. Here is some helpful information in planning your gift:
• $35 provides a family of five groceries for one week
• $25 provides 75 meals for hungry people
• $100 provides more than 700 pounds of food at a local food pantry
PLEASE MAKE YOUR TAX DEDUCTIBLE CHECK OR MONEY ORDER PAYABLE TO: (Choose one of the local charities) Fr. Bill's Place of Quincy or Carolina Hill of Marshfield or South Shore Friends of the Homeless.
MAIL TO: GIFTS OF HOPE, c/o Anne Rodwell, 16 Enterprise Drive, Marshfield, MA, 02050.
(Please do not make payable to this newspaper or to Gifts of Hope as that will only delay disbursement efforts.)
If you are looking to volunteer this holiday season, or are a non-profit organization in need of volunteers, log on to www.townonline.com/volunteer for local volunteer opportunities.

WORSHIP NEWS

Christmas services at St. Stephen's

Christmas worship at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., features a variety of worship celebrating Christ's birth. The Christmas Eve Family Holy Communion service will be held Friday, Dec. 24, at 5 p.m. The Jubilate Children's Choir will sing. The star of Bethlehem will be lit on the church tower.

The Festal Holy Communion Service of Christmas Eve will begin at 11 p.m. preceded by a special program of Christmas music to start at 10:30 p.m. The Saint Stephen's Adult Choir with music director Dr. G. Fredrick Guzasky will offer music such as the Russian hymn, "Today the Virgin," and other works including the Austrian carol "Stille Nacht," and Ron Nelson's "Choral Fanfare for Christmas." The traditional story from the Gospel of Luke is read from the King James Bible. Candlelight illuminates the singing of "Silent Night." The beautiful bells of the church carillon will ring out the music of Christmas into the night sky.

Worship on Christmas Day, Saturday, Dec. 25, will be at 10 a.m. Sunday morning worship as usual is at 8 and 10 a.m. New Year's Eve, Friday, Dec. 31, celebrates the Holy Name of our Lord with worship at 5 and 11 p.m. The Rector will offer a spiritual meditation at the start of the year 2000 at 10 p.m. entitled: "He Came by Night to Jesus."

The church school is busy preparing an Epiphany Pageant to take place Sunday, Jan. 9, at the 10 a.m. worship celebrating the appearance of Jesus to the three magi representing all the world. Children will portray angels, shepherds hurrying to Bethlehem, Joseph and Mary with baby, and, of course, the three magi.

Holiday events at First Parish

Christmas will arrive on Christmas Eve in the Meeting House at 5 p.m. with a "traditional" children's pageant. This service is filled with the magic of children and Christmas, the students of the church school, robed as angels, shepherds, Mary, Joseph and the baby Jesus will reenact the Nativity Scene. Music for this service will be performed by the Junior Choir.

Later on that same evening at 8 p.m. there will be a candlelight service in the Meeting House. The Rev. Colin Leitch will deliver a homily titled "Emanuel Venit" and Christmas hymns will be sung.

Rides to worship services

Transportation for the elderly and disabled to and from worship services can be scheduled by calling Patricia Sargent at 383-9215 by noontime the preceding Friday. This service is provided to Cohasset residents by the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs.

DAR members make Christmas merry for veterans

Cheer and goodwill filled Nancy O'Toole's Cohasset home last week as she and fellow members of the Col. Thomas Lothrop/Old Colony Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR) wrapped gifts for veterans at Brockton's VA Medical Center.

"One of our goals as a DAR local chapter is to promote patriotism," said O'Toole, "and what better way to do that than to remember the nation's veterans who secured our freedom and liberty."

Two dozen members of the Col. Lothrop/Old Colony chapter, from Weymouth to Duxbury, Norwell to Randolph, wrapped more than 200 packages for the Medical Center, packages which included toiletries, candy, snacks, playing cards, notepads and socks. The gifts were delivered the next day by Santa Claus, aka Austin O'Toole.

The Brockton VA Medical Center, a 377-bed facility, has served veterans since 1954, offering long term care, mental health services and comprehensive outpatient primary care. The center has been recognized for its programs for homeless and mentally incapacitated veterans, its internationally renowned research staff and its clinical programs which serve as a model for the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The Daughters of the American Revolution, founded in 1890 to promote history, education and patriotism, play a significant role in civic affairs, awarding educational and good citizen scholarships, preserving and restoring historic landmarks, promoting flag etiquette, volunteering in VA Medical Centers and maintaining and encouraging geneological research.

Membership is open to women who are directly descended from a man or woman who served the cause of American Independence. For more information about the local chapter, call Nancy O'Toole at 383-1547.

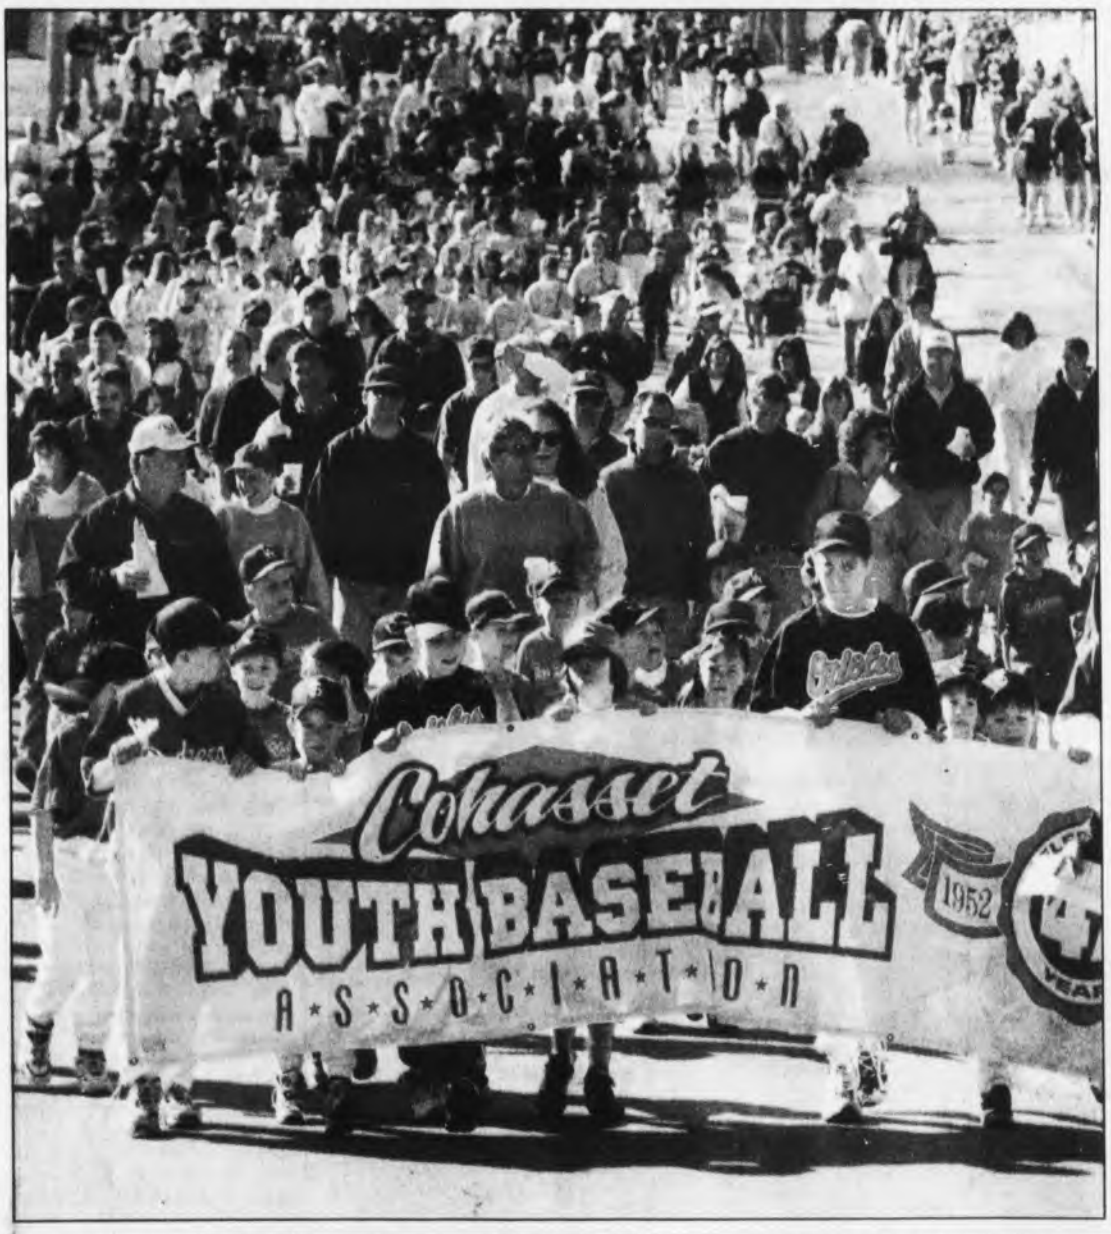
A look back at Cohasset's year

1999 as seen through pictures



Young drivers collide on Forest Avenue

All involved treated and released from South Shore Hospital

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Seventeen-year old Jessie Zerendow, 9 Forest Notch, was struck Tuesday evening as she pulled out of her driveway onto Forest Avenue, according to police chief Brian Noonan.

Zerendow was hit on the front left side of her 1985 Buick station wagon by a 1991 Volkswagen driven by 16-year old Nicholas Trubia of 43 Chandler St. in Marshfield.

Trubia had two passengers in his car, 14-year old Joseph Trubia and 14-year old Gregory Fleek, both of Marshfield. All four teenagers involved in the accident were taken by Hull and Cohasset ambulances to South Shore Hospital in Braintree.

Noonan said all four teenagers had multiple abrasions and said some may have experienced minor head injuries as a result of the crash. On Wednesday morning, South Shore Hospital spokesman Rick Pozniak said all four had been treated and released.

According to Noonan, Trubia was heading toward the ocean on Forest Avenue at a speed well exceeding the legal limit of 30 miles per hour.

"There were skid marks at the scene in excess of 80 feet," he said. "The operator of the vehicle [Trubia] stated that he was driving at approximately 50 miles per hour, but our investigation has found that he was exceeding that speed."

Noonan said Trubia faces a number of charges as a result of the accident.

"He is facing multiple violations," Noonan said. "Obviously there was speeding involved. He also was driving a car in which there were no seat belts, which had been removed for some reason. He also faces junior operator license violations."

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

ROOMS AND BORDERS

It is not always necessary to outfit a room with wallpaper from floor to ceiling to transform its look. A simpler idea involves the use of decorative borders. These pre-pasted or self-adhesive strips come in looks ranging from textural grass cloth to florals. One of the hottest new trends involves the use of borders printed with such architectural details as wooden moldings. Thus, mimicking the effect of real wood trim is no more difficult than applying these wallpaper strips. The faux look lends instantaneous texture and depth to rooms with little visual interest. Decorative borders may be affixed to tops of walls, around window and door trim, or at waist level to create instant wainscoting.

At THE DESIGNING WOMAN, we recognize that one style does not fit all. When we create an interior design plan, we consider the customer's personal tastes, lifestyle and space requirements. We coordinate complete room design from concept to the selection of wallpaper, fabrics, and furniture. Call us at 383-6411 to learn more about our services or to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: Children's bedrooms lend themselves perfectly to the use of whimsical decorative borders, placed at the child's eye level.

Abington Savings branch robbed at Shaw's

Incident occurs on Tuesday afternoon

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The branch of Abington Savings Bank located inside Shaw's supermarket on Route 3A in Cohasset was robbed at 4:49 Tuesday afternoon by an unarmed, masked man who presented a note to the teller on duty.

The fugitive, described by police chief Brian Noonan as a white, 5' 10" male, wearing a blue coat and dark pants, escaped with an undetermined amount of cash.

The branch was robbed at 4:49 Tuesday afternoon by an unarmed, masked man who presented a note to the teller on duty.

The bank robbery is the first in Cohasset since March 1992, when the Rockland Trust at the former Cushing Plaza was robbed at gunpoint. Noonan said the 1992 robbery was never solved.

Police do have a lead to work with concerning Tuesday's robbery, however.

"Sometime after the incident, we recovered a stolen vehicle at Stop and Shop Plaza," Noonan said. "The vehicle, which was running, was a red, 1995 Jeep Cherokee, and was stolen from a resident of Woburn."

Noonan said the robbery was unlike most that have occurred in the past in Cohasset, because the fugitive was unarmed.

"Most of the robberies we've had in the past have involved some sort of weapon," Noonan said. "The fact that he had a mask on is different from the last time around as well. But we have the whole thing on camera. We have photographs and videotape of the incident. The investigation is ongoing."

The police department will be aided in the investigation by the FBI, which Noonan said are always involved in bank robbery cases. The Bureau of Criminal Investigation, which the Cohasset police department contracts with to provide assistance in investigating crime scenes, will also lend its expertise .

According to Abington Savings Bank executive vice president Kevin Tierney, the robbery is the first at any of the four supermarket branches of Abington Savings, the first of which was opened in 1996.

Tierney said he was thankful no employees or customers were harmed during the robbery.

"Our primary concern is the safety of customers and employees, so we're glad that there were no other customers at that time," he said.

While it is the policy of Abington Savings not to reveal the policies which its employees are to follow during a robbery, Tierney said the employees on duty "conducted themselves in a responsible and professional manner."

While Tuesday's robbery was the first instance of an Abington Savings supermarket branch being robbed, Shaw's spokesperson Bernie Rogan said previous robberies have occurred at other bank branches located within Shaw's supermarkets.

"It's happened before, and I'm sure it will happen again," Rogan said. "The closed-circuit televisions which we have in all our stores should be a serious deterrent to these types of crimes. If it isn't, then these criminals are idiots. There's not too much that goes on in one of our stores that we don't see. We have very good surveillance equipment."

Rogan wanted to assure customers that robberies of any kind are rare at Shaw's locations.

"Incidents involving this kind of foolishness are extremely isolated," he said. "Shaw's stores are still a very safe environment.

What's ahead with Y2K and what should we do about it?

Dr. Ned Vankevich
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Year 2000 is less than two days away. So too is the arrival of the so-called "Y2K computer bug"— the built in date rollover problem that could cause millions of computers worldwide to fail or malfunction at Midnight Jan. 1 when the year date changes from 1999 to 2000. Although there are large disagreements over what exactly might take place at midnight Dec. 31, one thing is certain: no one knows for sure what will happen.

There are many reasons I think it wise that each of us seriously consider what lies ahead and prepare for what might go wrong. Let me give four.

1. We live in a "wired" world. Almost anything we touch and do in today's world is in some way influenced by a computer. Computers help us make, route, track and control the things that we eat, wear and use. Computers also play a central role in running our public utilities, as well as the banking and telecommunication industries and local businesses, industries and governmental agencies. Because each of these systems are so interconnected when one computer or system goes wrong it can have cause problems someplace else.

2. This is not the "Melissa" or "Michelangelo" virus. Governments and private industry world wide have spent trillions of dollars trying to fix and prevent Y2K problems. This alone says Y2K is not a "minor" problem.

3. There is no way to say for sure if all the millions of computers that are said to be fixed are indeed "compliant" and "repaired" or that they will function well when other computers fail. The only true "end to end" test will take place beginning midnight Dec. 31. This is why governmental and emergency preparedness leaders will spend the New Year's week-end in command and control bunkers "just in case."

4. Given the sheer size of the number of computers involved in the Y2K problem, there is a good chance some areas and people are going to get struck by the Y2K computer bug and lose electrical power, water, heat, and experience food and other related shortages.

In light of the seriousness of Y2K, both the Federal Emergency Management Association and the Red Cross are recommending that everyone of stock up on essential goods "just in case" our local area takes a Y2K hit. The following ten steps will help you get ready for Y2K in the short amount of time that remains. Remember this is the basic minimum, and that each of these steps needs to be tailored to your specific needs and circumstances.

1. Work as a Team. Now is not the time to get "stressed out." Get together with your family, friends, neighbors, church members, etc. and decide what needs to be done and who will do it. Get commitments from people and encourage one another to follow through.

2. Assess your needs. How much water you will store depends upon how many people in your group will need it. The types of food and other goods we store will also depend upon the likes, desires and needs of those in our care. When deciding what and how much to stock up on we must pay special attention to the needs of infants, the sick and elderly.

3. Get essential items first. I recommend at least a two week supply of all those things you can't live without, food, water, toilet paper, etc. We also need to keep warm. Get flashlights, woolen blankets, sleeping bags, long underwear. You can always throw a party or camp in your backyard next summer if you end up not needing them!

4. Have something extra to share. Not everyone will be prepared for what Y2K might bring. Having extra matches, blankets, food and water can help others survive if some goes wrong in your neighborhood.

5. Go without electricity. Do a Y2K trial run. Turn off the power for a few hours. This will quickly show you what you have forgotten and where to place it so that you can find it in the dark.

6. Anticipate problems. What happens if someone in your group is on insulin and the local pharmacies run out? What if the toilet system does not work? Or someone gets a toothache? Now is the time to have a back-up plan. Be sure to put fresh batteries in your smoke and carbon monoxide detectors.

7. Make copies of all important records. A lot of data could be lost-temporarily or permanently during Y2K. Having backup copies of insurance policies, pension funds, bank account information, mortgage statements, governmental records, etc. could save lots of time and headaches later.

8. Have some games to keep people occupied. Sad to say, but many of us are losing the skill of playing, relating and communicating without the use of electrical devices, like television, computers, VCR's, etc. Learning some old fashioned social skills via games and family and group fun might help us rediscover what we have lost.

9. Develop a positive mental attitude. Live with hope and anticipate the best. Our goal is to thrive not just survive. Y2K can be a time of personal renewal as we rediscover the simple and important things of life-namely how important our family and friends truly are.

10. Cultivate a larger perspective. Remember our forefathers and mothers survived without central heating, supermarkets and automobiles and so can we. (The stocking of a pantry and heating supplies was a common practice in the old days.) By being focused on others and working together as a team, supporting and encouraging one another, we can survive most anything.

This is a minimum Y2K preparedness program that anyone can implement over the next few weeks. Y2K need not be a frightening nor surprising time if we communicate with those around us and prepare properly. We need to act-rather than react to what might come our way. Don't procrastinate. You and your loved ones will be glad you didn't.

Dr. Ned Vankevich is the author of Y2K Made Simple: A Natural Health Resource Guide (Paraclete Press, 1999), and a professor of communication arts at Eastern Nazarene College. He was the keynote speaker at the Cohasset Community Preparedness workshop sponsored by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce Nov. 20 at the middle-high school.

Millennial madness should be averted in Cohasset

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Surely you've seen the commercials depicting extreme chaos as the clock strikes midnight this New Year's Eve. Buildings shut down, street lights turn off, and cars are powerless in the wake of traffic jams as thousands attempt to flee darkened cities.

"The state came in and checked our computers at Town Hall. In addition, we had consultants come in and run checks on the systems in the police and fire departments. We are very happy with those results and we're ready for the new year. We don't expect any problems."
Town manager Mark Haddad

Town manager Mark Haddad said he doesn't expect any such chaos to ensue in Cohasset, as Y2K tests began in earnest last January.

"The state came in and checked our computers at Town Hall," Haddad said. "In addition, we had consultants come in and run checks on the systems in the police and fire departments. We are very happy with those results and we're ready for the new year. We don't expect any problems."

Because the police department relies so heavily on computers, Noonan said it was crucial to make sure the systems were Y2K compliant.

"Our day-to-day operation depends on computers," he said. "We also checked out our radios and in-house phone system. 911 was a big worry as well, and I'm happy to report that the 911 system is all up-to-date."

Noonan said the Y2K checks were performed by different companies to ensure the compliance of all types of equipment.

"Both our hardware and software companies came in and did extensive work," he said. "Our hardware company, Proxima, spent quite a bit of time upgrading our systems. A lot of our software work was actually done by modem, which is quite common. I'm confident that we'll be fine."

According to Haddad, all fire department apparatus, including radios, medical equipment, and alarm systems have also been checked and are deemed ready to tackle the rigors of 2000.

Cohasset residents can expect business as usual when the 21st century begins Friday night.

"We're just going to have our usual complement of police and firefighters on duty," Haddad said. "The police chief and fire chief are ready for anything that comes up."

AROUND TOWN

YACHT RACES

I had a nice chat with Ron Hobson the other day — (don't you just love his times on the radio? How much does he have stored away in his brain? He seems to know every fact and figure that is brought up!).

Anyway, Ron told me some exciting news for all of you who are interested in boats, voyages, adventure and fun. Robin Davie will be at St. Anthony's Hall to give a wonderful talk on the yacht races he participated in from 1988-1999 (he was navigator three times) — Mr. Davie had many adventures and many challenges throughout his trips.

The Cohasset Yacht Club is going to present him to speak, with proceeds going to the Cohasset Middle-High School and their Marine Studies program! There will be no charge for children (won't they love hearing all of his adventures?) and it is only $10 per adult.

The date is Jan. 8 — don't forget that our Marine Studies program will benefit, as will you!

ARROW OF LIGHT

Matthew Tabor and Robert Brady are awarded the "Arrow of Light" by Jeff Forsyth, cubmaster of Pack 38 in Cohasset. This is the only badge that can be worn as a Boy Scout. These boys now stand with the few that have achieved this honor. Congratulations!

ON THE MEND

We sure were happy to hear that Ruth Pratt is home after her recent surgery! Ruth is one of the pillars of our community; whatever needs to be done, she will do! Get well fast, Ruth!

EARLY CHRISTMAS PRESENT

Let us all give a huge Cohasset welcome to Brian William Doyle! Brian was born Dec. 16, weighed 7 lbs. 3-1/2 ozs. and was 20 inches long.

Brian's parents are Patti and Bill Doyle and he has a big brother Matthew (15 months old) — they have been residents of Cohasset since Oct. 1, news that delights Aunt Sue and Pete as well as Aunt Kathy and Uncle Ed!

Naturally, grandparents James and Maureen Doyle and Ann Burgholzer are thrilled to pieces to welcome Brian into their presence and will love him to pieces!

What a Christmas!

GET WELL SOON

If you have not seen the truck (complete with at least one dog) there is a reason — Cliff Dickson had to take off his red suspenders and go into surgery last week and boy, do we miss his smiling face! As this is being written, he is at South Shore Hospital, but by the time you read it, he will probably be home!

Send you best wishes and tons of love via a card to 18 Tupelo Rd.

TOP TENNIS PLAYER

We extend our congratulations to Elizabeth Stone, a seventh-grader at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School!

Elizabeth has been selected to play in the USTA National Tennis Tournament in Tucson, Ariz., Jan. 1 to 5.

This honor is extended to those players in the United States who are ranked in the top 10 of their age division and region.

Elizabeth, we are certainly rooting for you; let us know your results!

BEST WISHES, LIBBY

It sure is nice to see Libby Hagan "hobbling" around. Libby doesn't miss a beat, even with a broken ankle; hope that you "mend" quickly, Libby!

BC HIGH HONORS

Don't forget to bring your families and friends to see the hockey alumni game at the Pilgrim Ice Arena in Hingham! Everyone is so looking forward to it, both alumni and friends and parents — see people whom you haven't seen in years. Watch the "oldies" verses the current team and have a great time!

Admission is $5 for adults, $2 for students — it will be such fun!

CHRISTMAS TREE REMOVAL

If you have no idea as to what to do with your now-old Christmas tree, don't forget this: volunteers from the Drug and Alcohol Committee, as well as the Teen Center volunteers will remove and dispose of you tree! It is a fundraiser and will be held Jan. 8 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; also, Jan. 9 from noon until 3 p.m.

There is a small charge: $10, ($5 for seniors). Call 383-2492 to order service.

Once again, don't forget to call me with your news! What a way to start the New Year — you and/or your family or friends in the paper (I still have a picture of my daughter from the Mariner — she was four!) — so send your news, send your pictures, we'll do the rest!

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Polar Bears Club plans New Year's Day swim

The Cohasset Polar Bear Club will hold its first official public meeting at Sandy Beach on New Year's Day, opening the meeting at noon in the icy cold water as they try not only to start a club, but a tradition.

Given the expected temperatures, the meeting will adjourn quickly, but the memories of the swim will last forever.

The Polar Bear Club is the idea of three daring Cohasset residents — Gregg Helbock, Chris Mier and Mark Toomey — who will brave the trip to the beach for what they hope will become a 21st-century ritual bath.

The threesome invite any other interested Cohassct residents and visitors to join them in the water to welcome in the new year. New members need to bring only a bathing suit and the right attitude.

Organizers stress that the swim is not just a publicity stunt, but also a cleansing of the excesses of the 1900s and a chance for a fresh, cold start to the new century.

"We've all heard of other groups doing this, but no one we have ever known has actually belonged to one of those clubs which, by the way, never seem to invite anyone new along," says Helbock. "We thought that the best time to start a new tradition, one that we hope endures through the next century, would be a modest effort this year. People can join us on New Year's Day and say that they were part of the initial effort, that they were there when it all began in 2000."

Helbock said the new club's initiation rituals are simple: Wear a bathing suit and go completely underwater, and you're in. He noted, however, that if the first-time New Year's Day event proves successful, he could see the club turning the annual event into a fundraiser someday.

Says Helbock: "I'm sure my friends — and some people who aren't my friends — would pay money to see this. But we'll save that idea for next year if we survive."

For more information on joining the Cohasset Polar Bears in their historic swim, call Helbock at 383-6756 or Mier at 383-2897.

The town was once a summer colony

The Cohasset of 1900 was a very different place

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Though Cohasset is still noted for its beautiful homes on Jerusalem Road, the mansions which were built there defined the town as the 20th century began.

Those homes were almost exclusively summer residences back then, palaces in which the independently wealthy enjoyed months of leisure.

"The turn of the century was the height of the summer colony era," said David Wadsworth, curator of the Cohasset Historical Society. "The people who lived in those homes were completely separate from the townies who stayed in Cohasset year-round."

While the residents of the great Jerusalem Road estates only summered in Cohasset, they still employed a number of people who lived in the town year-round.

"There were gardeners, domestics, and horsemen who worked on the estates even when the owners were out of town," Wadsworth said. "They lived in the working-class neighborhoods."

Cohasset was also becoming a railroad town as the 20th century began, and those who came to work on the railroads contributed to the mix of nationalities in town that can still be witnessed today.

"There were a lot of Irish and Portuguese families because of the railroads," Wadsworth said. "Both conductors and engineers lived in town and contributed to the working-class mix."

Still, aside from local shops, the railroad, and the Jerusalem Road estates, not a great deal of work was available in Cohasset. The population of only 2,759 in 1900 reflected the lack of available jobs which would bring people to town.

Even the seafaring industry, which had brought many to Cohasset originally, was dying out at the turn of the century.

"The maritime era had just ended," Wadsworth said. "It disappeared, for the most part, around 1890. That was one of the reasons that the first volume of the Town History was published in 1898. They realized they better start writing this stuff down, because the seafarers were all leaving."

"The turn of the century was the height of the summer colony era. The people who lived in those homes were completely separate from the townies who stayed in Cohasset year-round."
Historical Society curator David Wadsworth

Without a viable maritime industry, Cohasset would not experience a tremendous amount of growth until it became a commuter town in the 1950's.

"The population of the town didn't go over 3,000 until after World War II," Wadsworth said. "The first big housing developments occurred in the 1950's. The population was pretty static for the first half of the 20th century."

Though automobiles began to arrive in town in the early years of the century, horse-draw carriages were still a common sight on the streets of Cohasset in 1900. In The Narrative History of Cohasset, Vol. 2, Burtram Pratt reported that 455 horses were assessed in the town in 1900, roughly one per six people.

For those who did not have a horse, the bicycle was a popular way to traverse the streets of Cohasset. The young men or women who biked along the Common were greeted by salesmen of the sort rarely seen today.

"The street scene was frequently enlivened by a visit from John, the banana man, seen peddling his wares from a big basket swung from his shoulder," Pratt writes. "[Also seen were] an organ grinder, with his barrel organ and monkey; a German band; or a trained bear act."

While Cohasset did indeed possess an interesting array of travelling salesmen and entertainers, it was most notably a summer home for Boston's wealthy families at the turn of the century.

A Boston Globe article in 1909 by John J. Carberry, explained the importance of the Jerusalem Road estates to the viability of the town at large.

"Jerusalem Road, that recreation ground of many wealthy Bostonians, identifies a colony established on three miles of as charming a thoroughfare as New England can exhibit," Carberry wrote. "With its elevated acres overlooking the sea, it contributes the summer life and what is even more to the point, the taxes."

With a town budget of only $58,995 in 1900 as opposed to the $18,225,588 expended in 1999, the revenue generated from the Jerusalem road estates was indeed vital to the overall success of the town.

With the onset of the Great Depression in 1930, the estates began to disappear, laying the groundwork for the affluent, yet more homogeneous town which exists as the 21st century begins.

Deadline for Citizen of Year nominations nears

In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1999 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 7. Please see the nomination form on page 10.

The deadline for nominations for the 1999 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 7. Please see the nomination form on page 10. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the 1999 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January 2000.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

Millennium? Not really

Well, it's only two days away. On Saturday, assuming the world doesn't explode, we'll be able to say we've seen the dawn of a new millennium.

Or will we? Is 2000, in fact, the beginning of a new era?

According to conventional wisdom, apparently, the answer is "yes." Almost everyone and his brother seems content to look at the calendar, see the 1900s turn into 2000, and assume that means the end of the second millennium and, of course, the 20th century along with it.

If we have to start writing 20-something instead of 19-something for the rest of our lives every time we write a check, letter or anything else, then that must mean it's the millennium, right?

Wrong.

Anyone who can count knows this isn't actually the millennium. The first century didn't begin with the year 0; it began with the year 1. It ended with the year 100, and the second century began with 101, ended with 200, etc.

Following that simple logic, the first millennium ended at the conclusion of the year 1000, and the second began in 1001. The second millennium concludes at the end of 2000, and the third will start on New Year's Day, 2001.

Of course, that's just if you use standard common sense. Those who are more spiritually developed, however, have offered another perspective.

According to various religious authorities, the second millennium actually began five or six years ago. It apparently has something to do with the census Caesar Augustus took that prompted Mary and Joseph Jesus to travel to Bethlehem just prior to the birth of Jesus. (It's rather complicated; ask the experts if you want a better explanation.)

Those whom I've personally heard espouse this theory include DeAnna Putnam, who's basically a minister but works a day job as a staff writer for the Marshfield Mariner; and a visiting priest who recently celebrated a Mass at St. Jerome's Church in North Weymouth.

Which brings up a couple of interesting points if you're one of those who thinks the millennium coincides with the Apocalypse.

The really good news is that if they're right, the world obviously won't end on New Year's Day, because the new era already has begun and the end of all that exists is apparently scheduled for another time!

The bad news is if they're wrong, and God wants the end to coincide with the millennium according to the calendar, then Jan. 1, 2001 is going to be a real bummer.

Oh, well. I guess we can all take comfort in the fact that it's definitely not going to happen on Saturday. The overhyped Y2K situation is probably a bigger concern at this point, and I'm not about to develop ulcers worrying about that.

On behalf of all of us here at The Cohasset Mariner, I sincerely wish you and yours a very happy and healthy New Year.

But not a happy millennium. Because, you see, while 2000 indeed marks a new chapter in all of our lives—I don't know how many pieces of paper I'll waste because I started to write "19.." when noting the year—the millennium is not a part of it.

— Michael Whalen

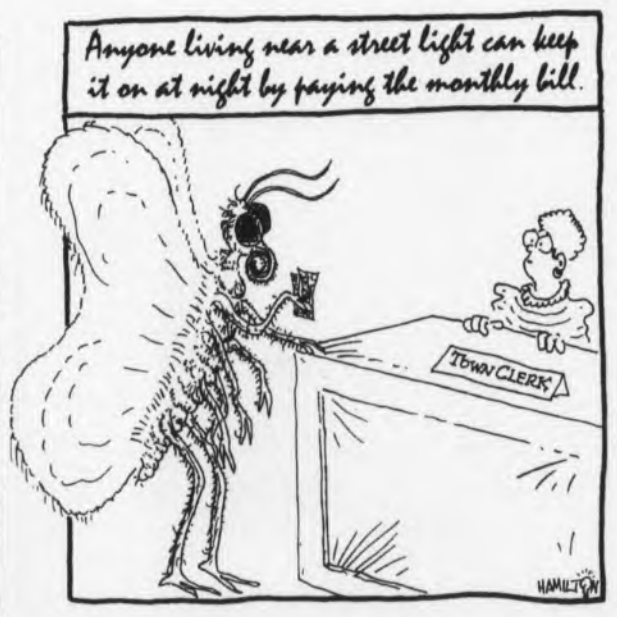
A look back at 1999

Hamilton's cartoons told Cohasset's story



Mariner on the Street

With the 20th century ending on Friday, the Mariner asked some town officials who they most would have liked to sit down and have lunch with from the past 100 years.

"I would love to meet my great-grandmother. It would be wonderful to know what she was like. My grandmother is so nice and I'd like to meet her mother."

-Recreation dept. clerk Jessica Niessink

"I'd love to sit down and talk to Harry Truman. I've always been a fan of his. I think it would be incredible to talk to him about what was going through his mind when he was deciding whether or not to drop the atomic bomb. That decision had such a huge impact on future generations."

-Health agent Joseph Godzik

"I'm a diehard Red Sox fan, so I'd have to say Ted Williams. I think he was the greatest hitter that ever lived and I'd live to sit down and talk baseball with him."

-Town manager Mark Haddad

"Because of my interest in marine biology, I'd have to say Jacques Cousteau. I think he'd be fascinating to talk to."

-Recreation director Jack Worley

"There are so many, it's hard to pick just one. I'd love to talk to Carl Sagan. What an opportunity to speak to someone of such incredible intellect. I'd also love to talk to Eleanor Roosevelt, because she was a woman of such incredible accomplishments."

-Zoning board of appeals member Barbara Power

"I would pick John F. Kennedy. He's always been a hero of mine. I'd talk to him about anything from politics to sailing. When I was a young teenager, I put up his campaign posters when he ran for president in 1960."

-Police chief Brian Noonan

"I'd like to meet my great-grandfather. He's someone I never knew. He was in World War I and I'd live to talk to him about his experiences."

-Town accountant Michael Buckley

"I'd like to have lunch with Danny DeVito. People ask me every day if we're related, so I think it would be fun to sit down and talk to the guy and see what he's like."

-Town treasurer/collector Joe DiVito

Losers of the century

I really wanted to list my dozen or so most important events and persons of the century that will pass away in a few days but so many guys did it before me that there wasn't much left.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I even saw one that called the election of Ronald Reagan the most important event of the past 100 years with World War II and the dropping of the atom bomb a distant second.

Instead, let me choose for you the losers of the century, those persons who came close to winning the White House and a baseball team that finished first or second only three times in 50 years.

My nominee for the biggest loser of the century is a man named Charles Evans Hughes. Hughes, who was chief justice of the United States at the time, opposed Woodrow Wilson for re-election in 1916.

My nominee for the biggest loser of the century is a man named Charles Evans Hughes. Hughes, who was chief justice of the United States at the time, opposed Woodrow Wilson for re-election in 1916.

Hughes was ahead in the polls and some newspapers (there was no radio or television in those days) even projected Hughes as the winner when the real polls closed.

He went to bed thinking he had won. But late returns from California tipped the scales to Wilson, 277-254. A reporter who went to interview him was told, "The president is sleeping."

"Well," said the reporter, "when he wakes up, tell him he ain't president any more."

It happened again in 1948, which some of you will remember. Tom Dewey was challenging the accidental president, Harry Truman, and was a 4-1 favorite to evict the man from Missouri from the White House.

Drew Pearson, the syndicated columnist, sent his Wednesday column to subscribers on Monday, detailing President Dewey's cabinet and the Manchester Guardian published an essay called "Harry S. Truman: A Study in Failure."

Truman went to bed about 9 p.m. election night. He woke up at midnight and turned on the radio in time to hear a commentator named H. V. Kaltenbirn announce that Harry was ahead by 1,200,000 votes but he was "undoubtedly beaten." He went back to sleep.

Around 9 a.m. he went over the top in electoral votes and, about 11:14 a.m., Dewey conceded.

Two days later, a photographer in St. Louis snapped Truman on his campaign train holding up the front page of an early edition of the violently anti-Truman Chicago Tribune with the headline "DEWEY DEFEATS TRUMAN."

"Don't believe everything you read in the papers," Harry advised the crowd.

The baseball team that comes to mind when the subject of failure pops up is, not the Boston Red Sox - even though they haven't won a world series since 1918 - but the St. Louis Browns.

They were in St. Louis for 50 years during which they won one American League pennant and finished second twice. Attendance dropped until the Browns were moved to Baltimore to become the Orioles in 1954.

When the president, Bill Veeck, sold the Browns to Baltimore, John Lardner, the columnist, wrote that "this surprised a lot of people because they didn't know the Browns were owned."

Crowds at Sportsman's Park in the last days of the St. Louis Browns were so small and their finances so bad that Veeck used to answer the phone himself to save the cost of another secretary.

"What time does the game start?" asked one caller.

"What time can you get here?" responded Veeck.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Inundated with cardboard boxes

TO THE EDITOR:

Although the Cohasset Recycling Committee has an ongoing education and information program, the writer couldn't resist the need to comment and thank the many residents who voluntarily "pitched in" and assisted the town employees and volunteers of the recycling committee to prepare an inundation of corrugated boxes for baling into 800-pound bales.

We knew from past years, that cardboard is received in great quantities on the day after Christmas.

One additional town employee was on the job Sunday, but we still couldn't keep up.

Christmas cardboard is piled high by the baling room at the RTF.

I thank the many citizens who realized we were having a hard time keeping up and took the time to further flatten cardboard boxes, placing the smaller boxes into larger ones.

We didn't quite finish the job on Sunday, but it was easier to finish on Monday.

Tunnel vision

TO THE EDITOR:

Recent news that the MBTA would consider building a short tunnel under Hingham Square may be good news for Hingham taxpayers who are weary of prolonging the town's anti-Greenbush fight, but it does nothing to mitigate the harmful effects of diesel emissions for those who live and work along the Greenbush corridor.

Marion Sherman, in a recent letter, was right when she said that the harmful effects of diesel emissions cannot be mitigated. In one respect, a short tunnel makes air quality even worse for those at both ends of the tunnel, where residents and businesses would be exposed to even higher doses of emissions. Imagine the Station Street area, for example, with its many restaurants, and the plume of particulate matter that would result from southbound trains exciting an 800-ft. tunnel. Think about the Fruit Center and the Farmer's Market as a food source for area residents and what they would be exposed to.

The emissions issue has long been one of the touchiest subjects for the MBTA, starting with its admitted failure to factor train emissions data into their early air quality equations. At one point, in its infancy, Greenbush was even touted as a positive response to the Federal Clean Air Act. Since the project began, however, new health data on diesel locomotive emissions has caused the EPA to clamp down on engine manufacturers. Unfortunately, in their standards to regulate the diesel locomotive industry, the EPA gave commuter rail a reprieve because municipalities were less able to afford the expensive process of retrofitting or buying the new, cleaner burning engines. The willingness of the state to underwrite the enormous cost of Greenbush suggests that there is ample money for a major overhaul of the state's diesel powered commuter rail system. What is lacking is the will to make clean air a priority over the expediency of building an ever-larger heavy diesel powered rail network.

Our selectmen would do well to consider the mindset of their adversary and what they can expect down the line, were Greenbush ever built. Consider for example, that the Massachusetts State House was, by far, the last government building of its type in the nation to be declared a non-smoking building. The fact that the MBTA is being sued by the Conservation Law Foundation for failure to convert its diesel bus fleet to alternative fuels is of no comfort to those of us who see Greenbush in the larger and more important context of cleaner air.

What is so unfortunate is that there are important "federal" initiatives concerning diesel rail that we, as U.S. citizens, are seemingly unable to benefit from. In addition to EPA actions to reduce diesel emissions, federal laws to protect historic districts are much tougher than our own state laws, and the federal initiative to eliminate grade crossings nationwide most certainly challenges the wisdom of Greenbush's 43 at-grade crossings in 17 miles.

Like Marion Sherman, I support the contention that some things about Greenbush cannot be mitigated and that a short tunnel is a short-sighted solution. Furthermore, it is a sad day indeed when we are not afforded the protection of the tougher federal laws pertaining to air quality and rail safety. Instead we are subjected to the antiquated mentality of a state government which spends far too much time trying to figure out how to skirt federal environmental laws than to embrace them.

I urge the selectmen from Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate to continue the fight against restoration of heavy diesel rail. In particular, I urge Hingham residents to reject the idea that a short tunnel is an acceptable solution and to aggressively pursue the important and far-reaching goal of cleaner air for our community.

Where did the horse go? That's the quiet mystery of this 100-plus year old photo of Beechwood Street looking north from 423 Beechwood at left. The second building was a general store built and operated by Howard Pratt until his death in 1879 and then moved diagonally across the street as part of the 432 Beechwood property.

This is the way the same block of Beechwood Street looks today on a cold December morning in 1999.

Sophomore Kristin Sheerin, co-captain, broke the school record in the all around 34.50 (broke Michelle Hartley's record of 34.40 in 1989) and tied school record with Hartley on bars 8.60 and floor exercise 9.00. She broke school record on beam last year with 8.70, this year 8.80. Last year Kristin broke Erica Hettstrom's record of 8.60.

Gymnastics squad hands Scituate a loss

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset/Norwell girls gymnastics team performed its version of "It's A Wonderful Life" in pulling out a 119.7 – 118.7 victory over Scituate High in a pre-Christmas meet last Wednesday.

One can only guess what life would have been like for C/N (2-1) that evening if not for the record-setting performances of Cohasset's Kristin Sheerin.

Sheerin erased three school records and tied another, en route to five first-place finishes.

C/N's premier gymnast established new records on the bars (8.6), beam (8.8) and all-around (34.5), and tied Michelle Hartley's 1989 standard of 9.0 with her floor routine. Sheerin's beam routine bettered her own mark of a year ago.

C/N head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni was especially impressed with Sheerin's new all-around mark. "You're in a different league when you get in the 34s," she said. "The team had an outstanding meet."

C/N went into the showdown with the highly-touted Scituate team aiming more for a 118 score than coming away with a win against defending Pilgrim Conference champion Gina Verge and a cast of talented gymnasts.

Verge, though, has been battling a recurring back injury and competed on just two events. The back injury caused her to have less-than-stellar performances on the bars and beam. That opened the doors for a possible C/N upset. And the C/N girls took full advantage.

> "We made our goal and it was much more team-oriented"
> HEAD COACH RUTHANN ARDIZZONI

The Lady Skippers paid little attention to the running score throughout the meet, focusing instead on hitting its 118 goal. They assumed Scituate was leading because, well, that's what was supposed to happen. As a result, the team was surprised it had come away with the one-point win.

"We weren't following scores," Ardizzoni said. "We were concentrating on that 118. For us to score 119.7 with the team we have is really good."

Verge and Sheerin finished in a first-place tie on the bars with C/N taking second and third, thanks to strong performances by Carlie Carter (8.4) and Meredith Bixby (7.3). Sheerin and Carter (7.4) finished 1-3 on the beam, putting C/N just a half-point behind at the halfway mark of the meet.

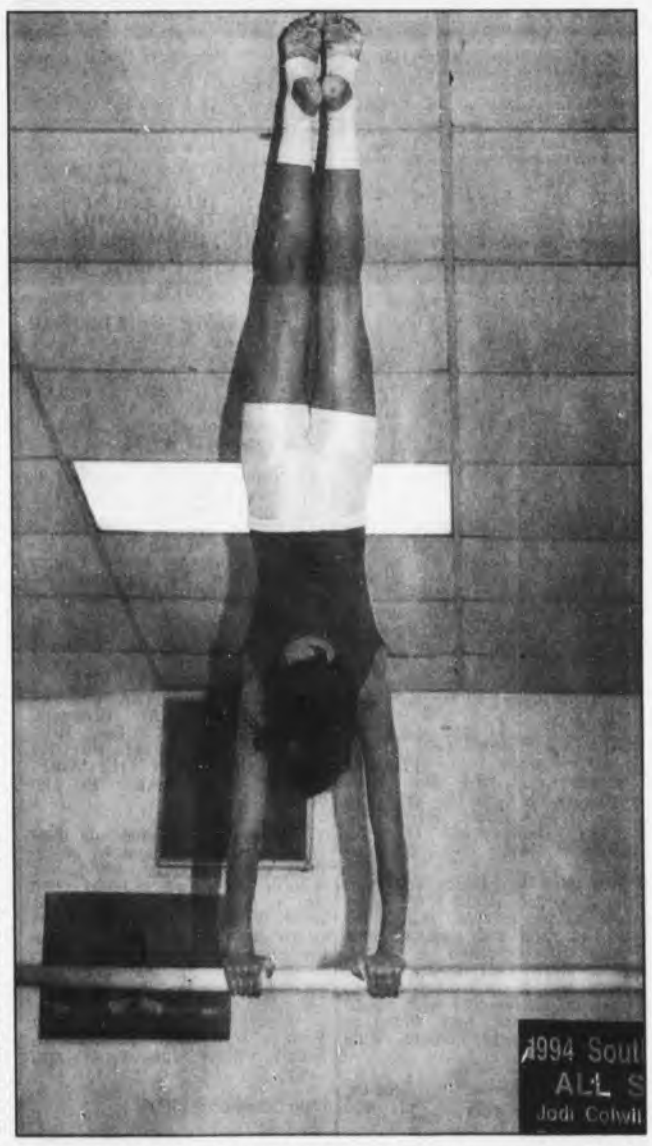
Sheerin led another 1-3 C/N performance on the vault with Carter finishing in a tie for third with her 7.4. C/N, though, wasn't done, saving its best overall performances for the floor routine. Sheerin was followed by Carter in second with a sterling 8.4 and Bixby, who has improve with every meet, nailed down third place with a score of 8.1. Carter then took second in the all-around with an impressive 31.6.

"We made our goal and it was much more team-oriented," Ardizzoni said.

The C/N team has been concentrating on working on routines with a higher degree of difficulty, which figures more into the scoring. Ardizzoni believes it is important to introduce more difficult moves into the girls' routines, but has been careful not to make them overly difficult, depending on the girls' abilities.

The Lady Skippers take on a tough Hanover team at home on Jan. 5. Like Scituate, Hanover's top gymnast has also been hindered by an injury. The Lady Indians' Shannon Gerrish has been less than 100 percent, courtesy of an ankle injury. Ardizzoni, though, expects Gerrish will try to compete and foresees a tough meet for C/N.

"We have to stay focused and hit every routine," Ardizzoni said.



Sophomore Kristin Sheerin executes a giant swing on the uneven bars. Sheerin helped lead the gymnastics squad to a win over Scituate.

Off and running for the New Year

Sending out my New Year's wishes as I realize I forgot to include extra shoelaces in my Y2K survival package.

TRACKSIDE

JOE REARDON

*When is the MIAA going to finally realize the All-State cross-country meet would be more intriguing if the boys and girls races weren't split into Division 1 and 2? Let Massachusetts' best male and female high school harriers hash it out in one race. Splitting the divisions not only weakens the fields of all four races, but it also leaves four state "champions."

*All road and cross-country races will switch over to computerized finishes. Is there anything worse than holding yourself, exhausted, at the end of a finish chute while a race volunteer struggles to peel your name off the bottom of a sweaty number? Computerized timing is faster, more accurate and easier for all involved.

*Cross-country coaches will realize that their harriers shouldn't set foot on a track during the fall. The kids race over grassy hills and winding trails, not smooth all-weather surfaces. They should be doing their interval workouts on the surfaces they'll be racing on.

*Race directors will BAN rollerbladers, dogs and bicycles from road races. Hingham High's Allison Donovan was accidentally upended by a pair of rollerbladers at the start of the first annual Thanksgiving Day race. Fortunately Donovan escaped serious injury, but it was a spill that never should have happened in the first place. And, while it's true runners sign an entry form which releases the race directors and sponsors from responsibility for any injuries sustained during the event, does that mean runners should expect to possibly become tangled in a leash with man's best friend at the end of it?

*Here's hoping the Cohasset Road Race by-the-Sea 10K and Hingham 4th of July race continue to grow in number. Both races are organized and run meticulously. Hingham drew over 1,400 runners and Cohasset had just under 1,000 this year. It's a pretty good bet more runners will be on the starting line when the gun sounds in 2000.

*Good luck to all those runners who are out training for the 2000 Boston Marathon. The Red Sox will already be about 2-1/2 weeks into their season by the time the race rolls around but runners are bundling up now and heading out for 20-mile workouts to prepare for the world-famous Hopkinton-to-Boston event.

*For those novice runners who are new to the sport and are frustrated with their progress, remember to be patient. Very few of us are born distance runners. It takes time, smart training and common sense to run well in road races. Enjoy your runs and be persistent and consistent.

*No offense to the foreign runners, but here's hoping an American marathoner wins Boston this year. Not since Hingham's Greg Meyer ran 2:09 in 1983 has an American captured the laurel wreath. Hopefully the United States' absence in the win column will be shorter than Cal Ripken's consecutive-game streak.

*To all the high school seniors who enjoyed great careers, may you continue improving and running faster times in college.

*Finally, a special "Thank You" to those people who made my job easier through their enthusiasm and dedication to running. May a strong tailwind lead you into the next century.

Register for youth lacrosse on Jan. 29

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse, which this spring will expand to field a team of third- and fourth-graders, will hold its sign-up for the spring season Saturday, Jan. 29, from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

Registrations will be taken for the 14 and Under program (7th- and 8th-graders), the 12 and under program (5th- and 6th-graders) and the new 10 and Under team.

One significant change for the spring of 2000 is that there will be just one Under-12 team. There have been two teams in each of the last two years. As a result, the number of roster spots will be limited; registrations will be taken on a first-come first-served basis, and it is possible that some youngsters will be turned away.

The on-time registration fee is $80, which includes a uniform, practice jersey and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes a subscription to a new magazine especially designed for kids. Late registrations, if roster spots are available, are $100.

The program is limited to Cohasset residents. At the 14 and Under level, a player can sign up for the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program regardless of whether they are active on Cohasset's Middle School team.

Cohasset's junior lacrosse program is a member of the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program. In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. Practices for kids in fifth grade and up are scheduled for Monday and Friday afternoons; the Under-10 team's practice and game schedule is still being finalized. The teams will begin practicing in early March, games start in April and the season concludes with the MBYLL Jamboree in mid-June.

While the schedule should minimize conflicts, problems do sometimes arise. This year, because some interested players could be turned away due to limited roster spots, the lacrosse program is asking parents to sort out potential conflicts before enrolling their children.

"We work hard to avoid and understand conflicts," Chuck Jaffe, head coach, says, "but we need for parents to respect the limits on our roster. The occasional hockey or baseball game is one thing, but if a child wants to participate in a play — and will miss a month of the season to prepare for that play — they have made their choice and should leave the roster spot open for someone else who wants to put lacrosse first and would show up every day."

Bob Inman assists Jaffe on the 12 and Under level; Jaffe expects to run the 14 and Under program this year too, with assistance from Jim Murphy. The coaching situation for the new 10 and Under team is not yet clear.

The program is looking for additional coaches at all levels.

Lacrosse is a contact sport; at the older levels — and on a limited basis with the new team — practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all players must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces. Hockey equipment is allowed, although Jaffe warns that hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick.

Jaffe also notes that the Cohasset program welcomes girls, but that it does not play girls lacrosse. which avoids full contact and is played under different rules and with slightly different equipment.

"Many girls play in the MBYLL," he says, 'but there are adjustments to make when they get older and start playing girls lacrosse."

There will be more information on the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program available at the Jan. 29 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session, call Jaffe at 383-9858.

Volunteer coaches for youth lacrosse

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program is in need of additional coaches at all levels for the spring of 2000.

This year, for the first time, the five-year-old youth program will field an Under-10 team made up of third- and fourth-grade students. This is where there will be the greatest need for new coaches.

Cohasset Youth lacrosse also will field one team in the Under-12 and Under-14 divisions of the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League.

The two older teams are expected to have Chuck Jaffe as head coach, while the new team is still having the coaching situation worked out. But Jaffe's status is uncertain; even if he is available to coach, his travel schedule may force him to miss more games and practices than he has in the past.

"At the very least, we will need more help in running practices and keeping the teams going while I am away," Jaffe said. "There already is one assistant coach at each level, but we need at least one more. We also want as many coaches as possible at the Under-10 level, so that the newest, youngest players get maximum instruction and repetition in practice."

Jaffe said Cohasset Youth Lacrosse has typically preferred to use coaches who did not have children on the teams, but that will change this year — particularly with the Under-10 team — in order to make sure there is sufficient supervision.

The Under-10 team will make its practice schedule based on the availability of coaches and fields; the older boys will practice on Mondays and Fridays, with games on Sundays. Anyone interested in coaching should be available regularly for at least two days per week; the minimum time commitment is roughly four hours a week.

Jaffe said that potential coaches do not need to have a lot of lacrosse experience or the ability to diagram plays and other advanced chores, but they must have the basic rules knowledge and stick proficiency needed to help teach youngsters how to properly play the game.

For more information on coaching in the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program, call Jeffe at 383-9858 or David Buick at 383-2579.

Memories of Cohasset's past

Longtime residents recollect an intimate town

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Though Cohasset is still known as a small town to others on the South Shore, those who have lived in town for decades can remember a time when today's population of 7,800 would have been unfathomable.

"Back when I was a girl, there weren't nearly as many people here," said 88-year old Mary Andracchio, 173A Hull Street, who moved to Cohasset in 1920 at age nine from the town of Calabria in southern Italy. "Jerusalem Road was all private, summer homes. In the winter, Cohasset was a very lonely place."

Andracchio's father was one of many who worked as a caretaker on one of the sprawling Jerusalem Road properties. Her father had come to Cohasset a few years earlier and she was joined by her mother and brother for the voyage to America.

Andracchio didn't speak a word of English when she moved to Cohasset, but entered the old Joseph Osgood school immediately. The Osgood school was then on Elm Street, where the police and fire stations are now located. Built in 1891, the school accommodated grades K-12 in one building.

Though nervous about attending school in America without knowledge of English, she said a fellow classmate eased her transition into the Osgood school.

"There was another Italian family in town, and they had two girls and a boy," she said. "The girl understood Italian and could speak English, so she explained to me what was going on. When we'd go out to the playground for recess, she'd take my hand and I'd just follow her."

She learned the language quickly, however, and has fond memories of childhood mischief during her days at the old Osgood school on Elm street.

"There were very few cars back then," she said. "The first winter that I went to school, I can remember going in a sled. Those of us that walked up the hill to school would get snowballed to death. I always tell that story to kids in town. They can always relate to snowball fights."

With a much smaller population in town than presently exists, the class sizes at the Osgood school were smaller as well. Andracchio, for instance, graduated in 1931 as part of a senior class of 14.

The class size had doubled by 1943, when Betty Brooke, 17 Margin Ct., was one of 28 graduating seniors. She said the influx of new residents is the biggest change she has seen in her years in Cohasset.

"The population just seems to be exploding," she said. "When I was a girl, you knew everybody in town. You could walk around town and know every person that you saw. Now, it seems like I don't know anybody. There are so many new faces."

Nancy Barrett, 60 Elm St., was also a child in Cohasset during the 1940's and remembers a similarly intimate town.

"You could walk around town, from one end to the other, and you knew who lived in each house," she said.

Barrett said the train which used to run through town was an outlet for youngsters looking for places to go.

"We lived our lives by that train," she said. "We used to go to Hingham to see movies at Loring Hall. Until the Southeast Expressway opened, it was used by a lot of the fathers to go to Boston as well."

Brooke's days of riding the train became numbered once one of her teenage friends, who is familiar to most in Cohasset today as its state representative, first got her driver's license.

"When Mary Jeanette [Murray] got her license, then we drove everywhere," she said.

Like Brooke, Eunice Brownell, 164 Beechwood St., is also a graduate of the first Osgood school. The daughter of a blacksmith, Brownell said her father's occupation helped the family escape the ills of the Great Depression during the 1930's.

"He was the only who did that kind of work, and that kept him in business" she said of her father's blacksmith shop, which was located on Beechwood Street, at what is now the corner of Beechwood and 3A. "Most of his work was making horseshoes."

Brooke's father, a boat caretaker, was one of many who was employed on one of the Jerusalem Road estates. She said her family was not wealthy enough to be affected by the Depression.

"We didn't have any money to lose," she said. "We lived week-to-week anyway. But I didn't know we were poor when I was growing up. That's just how life was back then."

Life in Cohasset changed drastically when World War II began and many of Cohasset's men and women joined in the war effort.

"I went to work at the ammunition depot in Hingham," Brooke said. I can remember that no boys were around because they were all in the service. Even in my graduating class in 1943, there were only a couple boys. They were all gone."

Steve Leighton, 309 King St., also worked at the Hingham ammunition depot during World War II. He said most of his friends were off fighting the war.

"I couldn't get into the service, and I sort of felt left out," he said. "A lot of my friends were in the service and were overseas. I worked loading shells with picric acid for the Navy. The acid would make the bombs explode."

Though she was only eight when World War II broke out, Barrett can still recollect both fond and somber images of wartime Cohasset.

"I can remember when the blimps were out doing submarine control," she said. "They would come down so low that the men in the gondolas could hear you. We used to yell up to them, 'Sink a sub, sink a sub,' and they'd wave down to us. I also remember when Robert Jason, the young man who lived next door to us, was killed. I remember how awfully sad that was."

Those men who did return contributed to the postwar baby boom which would forever change life in Cohasset. Not only did the population grow, but so did the need for people to start looking outside the town for employment.

"It wasn't until the war that more people started working outside of town than in town," said Bill O'Connell, 5 Oak St., who worked as a supervisor in the Boston post office. There just weren't enough jobs for everybody in town."

Andracchio's husband worked as a meat-cutter in Boston's North End, while she worked as an assistant bookkeeper for a hotel association in Boston. She said wages were simply better in the city.

"My mother had an acre and a half, all garden, and my father offered me five dollars a week to help her run the garden when I graduated," she said. "I said 'Pa, that won't even pay for my stockings.' The opportunities were much better in Boston."

While much has changed since these senior citizens' first days in Cohasset, some traditions have remained. As she was eating lunch on Tuesday at the community center, Brooke looked out the window at the children skating on the duck pond next to the common and reminisced about her childhood in town.

"I can remember skating on that same pond," she said. "They used to block off streets for us to sled down in the winter. We didn't have the community center then, but there was a movie theater in Town Hall. The kids used to always go the shows there in the afternoons. Cohasset was such a great town to grow up in."

Fifty years from now, the children Brooke saw skating on the pond will likely share a similar feeling.

Osgood students forecast the future

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Osgood's second and third-grade students may be small in stature, but they have big ideas about the future. While the children are far too young to remember man walking on the moon, they nevertheless say space exploration should be one of the world's preeminent goals in the 21st century.

Second-grader Gabrielle Rodman said colonization of other planets could have a positive effect on those facing economics ills on Earth.

"I think people in other countries might be kind of poor," she said. "People from poor countries can go to the moon and they won't have to be poor anymore."

Fellow second-grader Christine Coner said those moving to the moon would not have to be separated from their loved ones entirely.

"People living on the moon could go back to Earth by rocket ship," she said. "That way they could see their mommies and daddies and their brothers and sisters."

Classmate Sophie Bertolami said custom-made spacesuits will have to be built in order for people to live on other planets or on the moon.

"People might be able to breathe in space someday," she said. "But they'll need a tube that would go all the way back to the Earth because the air isn't good in space."

In the future, everything in the solar system will be constructed out of every child's favorite materials, according to second-graders Leigh Collins and Tatiana Nakashima

"Everything will be made out of candy, so they'll need to make a lot more of it," Leigh said. "But it won't be sticky or gross like when you leave candy in the car or anything."

Tatiana expounded on Leigh's theory of a world made entirely of sweets.

"The sun will be made out of a lemon drop," she said. "That way, everything won't melt because it won't get really hot.

Second-grader Kate Durant said only special types of sweets will be used to build 21st-century structures.

"Everything's going to be made out of chocolate and vanilla," she said. "All the buildings will look really good because they'll be black and white. Also, if a kid eats part of a building, there will be plenty of chocolate and vanilla to fix it."

According to second-grader Savannah Norris, traffic will be eased in the next century with the advent of a new mode of transportation.

"Cars are going to fly," Savannah said. "Some cars will still drive on the ground, but the rest will be in the air. There won't be a lot of crashes, because there will be floating stoplights."

Because of the danger presented by flying automobiles, second-grader Mike Filbey said it will take a unique talent to be able to operate one.

"You'll need to get a special pilot's license, which is way different than a driver's license," Mike said. "The spaceships will also have license plates and you'll have to get another license to drive them."

Third-grader Conor Murphy said flying cars will be able to go a bit faster than their counterparts on the ground.

"I think that flying cars may be able to go a million miles an hour someday," he said. "You could get to school in five seconds."

Not all changes will be technological in nature, however. Third-grader Katie Gaumer said the 21st century will be a peaceful one because of an important social change.

"There are not going to be as many wars in different countries," she said. "People will be smarter and they'll think wars are bad."

Fellow third-grader Jack Emanuello agreed with Katie's positive assessment of life in the future.

"People will be really happy," Jack said. "It will be the happy millennium."

Tracy Spadafora will offer a new class this winter at the South Shore Art Center. Observational skills will be strengthened while students work in oil or acrylic from still life and photographs. This course will be offered to beginning and intermediate level students.

Spadafora brings to her classes an extensive background in teaching and painting. She has taught at a number of art schools including the School of the Worcester Art Museum, the Arlington Center for the Arts, the DeCordova Museum School, the New Art Center in Newton and the Munroe Center for the Arts in Lexington. The class, "Beginning Painting," runs from Jan. 9 to March 29 and meets Wednesdays from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. For more information or to register, call 383-ARTS.

Video presentation on world yacht race

The Cohasset Yacht Club presents "Around Alone 1998-1999, Singlehanded Around the World Yacht Race," a slide and video presentation by Robin Davie of South Carolina.

This is an evening of high adventure, thrills, and spills from Mr. Davie's three circumnavigations in the "Around Alone-Single-handed World Yacht Race," (formerly the BOC challenge). From the freezing wastes of the southern ocean, to the equatorial doldrums, to rounding Cape Horn under jury rig in the 1994 BOC Challenge and surfing more than 2,000 miles on a rudderless 50 footer in the 1998-1999 race, the presentation will be an exciting one.

The event is Saturday, Jan. 8, at 8 p.m. at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

Proceeds will benefit the Cohasset High School Marine Studies Program which has received annual support from the Cohasset Yacht Club for the past four years. This marine lecture series is open to the public and is free for students.

RSVP to Dave Crocker at 781-749-7580. The cost is $10 per person (students free) to be paid the night of the lecture.

John McNabb (Clean Water Action) of Cohasset hands a used computer monitor to Santa Claus, along with Paul Burns (MassPIRG), John Loretz (Sommerville Environmental & Recycling Volunteers), and Vithal Deshpande, environmental coordinator for the City of Sommerville. Santa came back to Sommerville last week to help the Mass. Coalition to Reduce Waste and Clean Water Action release their report on Extended Producer Responsibility, which recommends the state require manufacturers, particularly computer manufacturers, to take back used products to save municipalities the cost of solid waste disposal.

Santa helps coalition promote recycling

Santa Claus came back two days after Christmas, to help the Massachusetts Coalition to Reduce Waste to release its report on Extended Producer Responsibility (EPR), which recommends that the Cellucci Administration include EPR in their new Solid Waste Master Plan for the next decade.

"Santa Claus, as one of the most prolific producers in the world, could do much to reduce the costs and pollution from solid waste by taking back our old toys, such as computers and other electronic equipment, for reuse and recycling after delivering toys on Christmas," said John McNabb, spokesman for the Coalition, which today released its report, "Extended Producer Responsibility: Putting Responsibility Where It Belongs — Recommendations for the Massachusetts Beyond 2000 Solid Waste Master Plan."

"Until there is in fact a Santa Claus to take products back, we should deal with the solid waste problem by requiring manufacturers to take responsibility for the collection of their products after the end of their useful life," McNabb said. "The Cellucci Administration, which is now working on a new Solid Waste Master Plan, should include EPR as an integral part of that plan."

EPR is particularly appropriate for computers and electronic equipment, said McNabb, since computers are obsolescing so fast that tremendous amounts of waste which contains toxics, are being accumulated every year. A pilot collection study conducted by the EPA in Somerville found that the cost for collecting and demanufacturing old computers (for reuse and recycling) is much higher than the costs of disposal, making such collection uneconomical for cities and towns.

The Massachusetts Coalition to Reduce Waste is a coalition of more than 40 citizens groups throughout the state, including Clean Water Action, MassPIRG, and Somerville Environmental and Recycling Volunteers (SERV).
